Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "one $1,500" and to insert "two at $1,500 each"; in lines 10 and 11 to strike out "one (who shall be a stenographer and typewriter) $1,200"; and in line 17, after the word "all," to strike out "$33,180" and insert "$33,480," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 59, under the head of "Metropolitan police."

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the first amendment under that head.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over was, under the head of "Metropolitan police," in line 11, before the word "captains," to strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve"; in line 12, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,250"; in line 25, before the word "lieutenants," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "nineteen"; on page 60, line 2, before the word "sergeants," to strike out "fifty-four" and insert "fifty-seven," so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was, in the same clause on page 60, line 3, after the word "each," to strike out "492 privates of class 3, at $1,200 each," and to insert "513 privates of class 3 (including crossing policemen), at $1,320 each."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Maryland that I desire to have a vote upon that and the next two amendments. I do not really know that we could get a quorum here to-night. Would the Senator like to have the bill go over until to-morrow morning and take it up the first thing in the morning?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. To what item does the Senator from Utah refer?

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator that in the past there have been 56 men employed by the street railroads to watch the railroad crossings, and under the amendment which has just been reported and the following two amendments the effect would be this: It takes these 56 men who are watching railroad crossings in the District, who have in the past been paid by the railroads, and transfers them to the police force of the District of Columbia to be paid by the Government of the United States and the District.

On behalf of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and in my own right, I desire a vote in the Senate upon these amendments after a full explanation of them has been given. I dislike to delay the bill, but I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I promised the Senator from Colorado that I would call attention to the matter in his absence. He was called to New York to-day. I do not think it will take very long to explain the amendments, but I think it is absolutely necessary that we have a vote in the Senate upon them. I am afraid, however, to suggest the absence of a quorum at this time, because I do not believe we could now obtain a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in regard to the amendments, I will say that this matter in reference to these policemen being paid by the railroad companies has frequently been brought before the subcommittee. It has been again brought up at this time. I desire to say, in the first place, that the railroad companies had nothing whatever to do with this action on our part.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not intimated that they have had.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We have in no way been solicited or approached by any railroad interests whatever, but the subcommittee and also the full committee agreed that the police of the District of Columbia should be governed entirely by the District, and that they should not in any way feel that they were under any obligation to any corporation. So far as my knowledge goes, this is the only city where a part of the police force is paid by a corporation. These policemen render service just as much in the interest of the public as of the railroad companies, and should be subject, as they are, to the control of the District Commissioners, as are other policemen. We felt that they ought to be so controlled, and they should be removed in every way from any connection with a corporation. For that reason we inserted the amendment. Of course, if the Senate feel that it is not the right thing to do, it is a matter for them to determine. Our judgment, however, was that it was not proper that the police of the District of Columbia should receive their pay from a corporation. I do not mean to say there would be any undue effort made to control them or to manage them in any way, but there is to a certain extent an obligation possibly that may be felt on the part of the policemen to the corporations. We felt that that ought to be entirely abolished. For that reason, as I have stated, we inserted the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland that I think his statement is too broad, when he says that the watchmen at the crossings of the railroads throughout the country are members of the police force of the cities at which those crossings are found. I know that the railroads in my State pay every watchman who stands at a railway crossing.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. At street railway crossings?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. This refers to street railway crossings.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it refers to street railway crossings.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In our State the cities pay the street railway policemen.

Mr. SMOOT. I should have said "street railroads," because this applies to street railroads. If the Senator from Maryland does not object, I should like very much to have the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the bill goes over I should like to be indulged for about three minutes of time to speak on another matter.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to discuss the amendment which is now before the Senate, but I do desire to discuss for a moment a resolution which was passed at the meeting which was held at Bristol, in my State, on June 7, last. There were three meetings held and three short resolutions were passed in favor of the equal-suffrage amendment which is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, under the first amendment to the Constitution the right of the people to assemble and to petition for a redress of grievances was guaranteed; and while there was no attempt to interfere with that, these good people down there on June 7 undertook not only to pass resolutions, but they have specifically asked that those resolutions may be published in the RECORD. I hope I am not intruding upon the time or the patience of the Senate when I read those resolutions, which are as follows:

Resolution adopted at a meeting held in the Virginia Court House, in the city of Bristol, Va. and Tenn., under the auspices of the National Woman's Party on June 7, 1918:

Whereas the women of this Nation are making every sacrifice to further the prosecution of the war and are doing service in every kind of work that this country calls upon them to do; and

Whereas each day of war makes this Nation and this Nation's future more dependent upon its women, the majority of whom have no voice in the laws of this Government under which they work: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this meeting call upon President Wilson to further press for the passage of the national suffrage amendment, to the end that it may be passed by the Senate without longer delay; be it also

Resolved, That this resolution be sent to the President; Senator THOMAS MARTIN, Democratic leader in the Senate; Senator JACOB GALLINGER, Republican leader; Senator A. A. JONES, chairman of the Senate Woman Suffrage Committee; Senator SWANSON; Senator SHIELDS; and Senator MCKELLAR, with the request that this resolution be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The other two resolutions I shall not read, but they are of the exact tenor and effect. They were adopted by two other meetings, one held in the city of Bristol, Va., and the other held in the city of Bristol, Tenn.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the bill is now open to general amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to have been reached no conclusion with regard to the pending amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment go over.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I shall make no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the amendment will go over. That completes the committee amendments, and the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The committee has no further amendments to offer.

Mr. KENYON. Then I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, proposing to incorporate a new section at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That a joint commission to report a plan for adoption of a national budget system is hereby established. Its membership shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury and two other officials of the executive department of the Government, to be appointed by the President; three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House and Senate, respectively.

That no compensation shall be paid to any member of said commission.

That said commission is hereby empowered and directed to report by the first day of the next session of Congress a plan for the adoption of a national budget system for the Government of the United States, and showing therein what changes, amendments, or adjustments the adoption of said budget system would cause in the rules of the Senate and the House in the laws now in operation relative to revenues and expenditures, in the organization of the Treasury Department, in the forms and method of preparation of the departmental estimates, in the method of presenting said estimates to the Congress, in the methods of accounting and audit, and such other and further information as said commission may see fit to lay before the Congress.

That said commission is authorized to employ such experts and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

That said commission shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1919.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order, and the chairman of the committee informs me that he will make the point of order, but I wish to take just a moment in regard to the subject matter of the amendment I have offered.

I am going to keep on offering amendments or resolutions of this character, providing for some kind of a budget system, until the time shall come when the Congress will have received sufficient light from some source to adopt such a system for this Government.

In years gone by there have been commissions appointed by the House to investigate this matter, but I think never by the Senate, and Congress on this subject seems to be suffering from legislative inertia. I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate—at least those with whom I have talked so express themselves—who is not willing to concede that there must be some change in our methods of appropriation and some kind of a budget plan for this Government. I propose to keep pounding away at it; and I believe the day will come when the President of the United States will request Congress to adopt a budget system. It will be in line with his writings and in accordance with his teachings and his lectures in the past; and I think the change will never be brought about until the President, with his wonderful power of visioning things, shall vision this to Congress.

Although we are spending I do not know how many billions of dollars this year, there is no coordination between committees, and no committee knows what other committees are doing in recommending appropriations. There ought to be one great committee to handle all appropriations. There ought to be some itemized business program for the fiscal year; there ought to be same ratification by Congress of that kind of a program, the cardinal points of which would be executive responsibility, then the spending of the money by the executive departments of the Government, and then some system of accounting entirely disconnected from the executive departments.

President Taft recommended to Congress on January 17, 1912, not, perhaps, the particular objects I have suggested, but a general budget system. In that message he said:

The United States is the only great Nation whose Government is operated without a budget. This fact seems to be more striking when it is considered that budgets and budget procedures are the outgrowth of democratic doctrines and have had an important part in the development of modern constitutional rights. The American Commonwealth has suffered much from irresponsibility on the part of its governing agencies. The constitutional purpose of a budget is to make government responsive to public opinion and responsible for its acts. A budget should be the means of getting before the legislative branch, before the press, and before the people a definite annual program of business to be financed; it should be in the nature of a prospectus, both of revenues and expenditures; it should comprehend every relation of the Government to the people, whether with reference to the raising of revenues or the rendering of service.

There is not a business on the face of this earth that could exist for 60 days if it carried on its affairs as our Government carries on its affairs and allowed to go unquestioned indefensible items such as sometimes go into appropriation bills.

President Wilson in his work on "Congressional Government," being his lectures delivered at Columbia University, I think, can fairly be said to take a position in favor of a budget system. He describes the logrolling methods of Congress. I will not say that the criticism is as true now as it was then, but there is a great deal of legislation because of congressional favoritism and congressional friendship. After the President's election, on January 30, 1913, he wrote a letter to Senator TILLMAN on the subject, which was made public, in which he said:

Ever since I was a youngster I have been deeply interested in our methods of financial legislation. Ever since then I have insisted upon the absolute necessity of a carefully considered and wisely planned budget, and one of the objects I shall have most in mind when I get to Washington will be conferences with my legislative colleagues there, with a view to bringing some budget system into existence. This business of building up the expense of the Nation piece by piece will certainly lead us to error and perhaps embarrassment.

Mr. President, in 1916 every one of the three political parties advocated a budget system, and Mr. Hughes in his speech accepting the Republican nomination declared in favor of it. The Democratic platform was especially strong in its indorsement of the system.

I wish that we could have such a commission, that could summon to its help economists who have studied the subject, and who, I know, would be glad to devote their time to the Government free of any expense. I only make this prophecy that in the expenditure of billions upon billions of dollars, about which the American people know very little and in regard to which they have a right to insist that every care shall be exercised, the time is coming before we get through with this war when Congress will be compelled by the force of public opinion to adopt some budget system of finance.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, this amendment is general legislation and has no place on this bill. Therefore I must raise the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator offering the amendment and the chairman of the committee both agreeing that it is general legislation, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KENYON. If the Chair entertains a different view of the subject, I would not desire him to stand firmly by my opinion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to agree with the Senator from Iowa.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR M'KELLAR.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on May 28 the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] delivered the alumni address at the commencement exercises of the University of Alabama, of which institution he is an alumnus. His subject was "The Winning of the War." It is an intensely patriotic address, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD. It is short.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator wish to have it printed in the RECORD or as a public document?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

WINNING OF THE WAR.

The great public mind of America is now engrossed with but one tense thought, and that is the winning of this war. My friends, America must win this war. The events in Europe of the past year have shown conclusively that only America can win the war. In saying this, I do not mean to minimize in the slightest degree the splendid and heroic defense that our European allies have been and are making. No nations and no peoples could have done better. But with all their efforts, with all their courage, with all their resources, it has been demonstrated that they can not overcome the tremendous forces that Germany has mustered against them.

According to our best information, Germany now has about 5,300,000 soldiers on the western front. The allies have about 5,500,000. For nearly four years the battle along this front has been substantially a draw. We have already sent 700,000 men to France. We have more than 1,000,000 more men training over here that we can send and are sending at the rate of 100,000 to 200,000 or more a month. We are training men at the rate of more than 1,500,000 a year. If it takes a million to turn the tide of battle against Germany on that front, we are going to send them. If it takes two million or five million or ten million, we are going to send them, because this Nation is determined to win this fight.

CAUSES OF THE WAR.

With the causes of the war we are not now much concerned, but lest some of us should forget, it must not be overlooked at all times that our cause is just. If there had been nothing else but the sinking of the Lusitania and the consequent loss of lives of men, women, and children on that ill-fated vessel, it would have been enough. Indeed, we ought to have declared war then, but this Government stood this infamous action upon the part of Germany, accepted her promise of what reparation could be made and apologies, and what was the result? Instead of keeping these promises, she basely disregarded them and continued the sinking of our ships, the murdering of our citizens, the destruction of our property upon the high seas.

My friends, since the days of the early Phoenicians the right of all peoples to ply the seas has been an established one. No principle of international law is better settled than that of the right of all nations to ply the seas at will unmolested, except within the 3 miles from the coast zone. But Germany disregarded this principle of international law and marked off thousands of miles of the ocean and said to the American people, "You can not send your ships on this part of the seas. If you do, we will send your ships to the bottom." Now, America had and has an unquestioned right to all parts of those seas. That right is just as much a property right as her right to the soil of Massachusetts or Alabama, and, indeed, that zone being around Europe, it was the most profitable property that this Government had. Germany undertook to deprive America of that property right, and in the light of this ultimatum can any red-blooded American citizen say that we ought not to have gone to war for this invasion of American rights?

But this was not all. Germany then began negotiations with Mexico and Japan, and, according to the undisputed proof, offered to make an agreement with these two nations to join with them in a war upon America, agreeing to subjugate it and divide it up. Germany was to take that part east of the Mississippi River, Mexico was to be given Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, and Japan, according to Germany's offer, was to take the great West. Can any man doubt that we ought to have gone to war for this reason alone?

GERMANY'S AIMS.

But over and above all these reasons is the right of every nation to live in peace and work out its own destiny in its own way and under its own institutions. Germany was not only a menace to this right of other nations but was a menace to the right of this Nation to live in peace. She was a menace to the free institutions of America, and the war had to come and it was just a question of whether we would wait until she had conquered Europe and then have to fight on our own shores or whether we would join the allies and have the fight on European shores.

For more than 40 years Germany has been preparing for world conquest under the infamous and inhuman monster that is now at the head of her Government. She had been prepared by building up her Navy and by training and enlarging her armies so that she might capture the world, and undoubtedly she would have done it but for the interference of America. It must also be remembered that our great Nation interfered not for conquest, not for commercial reasons, not to increase her power, but we interfered for reasons of self-defense, of self-preservation, and the preservation of humanity. We interfered in behalf of democratic institutions, in behalf of Christian institutions, in behalf of the weak as against the strong, in behalf of the downtrodden as against the mighty, in behalf of the right of peoples to rule themselves as against the rule of the Kaiser—not in partnership with God, as he blasphemously claims, but the Kaiser in partnership with hell and the devil. It is a fight between democracy and autocracy, and it is a fight to the finish.

THE BARBARITIES OF GERMANY.

The barbarities of the German Army and the German nation in this war beggar description. They have violated treaties and called them but scraps of paper. They have robbed friends and enemies. They have sold their own honor and have trafficked in the dishonor of others whom they could influence or purchase. They have put spies and plotters in every city in the world. Their armies have destroyed churches, hospitals, homes for the aged, orphanages, asylums for the insane, libraries, schools of learning, and every other humanitarian institution that they could lay their hands on. They have massacred prisoners, cut off the hands of children and babies, and violated the person of every woman that they could lay their hands on.

The truth is that the German nation, under the leadership of the Kaiser, is simply a criminal at large, defying the world, and it must be arrested and confined or destroyed. As long as it exists in its present form it is a menace to Christianity; it is a menace to humanity; it is a menace to civilization; it is a menace to morality, to liberty, to democracy, and to everything that the human heart holds dear.

WHAT CONGRESS HAS DONE IN FURTHERANCE OF THE WAR.

Occasionally we hear critics of the Congress say that it has not done all that it should in this war. Accordingly I am going to call your attention to some of the larger things that have been accomplished by this Congress since the declaration of war.

It declared war on Germany on April 6, 1917.

It appropriated $21,000,000,000 last year to the expense of the war, and by the close of this session of Congress it is estimated that we will appropriate between twenty-five and thirty billions of dollars for the ensuing year.

It passed an Army reorganization bill, providing both for volunteers and drafted men and tremendously increasing our Army. It raised the Army from about 250,000 men to nearly 2,000,000 men last year, and this Congress will raise the limit to not less than 5,000,000 of men, and we will enlist and train all the men necessary to win this war.

It passed a law adding to our Navy as fast as our naval plants could build war vessels, and it increased our naval personnel from about 61,000 to 300,000.

It appropriated last year between one and two billions of dollars for our Navy and will appropriate an even larger sum this year.

It appropriated five and one-half billions for our Army last year and will probably appropriate $12,000,000,000 for the Army the ensuing year.

It authorized the loan of $7,000,000,000 to our allies, and we have already lent more than $5,000,000,000 to them and will continue to lend them during the war. I am glad to say that more than 75 per cent of all these loans have been spent in this country, so in reality we are lending them goods and supplies rather than money, and our citizens are making the profits thereon.

It passed all proper alien and sedition acts.

It passed an act directing the President to take over all alien property, and Mr. Mitchell Palmer, his representative in this service, has taken over between four hundred and five hundred millions of dollars worth of alien property, and he is the head of perhaps the largest trust company in America.

It passed an act taking over more than 100 German merchant ships, and they are all now not only flying the American flag but carrying American soldiers to Europe. I need not add that this splendid fleet of vessels will never be returned to Germany.

It has passed a law creating the largest merchant marine of any nation on earth. There have been many backsets in our shipbuilding programs, many errors, and many difficulties, but we are now turning out a ship every day and the average output of more than 20,000 tons of shipping per day, or nearly 4,000,000,000 tons per year. Of course, it will not take long to put an end to shipping difficulties if we continue and improve this record as we will do. The appointment of Mr. Charles M. Schwab as the head of the shipbuilding program was one of the most important and efficient steps that has been taken by our administration in the conduct of this phase of the war.

It has passed a law known as the Overman bill, centralizing all the executive power in the President and giving him the power to consolidate and coordinate all the executive branches of the Government in order that the greatest efficiency can be had in the execution of our war plans.

It has passed a war insurance bill, insuring the lives of our soldiers for the benefit of their families.

It has passed a moratorium bill, saving to the soldier in the Army his property while he is there.

It passed a law more than doubling the pay of the soldier and in addition providing a liberal allowance for his dependent wife and children while he is away. I think it is safe to say that soldiers of no war have ever been better treated than this Congress has treated the soldiers of America.

We have just reported out of the Senate committee a bill, which will shortly become a law, providing for vocational training schools, in which to train the maimed and wounded soldiers when they come back. We are going to prepare them so that each one will have some trade or profession by which he can earn his own way.

All these things are but simple justice to the soldier. After all, they are making the supreme sacrifice of the war. There is nothing too good for them. I believe that they constitute the best-fed Army in the world. Shortly we will have them the best-clothed Army in the world. They have the best medical skill and attention of any army in the world. They are the most sober Army in the world, and every moral and uplifting force that can be devised by reasonable men has been placed about them. I want to assure the mothers and fathers of these boys that the Congress will leave no stone unturned to stand by, to uphold and protect them, to provide for their physical and moral welfare, and to furnish them with every necessary and, as far as possible, every comfort.

The Congress has voted in behalf of this fight every dollar that has been asked for, every man that has been asked for, every resource that has been asked for, and every power that has been asked for, and we shall continue that policy until we have won this fight.

THE ARMY.

Our Army is in excellent condition. As I have stated before, we have over 700,000 men in Europe, and our understanding is that they are acquitting themselves with the greatest courage and devotion to duty. We have never had a complaint about their progress over there. Here in the United States we have had many difficulties to contend with. When the war broke out we were unprepared. We lacked everything. In addition, many mistakes have been made in our preparations since the war began. We do not attempt to minimize or defend them. We can only say that we have promptly found them out and vigorously undertaken to correct them, and I am glad to say that they have, for the most part, been corrected. There has never been any trouble about feeding the Army. There was trouble last winter about clothing the Army, but after the experience those in charge of clothing the Army had last winter there is no likelihood that it will ever occur again. Indeed, such vigorous steps have been taken already, we can safely say, that the Army will be properly clothed from now on, winter or summer. At first there was considerable sickness in the camps, due to lack of clothing and improper housing and tentage, but Gen. Gorgas personally visited all the camps last November, and immediately instituted changes that have worked wonders, and now the death rate and the sick rate in our Army is phenomenally low—lower now than that of any other army. Tuscaloosa and all Alabama, and indeed our entire country, should feel very proud of Gen. Gorgas. He has done perhaps more for the comfort, health, and welfare of the American soldier than any other man. We had many troubles about rifles and machine guns and artillery. The rifle trouble has been eradicated entirely, and we have now all the rifles and more than are necessary and are manufacturing them faster than we are calling men to the colors. We were exceedingly behind on machine guns, but the manufacture of those guns has been accelerated in a remarkable degree, and we are now getting all the machine guns necessary. In artillery we are still behind, but rapidly catching up, and it will not be long before we are manufacturing all the artillery that will be needed. Our aircraft manufacture has been a great disappointment. It is true that we are now manufacturing all the primary training and advanced training planes that are necessary, and we are also manufacturing a considerable number of bombing planes, but our battle-plane program has been a great disappointment. I need not discuss this, as it is being daily discussed in the papers, further than to say that if there is anything wrong in it we are going to clear it up and are going to manufacture battle planes in this country which are as good as any of those of any other country, and that when our Army advances to Berlin it will be following battle planes made in America. We have set our hands to the plow, and even though disappointment has come in this particular branch of the service we are going to succeed in it also.

Taken all in all, and remembering that we were wholly unprepared to begin with, we have made remarkable progress. I do not for a moment excuse the mistakes or worse that have been made, but all I can say is that we are going to correct these mistakes, correct any abuses that may have occurred, and make good.

Our man power is superb. We have not the slightest lack of it, and probably never will. Our officers' training camps have been great successes, and, in my humble judgment, there is no better soldier on earth to-day than the American soldier, and I am confident he will prove it in the near future.

SECRETARY BAKER.

Of course, the greatest burden in this war, next to that laid on the President himself, has fallen upon Secretary of War Baker. His department has been, from time to time, criticized, and it is only fair to say in many respects justly criticized. I frankly admit that many mistakes have occurred in that department. At the same time I want to say that Mr. Baker and his department have profited by these mistakes, have profited by these criticisms, have profited by the necessary experience they have had, with the result, with the exception of aircraft, and we are rapidly going forward with that, the department is doing splendidly, and if Secretary Baker keeps up his present stride in war activities he will earn the grateful appreciation of the American people.

He is one of the most active and industrious men I know. He is honest, able, straightforward, and patriotic, and has but one single purpose, and that is to win this war. Owing to our absolute unpreparedness for such a war and the magnitude of our war preparations, it has been a most difficult and trying position, but Secretary Baker is getting the machine in fine working order, and I believe the entire Nation will soon have cause to rejoice over the greatest Army in the world.

OUR NAVY.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the most perfect naval organization in the world to-day is the American Navy. Some years ago it was popular among newspapers and magazines to criticize the Secretary of the Navy. They spoke of him derisively as a man of archaic ideas and foolish notions, but from the moment he took hold of the Navy he took a real hold and become its real head. He thought that the American Navy should be a sober Navy, and he enforced his views. He thought that there was too much red tape in the Navy and he cut it out. He found that there were cliques and rings in the Navy, and he used the big stick on them and broke them up. He has instituted many reforms, and he has built up probably the strongest and best naval organization that was ever known in any country, and I say, all honor to Josephus Daniels, who will go down in history as the greatest Secretary of the Navy that this country has ever had. Our Navy is in the pink of condition. It is true that we have had no spectacular naval fights up to date, but that is because the German Navy is bottled up in the Baltic Sea, and Germany has the channels entering thereto so mined and defended by land batteries that our Navy can't get at them, but if ever they risk a battle I, for one, feel perfectly sure that the American Navy will do what it has done in every war that we have ever had—acquit itself with the greatest honor and distinction.

But while our Navy has done no spectacular work, yet it has done a service without which this war could not be carried on. It has convoyed already 700,000 American soldiers to France, and it has convoyed the ships that are required to carry them, and without the loss up to date of a single vessel or a single soldier. It is true that we lost a few soldiers on an American vessel, but that vessel was being convoyed by a British convoy and not by the American Navy.

THE PEOPLE'S PART IN THE WAR.

As I have said before, our boys at the front are required to make the supreme sacrifice; but that does not mean that the people back home are not doing their part. They are doing it and they are doing that part splendidly. I doubt if any nation at war in the history of the world ever had the more cordial and enthusiastic backing of its people than America has in this war. I believe that more than 95 per cent of the people are thoroughly patriotic and thoroughly determined to win this war. They have shown this in every conceivable way. They have shown this in giving up their sons. They have shown this in buying liberty bonds. They have shown this in making Red Cross subscriptions. They have shown this in making Y. M. C. A. contributions. They have shown this in hundreds of different ways. No people was ever more loyal or more patriotic, and what gives me the greatest pleasure of all is that no part of our country has shown such splendid loyalty as that section of our country commonly known as the South. Here we have no Bolsheviki; here we have no I. W. W.; here we have no men who are fighting their Government openly or secretly; here we have no hyphenated citizens; here even the black man, as well as the white man, is doing his part. In no part of our common country is there less complaint, less dissatisfaction or more patriotism or a greater desire to win this war.

WILLIAM G. M'ADOO.

Mr. President, while mentioning liberty bonds and while talking about the part that the South is playing in this war, I must call the attention of this audience to the present financial policy of the Government under a distinguished southerner. Heretofore when a Secretary of the Treasury needed money with which to defray the extraordinary expenses of a war and had to borrow it he took his hat in his hand and went over to see the financiers of New York and begged them for the money. That day has passed. This Secretary of the Treasury did not do that. On the contrary, he got on the train, put on his smile, prepared his speech, and went to every State in the Union, asking the people to lend him the money. He called on the people of New York just like he called on the people of Alabama, and the people are behind him to the man, and every loan that he asked for has been largely oversubscribed, and I want here and now to pay this tribute of just praise to the greatest Secretary of the Treasury that America has ever had—the Hon. William G. McAdoo.

THE WOMEN.

The part the women have played in this war has been magnificent. They are not citizens. They do not even have the privileges of the negroes down South. Yet they have been as loyal as the best of citizens. They have taken an active part in liberty loans. They have taken an active part in Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. work. They have done everything possible for the comfort and protection of the soldiers. Many of them are taking the places of the men who have gone to the front. They are engaged in war work everywhere, and when the final account is taken it will be found that the women of America have done as much for a successful conclusion of the war as any class of citizens that we have. If they have not been entitled to suffrage before, their conduct during this war has given them that right. They have justly won it. They are always right, and I trust them just as fully as I do the men.

NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. President, no greater service has been done the country during this war than has been done by the newspapers of the land. They have made a fight from the beginning, not only for the war but for everything that pertained to the war. They have submitted to every restriction that has been made for the purpose of furthering the war. In every State in the Union they have done their part and done it well, and they are entitled to every credit for it. The advertising that they have given voluntarily, if it had to be paid for in dollars and cents, would reach an enormous sum. All honor and praise to the patriotic newspapers of our land.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. President, I have told you of the part that our Army and Navy are playing in this war. I have told you of the part that the people are playing in this war. I have told you of the part that the departments are playing in this war. I have told you of the part that the people are playing in this war, and I now want to say a word on behalf of our great leader in this war. In the beginning he did not want this war. He only went into it because he was forced to go into it, but since he has got into it he has shown himself every inch a leader. No man on earth could have managed the matter more admirably. Of all the great leaders that have been produced by this war, the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, stands out as the very first of them, and it is safe to say that when the readjustment comes he will sit at the head of the world table. You may talk about Joffre, or Clemenceau, or Lloyd-George, or about whomsoever you will in the wide, wide world to-day, but Woodrow Wilson overtops them all. His is the one real world figure developed by this war.

NO PEACE.

Mr. President, many misguided people in America ask the question: "What about peace?" I want to say that that is a word which no American should use at this time—we should cut it out of our vocabulary. What would peace with Germany mean at this time? If a thief and a murderer entered your house and killed your wife and child, then robbed you of your possessions, and was getting away with it, would you approach him to make peace with him? And yet anyone who talks about peace with Germany would have this country do that very thing. The Bolsheviki of Russia made peace with Germany, and what did it mean? Germany simply took over the Bolsheviki, Russia, and all. Roumania made peace with Germany, and Roumania was promptly annexed. If France were to undertake to make peace with Germany now, it would only result in France being annexed. There is but one kind of peace that can ever be had with Germany, and that is a peace by the sword; a peace with victory on the part of the allies, a peace with Germany under terror. Any other kind of peace would mean no peace at all, but simply a prolongation of the war. With Germany actually controlling Austria-Hungary, Turkey, all the Balkan States and Russia, practically all of Belgium, and a large part of France, there is no way to negotiate a peace that would be of any value, and I for one would never be willing to agree to a peace until we have broken the German line on the western front and driven Germany's armies out of Belgium and out of France and back into Germany. I do not know how others may feel about it, but as for me I would never agree to peace until there is no German soldier on French soil, until Belgium has been evacuated, with the agreement that she shall be rehabilitated by Germany, until Russia has been restored to its people, and until the German Navy has either been sunk, dismantled, or divided up, and until this infamous Kaiser has been sent to St. Helena or to some other place having a similar sounding name. The time to talk about peace is after the American Army shall have planted the Stars and Stripes over the Brandenburg gates and the place at which we should discuss that peace is at Potsdam, after we have captured Berlin.

RECESS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, June 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 14, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of Hosts, whose tender mercies and loving-kindness have been the inspiration of our people to deeds of heroism and glory in all the past, continue, we beseech Thee, Thy blessings unto us that we may live and grow.

We thank Thee that this day has been set apart in memory of our National Ensign, a thing of beauty, the embodiment of law and order, liberty, justice, and righteousness.

Grant that it may continue to float in triumph in the present crisis as it has in all the past.

It has been called by many an endearing name—the Flag of the Free, the Star-Gemmed Banner, the Star-Spangled Banner, the Red, White, and Blue, the Old Flag, but the most endearing name, especially to those who have carried it to victory on a thousand fields of battle, is Old Glory.

May the lessons of the day serve to strengthen our love for the principles it represents, intensify our patriotism, and inspire our soldiers and sailors to deeds of heroism and valor in the present conflict, that they may bring it safely back untarnished, in the name of Him who taught us from the Cross of Calvary liberty, truth, justice, righteousness. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

REAL ESTATE PROFITEERING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9248, known as the antirent profiteering bill, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table, a House bill with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question or two. The subject which he has brought before us is one of exceeding importance. Of course the great subject before us, as it is before the American people, is the winning of the war, and the next in importance is the protection of our people at home who are unable to protect themselves against the conscienceless exactions of "profiteers." I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who, under the rules, and rightfully, will be the chairman of the House conferees, what he thinks of this bill or Pomerene resolution, or whatever it is——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a bill; it is the so-called Pomerene amendment to the House bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And tell us in what respect it differs from or is an improvement upon the measure passed by the House on the same subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I certainly can not say that the amendment known as the Pomerene amendment is an improvement on the House bill, for the reason that the House bill is written from the standpoint of the tenant, and I believe it would be a reflection on the ability of the author of the amendment to say that it was not written from the standpoint of the landlord. I have a copy of the Pomerene amendment, and I do not object at all to pointing out some of the differences about which the gentleman inquiries.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think it would be advisable for the gentleman from Kentucky to point out some of these differences, so that we will have an understanding of just what will be before the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On page 9 of the bill, which is almost at the beginning of the Pomerene amendment, I find this language:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or bring within the scope of this act properties wherein during the period of its limitations the character of the same has been changed or converted from dwelling to business use.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, while the gentleman is on that, it gives me a thought. I assume that the Government of the United States has purchased a lot of property in the District of Columbia, or rented a lot of property in the District of Columbia, or perhaps both, since war was declared, and in some cases has converted residential property into business property, and in some cases has purchased property for the purpose of making it business property for the uses of the Government. Is there anything in the clause of the Senate bill just read that would give the Government of the United States protection against possible profiteering by owners of property within the District of Columbia or any other place in the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was about to state that in my judgment that section of the Pomerene bill is a very vicious one. In other words, it would legalize and justify profiteering in a house if that house had ever been a residence, whereas it might be unlawful under the Pomerene bill—I use the word "might" advisedly—to profiteer in any other sort of a house. But I can not possibly see the wisdom or the justice or the equity in legalizing profiteering in a house because it has been used as a residence.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, are there any cases to which the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky has been called during his investigation of this very important matter in which profiteering has been practiced against the Government by people in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I think I have a number of those instances.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman be willing to state them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. With the language just quoted still in mind, I think I can see one object, in that some residences and apartment houses have been taken over by the Government and now are being used by the Government for offices. That use would be for "business" purposes. This language would in those cases permit the owners of that property to profiteer without restraint against the Government, because the apartment house had at some time or other been used as a "residence."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield again? The gentleman states that it would permit the owner of property to profiteer against the Government without restraint. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government officials would allow that to be done?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know that any official of the Government has allowed that to be done in the way of rent, unless it be a case down back of the Pan American Building, of which I heard ex-Congressman Levy, of the State of New York, speak recently. He said there was a tract of vacant land down there that had been offered for sale at 25 cents a square foot, and that the Government was now renting it at 9 cents a square foot. In other words, the three years' rental would pay for the land. It has been rented, not purchased, notwithstanding three years' rental would pay for it.

Another feature of the Pomerene bill is that, the way it is written, the landlord would be permitted to collect 7 per cent net on 150 per cent value of the property. It is contended by the author of the bill that it does not mean 150, but he admits that it does mean 105 per cent. Just why the 5 per cent should be given to the landlord instead of to the tenant I do not know, unless it is sought to be consistently for the landlord throughout.

Then there is the idle language used on the same page, "Elevator and other service as furnished on said date shall continue."

If it does not continue, then what? There is nothing obligatory about it, and therefore I call the language idle.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman from Kentucky received any information touching the general subject since the bill was before the House which ought to be laid before the House at the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but permit me first to invite attention to other points in the Pomerene bill. The House passed a bill taking care of the tenant, and the Senate has stricken out everything in the bill—even the title—and has written in its stead that which is clearly intended for the benefit of the landlord and the disadvantage of the tenant.

If I may be indulged, I will read a part of a letter dated May 28, 1918, signed by George W. Worthington, chairman of convention committee, Woodward Building. This is a letter sent by Mr. Worthington, of the subcommittee of Real Estate Brokers' Association, Washington, D. C., asking as many as can do so to go to the St. Louis convention of the National Real Estate Brokers' Association. The letter starts out:

FELLOW REALTOR: Are you going to the St. Louis convention? Well, you should go. Why? Because the national association has gone out of its way and spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress.

The landlords asked for a rent administrator. They got it in the Pomerene bill. The landlords then asked that the rent administrator be a resident of the District of Columbia, and they got it in the Pomerene bill. Mr. Worthington says that the national association "spent considerable money to help us in the local fight in Congress." Then the Pomerene bill goes further and provides that the rent administrator shall be confirmed by the Senate. Mr. Worthington says that the national association has "spent considerable money to help us win our local fight in Congress."

On page 11 of the Pomerene bill this language is used:

The landlord or lessor and lessee may make contracts or leases for daily, weekly, monthly, or yearly rental of real estate so as to net the landlord or lessor not exceeding 7 per cent per annum for the use or occupancy thereof on the value of the property.

That, if not nullified later along, would permit a mutual contract between the landlord and tenant; but under other terms of the Pomerene bill that contract would not last any longer than the tenant got into the property. As soon as he moved his effects in, then section 6 would apply; and that reads:

That if the rent of real estate as herein permitted shall not equal 7 per cent per annum net on the valuation thereof as herein determined, then upon application by the landlord it may be increased by the Rent Administrator so as not to exceed said amount.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman's statement is quite interesting, and shows the vast difference between the House and the Senate bills. Does the gentleman have any reasonable hope that the conferees can ever come to an agreement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Either the House or the Senate conferees will have a long road to travel. They are nearly as far apart as the poles. But I believe that if we can get past a certain stage in the game there are enough votes in the Senate to pass a good bill—one that will help the oppressed tenant instead of shielding the profiteering landlord.

Mr. GARNER. I wish the gentleman success in playing the game.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is a very suggestive letter which the gentleman from Kentucky has just read, coming from the board of real estate men in this city. It mentions the fact that the National Association of Real Estate Brokers has contributed money to help the local brokers in their contest in Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what the letter says.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How could money contributed by the real estate brokers in Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, and New Orleans, or any other city, be used in Congress to put that bill through?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I myself have wondered. The real estate people here always have gotten, some way or some how, everything they want, no matter what it is. They get everything they go after.

Mr. MADDEN. What have they been getting lately?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The president of the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, just referred to, is a California man. He is quite active also, I understand, in the Rotary Club.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the Rotary Club?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is a civic club, and its present work is to look after the interests of the United States. I have before me one sample of the way it looks after the interests of the United States:

Squares between Seventeenth and Nineteenth, E and East Capitol Streets SE., are to be taken over by the Government. The assessor of the District of Columbia values that property at $211,830. The Board of Trade, which is but another name for the real estate association, have valued the same property at $235,076. The chamber of commerce, which is but still another name for the real estate association, has valued it at $279,992. Then the Rotary Club, of which Mr. Garland, of California, the national president of the Real Estate Brokers' Association, is a member, comes in and values it at $355,463—approximately $143,000 more than the local assessor values it at. Mr. Garland is the man, so I am informed, who purchases property for housing all over the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean for the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the Government, yes. He is also the same man who, I am informed, stated in a speech before the local Real Estate Brokers' Association on the night of the 5th of this present month that his association was ready to help the local board financially in their fight in Congress. Several years ago I got a list of the condemnation juries and commissions in the District of Columbia, and by that list I found in the five years then next preceding there had been 141 condemnation juries and commissions and that only 162 men had made up those juries and commissions; that about 73 per cent of the cases had had on those juries 25 particular men. Now the chamber of commerce sends out five men to appraise this property. Those five men are W. S. Gude, George W. White, P. T. Moran, A. Lisner and John Brewer. I went back and looked over that list of standing and ever-ready juries; they are men of means, however, but they are professional in the sense that they are always called on to value land in condemnation proceedings here in the District of Columbia. W. F. Gude served on 24 of those juries, P. T. Moran served on 13, and A. Lisner served on 2. In other words, the chamber of commerce selected three-fifths of their appraisers from that list.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who appoints those experts, those jurors?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If they were jurors, they were summoned by the United States marshal, and if they were commissioners they were appointed by the court.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman speaks of 25 particular men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; the same 25 men composed 40 per cent or more of 112 juries out of 141. There were only 10 juries out of the 141 upon which none of the favored 25 men served. Virtually all of the 25 favorite jurymen are either directly or indirectly interested in real estate transactions, and their respective occupations are as real estate dealers, builders, lenders of money on real estate, sellers of lumber, sellers of brick, sellers of building hardware, and sellers of paint and glass and fire insurance.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. NOLAN. I would like to ask the chairman of the District Committee if he has made any general investigation regarding the purchase of property and leaseholds by the Government here in the District of Columbia since the beginning of the war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have made no particular investigation, but I have unavoidably come across some things that a blind man could not miss.

Mr. NOLAN. I would suggest, if it would take any considerable time, that if the gentleman has any data upon that the House would be benefited by it if he would insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I now have one case in mind. I refer to the Bureau of Standards, away out on Connecticut Avenue. On February 28, 1918, the United States purchased from the Chevy Chase Land Co. 10.79 acres of land on Connecticut Avenue extended, just north of Van Ness Street, for the use of the Bureau of Standards. The deed was recorded on April 15, 1918. The consideration was $81,500, or approximately $7,550 per acre. The 1914–15 triennial assessment of this property was $3,500 per acre—basis of assessment $5,250 per acre. It was fixed tentatively at the same figure for the 1917–18 triennial assessment, but was reduced for this latter assessment to $2,500 per acre—basis of assesment, $3,750 per acre—being the result of an appeal taken by the Chevy Chase Land Co. to the board of assessment appeals in July, 1917. On this appeal the Chevy Chase Land Co. stated in writing, on July 24, 1917, that it would accept at the rate of $3,500 per acre for this property, less 10 per cent; or, in other words, at the rate of $3,150 per acre. The same statement was made verbally before the board on the hearing of the appeal. This statement was made by the principal owner of the property. These statements induced the assessors to reduce the assessment to $2,500 per acre—basis of assessment, $3,750 per acre—except the assessment covering a very small strip containing forty-one one-hundredths of an acre, which was assessed at $3,500—basis of assessment, $5,250 per acre.

Neither the Bureau of Standards nor anyone else representing the United States in the purchase of this property asked the District of Columbia assessor's office for information as to the assessment or the value of the property, although in the past information of this sort has frequently been asked of that office in cases where land in the District of Columbia was to be purchased by the Government.

So this land was valued by the assessor, upon the insistence of its owners, at $3,150 per acre, and the Government, without inquiry, bought it at $7,550 an acre; in other words, they paid $4,400 more per acre for it than the owners stated shortly before they were willing to take for it. Therefore they paid $47,476 more than the owners themselves declared it was worth, and that declaration was made only a short time before the sale.

Mr. MADDEN. Who made that purchase?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. According to the chief clerk of the Bureau of Standards, Albert L. Thurman, Solicitor for the Department of Commerce, acted for the Government in the transaction.

Mr. MADDEN. That must have been with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, I suppose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no information as to that.

Mr. MADDEN. That gentleman is often the Acting Secretary of Commerce, is he not? I have had correspondence from that department in that name as Acting Secretary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I just stated that the information came over the telephone from the chief clerk of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have often had letters from the Department of Commerce signed by that name as Acting Secretary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that this purchase was made for the Government without inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Without inquiry of the assessor's office.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the purchasing agent to whom the gentleman has referred absolute in the matter of a purchase like that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no information on that subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether title has been passed in that case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; the title has been passed and the money paid, as I recited a few moments ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman quote the law under which a solicitor could make a purchase of that kind?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The case to which the gentleman from Kentucky has just referred, the purchase of this property for the Bureau of Standards, is no more extraordinary than the purchase of the Arlington Hotel property by the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, if it is as extraordinary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A good many public speeches have been made against what is known as the Johnson bill, and also against the Saulsbury resolution. On May 27 a public speech was made on the resolution in which the speaker said:

> This is probably the only legislation that will be enacted upon this subject and we must consider it from that standpoint.

I am inclined to believe, in fact I must believe, that the wish was father to the thought.

And then, on May 21, in another speech on the subject of rent profiteering, the same speaker said:

> It seems to me it involves a monstrous proposition.

And then, again, in the same speech he said:

> I never heard of such a monstrous proposition. It is absurd. It is too ridiculous, it seems to me, to be urged for a moment.

Further, in a public speech made May 27, the same speaker said:

> It is a monstrous proposition, helpful to nobody except the people who are actually occupying the premises—

And so forth.

Also, in the same speech, he said:

> * * * If I were a landlord and the Government wanted my property, if the Government needed my property, I stand absolutely ready on the minute to deed it to the Government.

One would infer from that language that he is not a "landlord" and that he spoke from a strictly disinterested standpoint. But I find that something has happened, just as I said in a speech here more than a month ago probably would happen. That was that if profiteering was to be punished by a fine and imprisonment, you could not imprison a corporation. There is no provision in the Pomerene bill for the imprisonment of anybody in a corporation. Following that thought, I said that everybody who wanted to profiteer would convert himself into a corporation and would make himself president, and perhaps make his wife the secretary, and one of the children or one of the family the treasurer, and then pay themselves such salaries as they wanted to pay. They would collect that from the tenant and then still make the tenant pay 7 per cent net. Now, the public speaker whose remarks I have just quoted holds his property through a corporation called the National Investment Co. (Inc.). That corporation owns the apartment house at 1627 Sixteenth Street, which for assessment purposes is valued at $60,150. It certainly is worth more than that. In my humble judgment it is worth nearly $100,000. A few years ago $52,000 was borrowed on it. Therefore it must be worth more than $60,000.

The same corporation owns the Luray apartment house at 1320 R Street, which is valued by the assessor at $16,136. This same corporation owns the Woodward apartment house at 510 Third Street NW., which is valued at $15,914 by the assessor.

The same corporation owns the McKinley Apartment, at Third and E Streets, which is valued at $26,568 by the assessor. Then, the gentleman who made that public speech owns a piece of property on Massachusetts Avenue that is valued by the assessor at $19,217. In other words, the total assessed value of these properties is $137,985, and they are, I think, easily worth $200,000. Yet we are urged from that source to defeat the bill; but the general trend of his argument was to do nothing except pass the Saulsbury resolution, and even then the opinion was expressed that that should last only during the present session of Congress.

Getting back to the Pomerene bill, I find that by taking October 1, 1917, instead of the day before, the landlords are helped very much. The annual leases made on October 1, 1916, expired September 30, 1917. This difference of one day is another thing which the landlords have been most anxious, indeed, to have written into the law.

Mr. Worthington said in his letter to his fellow "realtors" that the national association "spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress."

On page 13 of the Pomerene bill I find the following language:

> Provided, That any tenant who, in the opinion of the Rent Administrator, is charging exorbitant rents in subletting the premises, or any part thereof occupied by him, either furnished or unfurnished, shall be deemed an undesirable tenant, within the meaning of this section, and shall be liable to forfeiture of his lease.

I can not but be apprehensive that under that language the tenant who profiteered would escape all penalty except that of being "deemed an undesirable tenant and held liable to a forfeiture of his lease."

The latter part of section 6 of the Pomerene bill treats of "hotels" without defining what a hotel is. Anybody can call his residence or apartment house a hotel and avail himself of the advantages given to hotels.

Section 7 allows the landlord to charge an annual rental of 30 per cent of the value of the furniture for its use. In that way the landlord could cause the tenant to pay the value of the furniture in approximately three years.

Under section 9 the Pomerene bill requires the Rent Administrator to be confirmed by the Senate. The President was permitted to appoint a Food Administrator and a Fuel Administrator for the entire United States, neither of whom had to be confirmed by the Senate. The District of Columbia also has a fuel administrator and a food administrator not confirmed by the Senate, but when the question of profiteering in house rents is reached the Rent Administrator must not only be a resident of the District of Columbia but he must be confirmed by the Senate. Mr. Worthington in his letter to his fellow "realtors" said that the National Real Estate Brokers' Association "has spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress."

Without the Pomerene bill the owner of the property, the landlord, and the tenant could enter into mutual bargain and trade for the use of the premises; but under the Pomerene bill the "mortgagee" is given the right to step in by way of appeal in order to see that the rent is high enough. Mr. Worthington in his letter to his fellow "realtors" says that the National Real Estate Brokers' Association "has spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress."

An overwhelming per cent of the tenants in the District of Columbia are small-salaried people working for the Government. They can not lose a day from their work without losing a part of their compensation. Yet the Pomerene bill puts obstacle after obstacle in the way of the tenant by permitting not only the landlord but the mortgagee of the premises, if there be one, to keep him from his work day after day, and perhaps week after week, by carrying him from one place to another by the use of the several appeals provided for in the bill.

On page 18 of the Pomerene bill I find this language:

In fixing rents of real estate there shall be taken in account the taxes and assessment thereon, the cost of reasonable repair and maintenance actually incurred, of insurance, and of light, heat, water, and elevator and other service where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation and nonoccupancy.

Recently the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, I believe, is an experienced contractor and builder, stated that buildings depreciate 5 per cent each year. If he is correct in that statement, a building depreciates 100 per cent in 20 years. Several years ago when the House Committee on the District of Columbia was investigating some local insurance companies and the value of the Southern Building was in question, a number of builders and business men made virtually the same statement. Not only the District of Columbia, but every other community in the world, is full of good houses that are more than 20 years old. However, if the Pomerene bill should become a law and that basis of depreciation accepted, then the tenants would be compelled during the run of the 20 years not only to pay for the full value of the house, but also to pay the taxes, insurance, and repairs during that time. In addition to that, under the Pomerene bill the tenant would be compelled to pay the cost of sidewalks, street improvements, sewers, water mains, and so forth. Under that bill, no matter what the annual depreciation may be, whether it be more or less than 5 per cent, the tenant would have to pay it. While all that is bad enough, yet it is not so cruelly unjust as that provision of the Pomerene bill which would compel the tenant to pay rent for the property while he is in it, as well as to pay the rent during the time that it may have been vacant. Under the Pomerene bill the rent administrator, who must be a resident of the District of Columbia and who must be confirmed by the Senate, must fix the rate of rental in such an amount as will give the landlord 7 per cent net, on more than the full value of the property, after the tenant has paid the landlord's taxes, the upkeep of his property, the building of sidewalks, the construction of streets, the building of sewers, the laying of water pipes, and even assessments levied for the purchase and improvement of a park which may be located too far from the rented premises for the tenant even to see it unless he owns an automobile. Besides that the tenant, under the Pomerene bill, must, as I have said, account in rentals for the time that the premises may have been vacant.

Mr. Worthington said in his letter to his fellow real-estate dealers that the National Real Estate Brokers' Association "had spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress."

Section 12 of the Pomerene bill reads as follows:

That any person who shall knowingly receive rents on real estate in excess of those permitted by the terms of the act, or who shall knowingly by any sale or transfer or by any act or subterfuge, evade or attempt to evade its provisions shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine not exceeding $1,000 or to imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Under that section a profiteer could escape all punishment by stubbornly refusing to know the law. There is an old saying that ignorance of the law excuses no man. However, the Pomerene bill fixes a premium upon all ignorance of the law.

But that is not the worst part of section 12. Everybody in this Chamber has information to the effect that there are a number of instances in the District of Columbia where profiteering against the United States runs into the thousands and thousands of dollars annually. We know of one instance where the United States is now renting 10,500 square feet of space at an annual rental of $10,000, and that the landlord has served notice upon the United States that beginning the 1st of July this rental will be increased to $3 per square foot. That would be an increase of $21,500. It is quite plain that this particular landlord, a corporation, can go ahead and charge this additional annual rental of $21,500, pay the $1,000 fine, and have $20,500 of its extortion left as profit. I wish to impress that this landlord is a corporation, and that no provision is made in the Pomerene bill for imprisoning any officer of a corporation which may profiteer.

We know of another instance, that of the Washington Market Co., which is using Government land with which to profiteer against the Government to the extent of $14,000 a year. That company could pay the $1,000 fine and still have $13,000 of its extortion left. That company, too, is a corporation, and under the Pomerene bill nobody could be imprisoned. But I take the broad position that no jury ever could be impaneled in the District of Columbia which would convict anybody for profiteering in real estate rentals. Many of these profiteers, particularly those who are subleasing, are women. I can not but believe, in fact, I feel I know that some landlords are having their female tenants profiteer upon the Government war workers and then turn the extortion over to them—the landlords. If indictments should be found and trials come on, it is reasonably certain that acquittals would be the result, and the excuse given that they were not willing to convict a woman. If a man should be indicted for profiteering in rents, I feel certain in my own mind that no 12 men on a jury in the District of Columbia would ever agree to conviction, as it would be next to impossible to get a jury of 12 men without getting one or more who were fellow profiteers.

The real estate interests in the District of Columbia dominate and control everything in the District. They have even dictated the bills introduced in Congress which are intended for their own control. It is useless to say that those bills are not worth the paper on which they are written.

In proof of this statement, on March 26, 1918, before the Senate District Committee, then conducting hearings on House bill 9248—the Johnson bill—the following colloquy occurred between Mr. Bates Warren, who was spokesman for the local Real Estate Brokers' Association, and Senator HOLLIS (Hearings, pt. 1, p. 18):

Senator HOLLIS. Are you familiar with any place where they do have a rent administrator?
Mr. WARREN. Not in rents.
Senator HOLLIS. Is that an invention of your own, Mr. Warren?
Mr. WARREN. I will not claim it as my own. We all discussed it and it comes out. I drafted the bill.

On March 27, 1918, Mr. Charles S. Shreve, real estate agent, addressing the same committee, said (Hearings, pt. 2, p. 94):

I wish to state—and I think I violate no confidence in stating it—that I believe Mr. Colladay, the chairman of my committee, on the request of Mr. TINKHAM, drafted this bill which Mr. TINKHAM introduced. * * *

The bills introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] contain everything that the landlords have asked for publicly. The Pomerene bill to some extent changes the language and the order of sequence of the so-called Tinkham bills, but that, too, gives the landlords all that they have asked for publicly, and in addition something more.

I have just cited some instances where the real estate owners have been able not only to get what they asked for their land when selling it to the Government, but in some instances more than they asked for it. This is no new thing. They have been in power here throughout many years. Only a few years ago the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad conceived the idea that a park between the Union Station and the Capitol Building would be a thing of beauty. That plan, however, involved the scheme of having the Government purchase property of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. on the site of the proposed park. Through their principal attorney in the District of Columbia they submitted a proposition to the Government that they would take the original cost, plus 6 per cent interest, for their holdings. However, when the condemnation commission had made its awards it was found that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was allowed approximately $565,000 more for its property than it had said it was willing to take. However, the President declined to approve the payment of the money and no part of it has been made. It is now contemplated to erect some war-emergency buildings on the ground between the Union Station and the Capitol. We shall wait and see whether those buildings will be erected on land owned by the Government or on land to be purchased from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. under some authority other than the one just spoken of.

No; this thing of paying more for property in the District of Columbia than the owners ask for it is not new by any means. A few years ago Congress appropriated $190,000 with which to purchase an addition to the McKinley School. At that time a man by the name of Myers was principal of that school. Having an interest in the school and the welfare of his Government, he set about to see the twenty-odd owners of the several pieces of property to be acquired in order to ascertain the lowest figures they would take for their property. At that time a man by the name of Groomes was the real estate agent for those owners. But just at that time Mr. Joseph I. Weller, who enjoyed the reputation of being better able than any other man to sell property for school purposes, came upon the scene. Mr. Groomes was retired as agent and Mr. Weller became the agent. One of the first things Mr. Weller did after becoming agent for the sale of the property was to write to one of the then principal officers of the Board of Education and suggest that he stop Mr. Myers. Thereupon the Board of Education official wrote Mr. Myers several letters, in one of which he said:

Since my recent letter to you and the conversation we had regarding its contents concerning the inquiries you and your janitor had been making in the neighborhood of the McKinley School I have been told that you have sent to the District Commissioners a full statement showing the result of your investigations.

This information was not a little surprising to me, because you were told that by your action you were interfering with the business of the board of education, and that such proceedings were not in keeping with your duties as principal. Kindly advise me of the facts in the case and oblige,

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

Mr. Myers, in his answer to that communication, said, in part:

Your letter of April 26 just received. I inclose a copy of the statement concerning the value of the property offered by Mr. Weller. This statement is one which I prepared for the use of the board's committee on sites, buildings, etc., and presented to Mr. ——— and Mr. ———. I also handed a copy of it to Mr. Garges, chief clerk of the engineer commissioner. All of the information contained in this statement concerning the rents received from this property was secured by me from Mr. Groomes, who was agent for the property at the time that the information was secured, only a few days before it was offered to the commissioners. The information concerning the taxes on the property was secured from the assessor's office. I am informed on good authority that Mr. Groomes placed the property in the hands of Mr. Weller because he believed that Mr. Weller could get a better price for it from the commissioners. * * * As a matter of fact, this information had been secured from Mr. Groomes and the assessor's office previous to the receipt of your letter. My whole purpose in securing such information was to be of service to your board in the purchase of the property and, if possible, to increase the amount which we are able to purchase beyond that which was offered by Mr. Weller. I feel very strongly that the price asked for the property is about 50 per cent above its value and see no reason why the District should be obliged to pay that figure if I can render any service in preventing it.

I regret if the efforts I have made have interfered in any way with the work of your board, but feel that Mr. Weller's complaint is due entirely to the fear that the information furnished may interfere with his securing an unreasonable price for the property. I am very sure that it will not interfere in the least with his receiving what the property is worth. Of course I shall take no further steps in the matter whatever if you think best.

Yours, very respectfully, MYERS, Principal.

After the board of education official received that letter he addressed the following letter to Mr. Myers:

Replying to your favor of the 27th ultimo, I have to state that this action of yours, following as it did my letter to you and our subsequent conversation, is much of a surprise to me. I can not view it in any other light than an act of presumption on your part, as a principal and teacher in the schools, to interfere with the business of the board of education.

Whenever your services or advice are required in connection with business matters, we shall be glad to inform you. I shall avail myself of the first opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the board of education.

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

If I am correctly advised, the whole property was appraised by the assessor for taxation at $42,321. That figure was supposed to be two-thirds of its real value; consequently the total value would have been $63,481. It is needless to say that Mr. Myers lost his position as principal of the McKinley School and that the property was purchased at a price many thousands of dollars more than it was worth.

Mr. Worthington wrote his fellow "realtors" that the national association had "spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress."

Mr. Myron M. Parker is one of those who recently appeared before the Senate District Committee in a hearing which it was conducting to complain that the proposed law—the Johnson bill—unjustly affected the building in town known as the Atlantic Building. However, Mr. Parker had nothing whatever to say about a recent sale made by him to the Government of some land to be used by the Walter Reed Hospital, where our sick soldier boys are. I am advised by Commissioner Brownlow that Mr. Parker offered to sell 19.76 acres to the Government for the Walter Reed Hospital at $4,000 per acre. Mr. Brownlow says that when Mr. Parker's proposal reached the Secretary of War he requested Mr. Brownlow to have an appraisal made by some one familiar with real estate values in the District of Columbia. The property was then appraised by one of the assistant assessors, who made a careful study of the sales in that locality, and an examination of the contour of the ground, and concluded that the basis of the assessment on the property, namely, $2,550 per acre, was about right when made, but that giving due allowance to an increase in value, brought about by the new opening of Sixteenth Street extended, it was worth at most not over $3,000 per acre. Mr. Brownlow further says that in an effort to show that the valuation of the assistant assessor was too low, Mr. Parker submitted appraisals made by several well-known real estate dealers, who valued the property at $4,000 per acre, $4,500 per acre, and one as high as $5,000 per acre. Mr. Parker also submitted a report from the appraisal committee of the Washington Real Estate Brokers' Association in which this property was valued at $4,500. The property was finally purchased by the Government at $3,000 per acre, but not until after those representing the Government had indicated that they would purchase other adjacent property at $2,500 per acre.

Mr. Worthington, in his letter to his fellow "realtors," says that the National Real Estate Brokers' Association—spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress.

Earlier in my remarks I stated that I knew of some instances where the owners of the property had prevailed upon their female tenants to charge their roomers more in order that the landlord himself might have more. A day or two ago I was informed by Commissioner Brownlow of a recent outrageous instance of this form of profiteering. Mr. Brownlow says that on September 15, 1917, Mr. George L. Whitford, brother to the president of the Washington Market Co., leased to Mrs. Della M. Knapp, through the real estate firm of Thomas J. Fisher & Co., an apartment in the Lowell apartment house, 1909 Fourteenth Street NW., for one year for $360, payable in monthly installments of $30 each. On April 15 last the agent notified Mrs. Knapp to remove from and quit the premises at the expiration of 30 days. Several days after the notice to quit the agent submitted a proposal to rent the apartment to Mrs. Knapp as a "month-to-month" tenant from May 15, 1918, at $45 a month, notwithstanding the fact that the present lease does not expire until next September. It appears that the notice to vacate was served pursuant to the directions of Mr. Whitford, who alleged that the terms of the lease had been violated by the tenant because the tenant had rented a room to a Government worker. This, Mr. Whitford claimed, was a violation of that part of the lease by which the tenant agreed not to sublet the apartment without the written consent of the lessor. Mrs. Knapp subsequently saw Mr. Whitford and told him that she did not believe that she was subletting the premises in violation of the contract because she had taken a young woman lodger, whom she charged $4 a week, this amount including laundry. She also told Mr. Whitford that she was not able to pay $45 a month. Mr. Whitford thereupon suggested that she could raise the rent of the lodger to $7 a week and thus get approximately the other $15 a month that he wanted for the apartment. Mr. Brownlow informs me that this statement made by Mrs. Knapp was afterwards admitted by Mr. Whitford in a conversation with him in his office. It is but fair to the Thomas J. Fisher Real Estate Co. to state that they asked Mr. Whitford to relieve them from the agency for the property. Mr. Brownlow further informs me that when Mrs. Knapp tendered $30 in payment of her rent in advance for the month of June that the money was refused upon specific instructions from Mr. Whitford on the contention that the proposed increase of 50 per cent in rents was necessary in order to yield a return of 7 per cent net provided for in the Pomerene bill.

Mr. Worthington, in his letter to his fellow "realtors," says the National Real Estate Brokers' Association—spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress.

Remember, please, that Mr. Garland is president of the National Real Estate Brokers' Association, and that in his address before the local branch of that association on the evening of the 5th of this month he assured them of further "moral and financial backing" in their fight in Congress.

And remember, also, that it is he who is purchasing all the housing sites throughout the United States for the Government.

Frequently the Washington papers say to the people of the States, "This is your city."

If paying for it over and over again makes it theirs, then it is their city. But while the war workers who are here continue, month after month, to pay for it, the Washingtonian still holds the title and still claims the right to extortionate rents from those to whom the Washington papers continue to say, "This is your city."

We shall calmly await legislative decision between landlord and tenant, remembering the while that Mr. Worthington wrote his fellow "realters" that the National Real Estate Brokers' Association—spent considerable money to help us in our local fight in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House disagree to the Senate amendment to the bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. CROSSER, and Mr. CARY.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCLEMORE was granted leave of absence for June 13, 14, and 15, on account of important business.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is pension day for bills on the Private Calendar, and, while I do not care to interfere with the consideration of the sundry civil bill, I would like to reach some agreement, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to take up pension bills—we have three Senate bills—and consider them immediately after the passage of the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent, immediately after the conclusion of the pending appropriation bill, that he be permitted to take up Senate bills——

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to be assured that I will have time to be heard on the Swarts amendment.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I shall be glad to give the gentleman an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GILLETT. For the purpose of reserving the right to object. I do not wish to be discourteous, but I think if the program which has been suggested is to be followed it would be well not to tie ourselves up so that we can not take up the fortification bill immediately after the sundry civil bill. After that we will be waiting for the Senate to dispose of those two bills, and we could readily take up the gentleman's bill and some others, and I think it wise for the present to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there is a special order to-day, and I think it ought to be carried out first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects for the reason there is a special order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall need it, but I desire to ask for an additional five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that his time be extended for five additional minutes, if it be necessary, to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE FLAG TO-DAY.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I have asked the indulgence of the House for a little while to-day in order that I may give brief expression to some of the thoughts which stir us on this the birthday of the flag.

This is the one hundred and forty-first anniversary of the establishment of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the new Republic of the Western World. As time is measured in the life of humanity, this is but a brief span across the limitless expanse of the ages, yet no nation in so brief a period ever made such unexampled progress in wealth, the increase in population and territory, or the success of her political institutions as that Nation whose banner will to-day be commemorated by every lover of liberty throughout the world. [Applause.]

The changes which have come over us and over the world in habits of life and thought, in the relationship of citizen and nation, in vision and outlook upon the affairs of the world, since this flag was first unfurled have been so rapid and complex that we comprehend them with difficulty and confusion. Ours was the first great Republic of the modern world. A century and a half ago the assumption of divine right in the government of nations was in its flower, and ours was the first and then became the greatest Nation to demonstrate the fallacy of that ancient political relic. We may gather some conception of the tremendous force of our example and of our success when we recall that there are now 27 republics in the world instead of the one feeble Republic of the Revolution, and that even in many nations which still retain the forms of monarchy the essential principles of freedom and self-government prevail among the people.

The fundamental principles of human liberty and justice do not change with the passing years, though their application to changing circumstances may undergo constant readjustment. The right to work out the destiny of peoples and to choose the paths of freedom rather than slavery has always been the same, whether hoped for by the children of Israel under Moses or by the people of the Thirteen Colonies under Washington. [Applause.] The yearning for self-government and the exercise of inherent human rights and the desire to escape the thralldom of the despot in '76 was not entirely unlike the yearning under which the world labors to-day to maintain the rights of humanity against the outrageous and infamous barbarism of central Europe.

It is not always easy to designate specific causes which have led to obvious results. It is likewise difficult to prophesy precisely what course we must pursue in our future march toward world peace and world security. What in 1776 was a mere revolution to secure redress for specific wrongs by some Providential interference grew into the greatest movement for the liberation of men that has been inaugurated since the dawn of history. [Applause.] Shall we say it was the imposition of a small stamp tax that kindled the fires of that conflict? Shall we say that but for the romantic performance of the Boston Tea Party this mighty movement would have been choked and stifled? To say that is to place the destiny of man at the caprice of fortune. These were the mere instrumentalities by which the fires of liberty were kindled, which have not been and shall not be permitted to smoulder until every race and clime and creed shall stand out free and unafraid, with hearts fit for the service of the world. [Applause.]

While it would stir our hearts with pride to review the unparalleled growth of our population, drawn from everywhere, since our flag was first established, or to trace the course of our empire to the Pacific, the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, gathering Alaska to our bosom on the way; while we might love to dwell upon unexampled growth in material wealth, the circumstances in which we find ourselves and the world to-day preclude anything that might seem akin to self-glorification. We are confronted to-day with problems differing only in degree from those which confronted the fathers of the Republic. They kindled the light of liberty. It was theirs to fan and strengthen its flickering blaze until it could burn of its own force. Ours is the duty to make sure that it shall not be extinguished by the storm of irresponsible and brutal military ambition now seeking to overwhelm it. Not only is it our duty to see that what our forefathers fought and died to establish shall not be destroyed or polluted on the shores of America, but as a part of the social and political fabric of the world, recognizing and ready to perform our share of the burden and the sacrifice, we must not falter nor hesitate until the full force of our blows shall fall with such deadly and disastrous weight that our enemy and the enemy of our allies and of humanity shall be driven back in utter and overwhelming defeat and made to acknowledge and atone for the infamy which makes his name anathema in every civilized land. [Applause.]

It is fortunate that since the birth of this new Nation and this new flag we have been able to accumulate the forces necessary for the conflict. It is fortunate that in wealth we have outstripped every other nation. It is fortunate that in morality and religion we have been among the leaders of modern thought and activity. It is fortunate that in education we have recognized the duty of the State to the citizen of to-day and of to-morrow. It is fortunate that we have coined our brain into the instrumentalities through which the pursuits of peace may be advanced, and since the conflict had to come it is fortunate that we have the ingenuity which will coin that brain into the instrumentalities by which organized militarism and brutal autocracy shall be unhorsed and the great institutions of the world set again upon their feet.

We can not deny that in participating in the marvelous national progress which had blessed us in the accumulation of wealth and the enjoyment of the pleasures of peace we had become somewhat idealistic in our hopes for the future of man until the European war broke the spell of our dream. And even then in our astonishment we only partially discerned its meaning and ultimate course. But, notwithstanding our efforts to mitigate its influence, notwithstanding for a while our people failed to recognize its intimate bearings upon our foreign and domestic relations, the conflict was inevitably, ruthlessly, and against our will forced upon us; and though shun it we would, if possible, we could not escape the influence of that world tragedy upon our Nation and its welfare. And gradually as the war spread its fires across the continent of Europe and then threatened to leap across the waters and consume our traditions of the past and our hopes for the future we saw our isolation disappear. It came to us as a test and challenge of all our theories of the past. It shook our opinions and undermined our faith in the peaceful progress of humanity. Americans who a little while ago would abolish both Army and Navy now bear arms in defense of themselves and all that their traditions and their history have held dear. We have laid aside, for the time being, our hopes for a world at peace and stand with shimmering sword to guard our Nation and the world against the blasphemous brutality of the historic enemy of civilization. We find that the Atlantic Ocean has narrowed to the proportions of a mere stream dividing us from the shores of western Europe. Our boasted isolation has dwindled, and we find that dreadnaughts, submarines, and airships can reach us and our commerce and industries, and we find that, for the present at least, our ambition and our destiny are interwoven with those of Europe and the rest of the world, because we can no longer hold ourselves aloof from the world.

It is therefore in circumstances like these that our Nation will to-day observe the birthday of our flag, not in jollification, not in light-hearted festivity, but rather in solemn consecration for the high though fearful duty which God has placed upon our shoulders to perform. We had hoped that we might run our course unhindered and unthreatened by the influence of foreign ambitions and intrigues. We had hoped that we would not be compelled to draw the sword, thinking at first that the present conflict was wholly European. But when the veil was lifted we found that the ruthless ambition for world conquest was not limited by the boundaries of Europe nor of Asia. We found that it regarded neither friend nor foe, neutral or belligerent. We found that every art of diplomacy, every power of persuasion, every appeal to justice, to international law, and to respectability, was wasted upon the mad group which now seeks to dominate the world. We could no longer ignore the fundamental cause of the war nor the designs of those who brought it about. We knew we were not responsible for it, nor for anything that brought it about. But when we saw that we could no longer preserve the undisputed rights of a free people, and that an intolerable slavery would be the fate of our posterity if brute force were set upon a throne with the world at its feet, we did what we have done in every great crisis of our Nation's history—we unfurled the banner of our fathers, as they did before us, in behalf of human rights and for the preservation of the blessings of a Christian civilization. And behind that banner we are sending as fearless an Army as ever marched to battle since history began, and it will not return to our shores until it has planted that flag in triumph over every brutal barbarian who receives his orders or his inspiration from the saber rattlers of Potsdam, who insult the world by attempting to excuse their infamy on the ground of self-defense. [Applause.]

It is a tribute to the world's sense of justice that this excuse has not passed unchallenged; and it is not strange that such hypocrisy has arrayed against the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns and their military caste the public opinion of the civilized world. Self-defense, indeed! Self-defense against little Serbia and against Belgium, whose women and children have been outraged and mutilated and murdered, and whose free and unoffending institutions have been demolished. Self-defense, indeed, against heroic France, whose people have been rebaptized with the spirit of Lafayette, who came to our shores to help establish the liberty for which we and they and all our allies are now fighting. [Applause.]

We have come to realize that if all Europe can be made the victim of an ambitious and unscrupulous military despotism, ruthless, corrupt, and unrelenting, without firing the spirit of mankind, then our own Nation and its institutions could not longer remain free from the same scourge. Therefore we are in the conflict on the only side where we could feel at home.

We are in it on that side where Washington would be, where Franklin would be, where Jefferson would be, where Jackson would be, if they were alive and in our midst to-day. We are in it on that side where we may be inspired by the exalted spirit of Lafayette and Kosciusco, who recognized that human freedom and the aspiration of the human heart are not circumscribed by the imaginary boundaries set between nations. We are in it on that side where Lincoln and Davis would be if their counsel could reach our ears. Yea, if I might recount all the martyrs to human freedom throughout the past, I would not fear to assert that our alignment in behalf of democracy and against the unscrupulous edicts of barbarism worthy of the Middle Ages would receive their approval and benediction.

It is in such a cause as this that we are to become the servants of humanity. While we all hate war and hope for peace, it is a glorious thing to feel that if wars must be fought those who follow our flag on land or sea are the soldiers of liberty. As such they stand by the side of Washington, whose grave is the shrine of American freedom. As such they partake of the glories of Old Hickory Jackson, whose campaign insured forever the freedom of the seas. As such their faces will brighten with the spirit of Grant and Lee. As such they will encircle the globe with the inspiration of that banner which Dewey left at Manila. God grant that they may return it to our shores and to their homes, as return it they will, unstained and unconquered, to wave over a nation and in a world fit and safe for the hopes of free men and women.

Patriotism, however, is something more than admiration for the beauties of the flag. Patriotism sinks into the soul, like the love of home and of God, and stirs it with a celestial emotion. It looks beyond the folds and colors and sees the hardships and heroic sacrifices which gave them birth and meaning. Patriotism is patient with the cries of the oppressed, but intolerant of an oppressor. Patriotism does not end where the lips begin, but yields up freely the devotions of the heart. For it countless millions have offered themselves upon the altar of their country, and it has not called in vain for the manhood of our times nor died for lack of true response.

We love the flag. But we love it for what it means to us. We love it because it speaks the language of liberty. We love it because it floats over no nation of bondmen. We love it because, whether at Concord or Yorktown, whether flying over cotton bales at New Orleans or upon the heights of Chapultapec, whether on fields of fraternal glory in the Civil War or upon the peaceful waters of Manila Bay, it has been the emblem of freemen and the hope of the world's oppressed. And as such it shall remain until time shall be swallowed up in the eternity of God. As it brought freedom to America, so shall it bring new hope and new courage to those who suffer now to vindicate the rights of man throughout the world; and as they look upon it for the first time in its history as it advances over the historic fields of France and Belgium beside those of our allies, they will rise again from their sacred ruins and vow again their faith in international justice.

In the Old World, as in the new, the Stars and Stripes will betoken the dawn of a day brighter and fuller in hope for justice and equality than all that have gone before. It will not be strange, therefore, when this flag is borne in Europe by our sons, if men, women, and children, broken and set adrift by the brutalities of the German war machine, shall thank God for the history, the example, and the unselfish help of the American Republic. Then let it wave, if wave it must on foreign soil, as the unconquered and unconquerable emblem of a free and mighty people bent on justice to all nations, until the bloody hands of despotism and international villainy shall be cut asunder and peace and vindication shall come to the brave nations which have stemmed the tide of national murder and suffered the agonies begotten by imperial infamy.

We have been asked at times, "Why are we at war?" But the answer, if not on every patriotic lip, is in every patriotic heart. It is reflected in the stern countenance of the Nation. It is reflected in the grim determination to consecrate all that we are and have to the cause of human freedom. It is reflected in the enthusiasm with which 10,000,000 American youths signed a covenant to serve their country. It is reflected in the hearts of American womanhood, whose sons must fight the battles. We are at war because we are unwilling to be false to our forefathers or to our posterity. We are not willing that our children shall inherit a land less free or less courageous than that which was given to us by our fathers; and as we recall with swelling hearts their deathless glory upon freedom's battle ground, so will those who follow us recount by the fireside's cheerful glow the unselfish devotion of the men of this day who keep burning and fan into even a fuller blaze the torch of human liberty, which shall become brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. [Applause.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, pending that, may I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an address of Secretary of State Lansing several days ago at the commencement exercises at Union College, New York?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech made by the Secretary of State. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into the Treasury as internal-revenue collections, under the provisions of the act approved May 27, 1908, $75,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes upon a subject not contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes upon a subject other than that contained in the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the subject?

Mr. RAKER. The subject closely follows the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Kentucky, and, as I view it, is one of the second declarations of emancipation in the United States—one by Lincoln and now by the present President of the United States, requesting that the Senate of the United States pass the constitutional amendment enfranchising the women of this country. I desire to read the President's statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GILLETT. Has this been published?

Mr. RAKER. I think not.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it a private statement to the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. No; it is not.

Mr. GILLETT. How does the gentleman come by it?

Mr. RAKER. I got this from Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the International Woman's Suffrage Association, and it was sent to me this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to proceed for five minutes upon a subject other than that contained in the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, first I desire to say there was a letter presented by this association to the President from the women of France and other countries under date of February 1, 1918, asking the President to make a statement in regard to this vital and important question. This letter in reply was issued by the President on June 13, and reads as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 13, 1918.

Mrs. CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT,
President International Woman Suffrage Alliance, 1626 Rhode Island Avenue.

MY DEAR MRS. CATT: May I not thank you for transmitting to me the very interesting memorial addressed to me by the French Union for Woman Suffrage under date of February 1, last?

Since you have been kind enough to transmit this interesting and impressive message to me, will you not be good enough to convey to the subscribers this answer?

"I have read your message with the deepest interest, and I welcome the opportunity to say that I agree without reservation that the full and sincere democratic reconstruction of the world, for which we are striving and which we are determined to bring about at any cost will not have been completely or adequately attained until women are admitted to the suffrage, and that only by that action can the nations of the world realize for the benefit of future generations the full ideal force of opinion or the full humane forces of action.

"The services of women during this supreme crisis of the world's history have been of the most signal usefulness and distinction. The war could not have been fought without them or its sacrifices endured It is high time that some part of our debt of gratitude to them should be acknowledged and paid, and the only acknowledgment they ask is their admission to the suffrage. Can we justly refuse it? As for America, it is my earnest hope that the Senate of the United States will give an unmistakable answer to this question by passing the suffrage amendment to our Federal Constitution before the end of this session."

Cordially and sincerely, yours, WOODROW WILSON.

And to that I ask that there be printed in the RECORD the statement of the French women to the President in regard to the matter to which the President made his answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

Union Française pour le Suffrage des Femmes. Adresse de la présidente: Paris, 14 Rue Pierre-Charron; secrétariat: Paris, 53 Rue Scheffer.

PARIS, February 1, 1918.

In the historic message which announced to the world the entry into the struggle of American force and thought you declared unforgettable formulas upon which your great Republic awaits a victory—the right of peoples to self-determination and a durable peace for generations to come.

The French suffragists and those of the allied countries have heard your beautiful and strong words and they unite in prayer to you for the accomplishment of the following resolution:

"Considering that from this war there has come a new international right, founded upon the right of peoples to self-determination;

"That nothing can be claimed to speak authoritatively in the name of the people which excludes women from the life of nations;

"Considering, moreover, that women during the actual conflict have shown the value of the social work which they are capable of performing;

"Considering that the participation of wives and mothers in the suffrage would be the greatest guaranty of the peace to come, the need that the belligerent countries have of their help in the present conflict, the sufferings, moral as well as physical, which this war has cost them, have given definite proof that no longer, without iniquity and imprudence, can one refuse to give them through their vote an influence in the undertakings which decide peace and war:

"The women of the allied countries express the wish that President Wilson in one of his future messages will proclaim the principle of woman suffrage one of the fundamental rights of the future."

We have read with emotion in the Woman Citizen, Mr. President, the very profound words which you have spoken in response to the delegation of women from New York. If we recite them here it is because they are the same words that we would ask you to address to all humanity in one of your declarations which resound throughout the world:

"It is a struggle which goes deeper and touches more of the foundation of the organized life of men than any struggle that has ever taken place before, and no settlement of the questions that lie on the surface can satisfy a situation which requires that the questions which lie underneath and at the foundation should also be settled, and settled right. I am free to say that I think the question of woman suffrage is one of those questions which lie at the foundation."

I beg you to accept, Mr. President, the expression of our great appreciation of our American sisters and our profound admiration for the high moral tone of the declarations which you have uttered in their name. It is this which encourages us to ask your aid, which will be a powerful influence for woman suffrage in the entire world.

For the committee of the Union Française pour le Suffrage des Femmes, and in the name of other national committees of which the list is joined hereto.

President, de Witt Schlumberger, vice president de l'Alliance Internationale du Suffrage des Femmes; Jane Misme, vice president; Marie Louise Le Verrier, vice president; Cecile L. Brunschvieg, secretary; Marguerite Desavis, treasurer; Marguerite Pichon Landry, secretary; Suzanne Grinberg, secretary.

This memorial was signed by the suffrage associations of Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, and Portugal.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in conclusion, that this statement of the President's, to my mind, carries out my idea of his views and his statements on this great question to the public since he has been President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Money laundry machines: For all miscellaneous expenses in connection with the installation and maintenance of money laundry machines, including repairs and purchase of supplies, for machines at Washington, D. C., and in the various Subtreasury offices, $5,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the preceding paragraph the expression is used, "recoinage of worn and uncurrent minor coins." What does "uncurrent minor coins of the United States" mean?

Mr. SHERLEY. Uncurrent coin is coin so close to the tolerance that is permitted for current coin that if put into circulation again it would be light-weight coin before it got back to the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Well, is it different from worn coin?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, it is worn coin, but the difference is this: There is a certain tolerance allowed in coin over the standard weight that it should have. Now, this is so near the maximum allowance that if put into circulation it would almost immediately become uncurrent coin.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For journals and scientific books, $500.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LINTHICUM: Page 27, after line 23, insert the following: "For the purchase of the quarantine station at Baltimore, Md., $176,775."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the purchase of the quarantine station at Baltimore for the sum of $176,775. It was understood between the Public Health Service and the officials of the city of Baltimore that they would take over the quarantine station at Baltimore for that sum of money. Appraisers were appointed, and these appraisers went to Baltimore, two of them on the part of the city and one on the part of the Government, and appraised the property at this sum, as shown by page 263 of the hearings:

OCTOBER 25, 1916.

The honorable the BOARD OF ESTIMATES OF BALTIMORE CITY.

GENTLEMEN: Complying with the request contained in the resolution of your honorable board, passed October 18, relative to the appraisal of land and buildings of the Baltimore quarantine station, we have the honor to report that after a careful investigation of all the property, a comparison of values thereof, we have arrived at the conclusion that the land, buildings, and appurtenances thereon and therein are, in our judgment, worth the net sum of $176,775, divided approximately as follows:

Buildings, wharf, retaining walls, etc	$90,687
Floating property, consisting of 1 tug and 1 gasoline launch	24,500
Implements, live stock, household furniture, etc	3,138
Water, light, and power plants	8,250
20 acres of land, at $2,500 per acre	50,000
One small parcel of land	200
Total	176,775

Respectfully,

THOS. J. LINDSEY,
HARRY E. SILBERT.
On behalf of the city of Baltimore.
N. V. PERRY,
Supervising Superintendent,
On behalf of the Treasury Department.

It being distinctly understood that just as soon as the Public Health Service could do it they would take over this quarantine station.

Now, on April 1, 1918, in conformity with this agreement, the mayor of Baltimore city telegraphed the Public Health Service, saying:

A strike of the engineers and firemen at quarantine ties up our quarantine inspection. Is the Government ready to take this quarantine property over?

In response to that telegram the Secretary of the Treasury answered:

Department is willing to take over and operate Baltimore quarantine station immediately on basis of lease at nominal sum. Funds not yet available, however, for reimbursement of city for property. This item is included in pending legislation, to be effective July 1 if favorably acted upon by Congress.

Now, that was the reply of the Treasury Department to the city officials, and upon that reply the city of Baltimore immediately turned over to the Government, at $1 per year, its quarantine property and all the appurtenances, the tug and other boats connected therewith. With the understanding that the Government was going to take over this property at appraised value, absolutely agreed upon by the Public Health Service and the city of Baltimore, and for the payment of which they were told there was legislation pending, the city turned over to the Government the entire quarantine property at $1 per year, with the expectation that when this bill came before the House the money would be provided.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not think that the amendment offered to this bill is all the authority needed to take that property over?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; that is not all the authority that is needed, but if the gentleman will look at the provisions of the act of February 15, 1893, he will see that it reads:

SEC. 8. That whenever the proper authorities of a State shall surrender to the United States the use of the buildings and disinfecting apparatus at a State quarantine station, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to receive them and to pay a reasonable compensation to the State for their use * * *.

Now, under that provision 67 of the quarantine stations of this country have already been taken over. The last one so taken over was the station at Boston. So the next in order to be taken over was the one at the city of Baltimore, and we had every reason to believe that the Government would carry out its contract, especially after we had turned over the property to it. And we had hoped that we might build with that money a contagious-disease hospital, which would be beneficial to the Government as well as to the city of Baltimore, as there are thousands and thousands of troops now all around the city in the various camps and in the Quartermaster Department in Maryland.

This has hampered us a great deal. It puts us in a position of having turned over our property with the understanding that it would be taken. But the sundry civil bill comes in without the item specified by the Secretary of the Treasury to take over this quarantine station which has been eliminated by the Committee on Appropriations, just as they also eliminated the New York item, which station, however, had not been turned over.

It does seem to me that Baltimore is entitled to the consideration that the other cities of the country have been receiving, and it being the policy of the Public Health Service to take over these stations, I do not see why it ought not to be done at this time. This station is not only for the city of Baltimore. The city has been running it satisfactorily and it is now in the hands of the Government. Great shipments are being made and people are coming in there to go to all parts of the country. Soldiers surround the city, some of them being sent abroad, others returning. The station is of more importance to the Government at this time than ever. The sum is not large. We are giving abundant consideration for every dollar agreed upon to be paid. It cost the city of Baltimore far more than the appraised value by the Government and the city appraisers. This small sum of money ought not to interfere with its being taken over by the Government at this time. We have acted in good faith. We have turned over the property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have turned over the property to the Government and we have carried out our part of the contract. The value is appraised by the officials and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his items sent to the Appropriations Committee. And I hope the House will treat us as fairly and justly as it has treated 67 other quarantine stations in this country. We were not anxious to dispose of it, but having done so, payment as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury should be made. The mayor has not been hasty, as shown by an extract from a letter of Surg. Gen. Blue to me dated June 13, which says:

Until the recent strike, tying up all the operations of the quarantine station, prospective negotiations have never been pushed by the city authorities of Baltimore, and for that reason action was not expedited by the department.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will not act favorably upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM]. The gentlemen seem to think they have been induced to do something that they would not have done otherwise, and that unless we appropriate this money out of the Treasury they will have been taken advantage of. If there is any advantage that is being taken, it is of the Government of the United States. The Public Health Service knew perfectly well at the time they took over this property that the Appropriations Committee was not going to recommend the appropriation of this money. And they knew that by what occurred at the hearings and what has occurred in previous hearings. What they have done is simply this, namely: They have taken under a nominal lease the control of this service, with the result of relieving the city of Baltimore of the expense and putting it upon the Federal Government. We did take over some time ago the quarantine station at Boston, and we have been paying for our mistake ever since.

We have got a lot of things there at the assessed value that were not worth anything like what the Government paid. I am not prepared to say, and I very seriously doubt, whether this property is worth anything like the sum that the Government is requested to pay for it. If we are going to take over this property, it ought to be taken over only as the result of an examination made fully, and not simply by a representative of the Supervising Architect's Office.

That same Supervising Architect's Office some time ago recommended to the committee to appropriate nearly $20,000 for the building of a medical-officers' quarters. I cite that as an evidence of their viewpoint of economy.

If it is desirable to take over the Baltimore quarantine station, a bill ought to be introduced, considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and reported favorably to the House, and the matter taken up in that way. For us now to undertake to appropriate this money in order to ratify the attempt on the part of the city officials of Baltimore and the Public Health Service to force Congress would be to invite similar action on the part of that service in the future. And altogether, aside from the case at Baltimore, there could be no graver mistake made than for Congress to permit the Public Health Service to put them in such a situation as this and then to ratify it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This is entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he was authorized to do this.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not think he was authorized to do anything of the kind. The language that the gentleman read authorized him to take over the property for the use of the Government and make compensation for that use. That is what he has done. What the gentleman is trying to do now is to get Congress to appropriate money for the acquirement of this property, and to do it on the basis that the mayor of Baltimore was able to persuade the head of the Public Health Service to enter this lease on the ground that if he did not they were likely to have a strike there and would not be able to run their own affairs.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The mayor of the city of Baltimore has never undertaken to force this.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman read that letter, and——

Mr. LINTHICUM. He sent a telegram asking when they were able to take it over. He has never been anxious to get rid of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman say there has not been a determined effort on the part of the city of Baltimore to have the Government take this station over?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; there has not been a determined effort on the part of the city of Baltimore to have the Government take this over, but there has been a determined effort on the part of the Public Health Service to take it over.

Mr. SHERLEY. The city of Baltimore is simply permitting the Federal Government to operate it at the expense of the Federal Government at this time. Now, if I understand the gentleman aright, at this time he says the city of Baltimore is not anxious to turn it over.

Mr. TALBOTT. So far as that transaction goes, it has been completed and the Federal Government is obligated to pay the debt.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not speaking of what came before the committee.

Mr. TALBOTT. I can not help what is before the committee. This is a completed transaction between the city of Baltimore and the United States Government, and the Congress should appropriate this money.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Treasury sent in an estimate for over a million dollars for taking over the service at New York. At that time, at the time the hearings were had, and at the time the Public Health Service knew that the Committee on Appropriations would not make this recommendation, there was no contract entered into with the city of Baltimore. It has been done since those hearings were held.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. It has been done since the hearings and long since the estimate which was prepared last fall was submitted to Congress.

Now, if we are to permit the officials of the city of Baltimore and the Public Health Service to enter into an arrangement, as the result of an exchange of telegrams, and then force the Congress of the United States to ratify it by appropriating money, we might as well let these administrative officers determine altogether what moneys shall be appropriated. I am sure that this House is not going to be swept off its feet by the demand of these gentlemen representing the local desires of Baltimore. It is to me a matter of extreme surprise that the gentleman tells us that now only has the city of Baltimore been wanting to get rid of this property. The impression that had been made before the Committee on Appropriations for two or three years past by advocates, in Congress and out of it, of the city of Baltimore, was that they were anxious to have the Government take over this property. I hope the committee will vote down this amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has the floor. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland complains because the Federal Government has relieved the city of Baltimore of the very considerable expense of conducting its quarantine station. That is what has occurred. The Federal Government is now paying the expense of the maintenance of the quarantine station, and the gentleman from Maryland seems to complain about it. It may be true that the Public Health Service, without any warrant, made some promises to the city of Baltimore relative to the purchase of that quarantine station. But, as the chairman of the committee has just stated, those gentlemen must have known, at the time they made that arrangement, that the committee, or the subcommittee at least, was of the opinion that in these times of war and stress and great expenditure we were not justified in taking over these quarantine stations and paying for them; least of all, paying for them.

There is an estimate of one million six hundred thousand and odd dollars for the acquisition of the quarantine station in New York City. The committee did not feel justified in recommending an appropriation for that purpose. The great city of Baltimore is benefiting quite as much as any other large community in the Union from the activities of the war. A very great many of them are in that general locality and vicinity, and Baltimore could very properly have continued to pay the expenses of its own quarantine station in these times of stress and very great public expense, and not have asked the Federal Government to take charge of it. It may be true that the Public Health Service officials desire to take it over, but it is very clear that if Baltimore and the Baltimore officials had not been perfectly willing to have the Federal Government take it over and incur the expense and go to the trouble of running their station, that would not have been done. Baltimore can very well wait until the Treasury is in a little better condition, and New York, also, before asking the Federal Government not only to relieve them from the cost of running these stations, which is very considerable, but also to pay for them.

I think possibly it is wise to have the Federal Government eventually take over all of the quarantine stations, but there is some doubt in regard to that. But my opinion, as I expressed it in the Boston case, was and is now, in the Baltimore case and in the New York case, that all of these cities and their good citizens have a good deal of nerve when they ask the Federal Government to relieve them from an enormous financial obligation and from a very great deal of administrative trouble and then pay them a very fat and juicy price for the property that they turn over, the turning over of which results in relieving them of large expenditures.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman in all sincerity that Baltimore never tried to persuade the Government to take over this quarantine station, but the Government wanted to carry out the very idea that the gentleman has expressed of having all of these quarantine stations under the Public Health Service, and they got Baltimore to appoint appraisers and to agree upon this sum. Now, Baltimore has carried out its contract, has delivered the property, and the Secretary of the Treasury has asked that the money be appropriated to pay for it.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Public Health Service has taken action that it had no authority to take, this Congress should not be coerced in that way, and I do not think it will be coerced in that way. Furthermore, I repeat that it is asking a good deal, and would be asking a good deal even in time of peace and with an overflowing Treasury, to ask that the Federal Government pay for the relief given to these cities when they turn over their quarantine stations to the United States Government. Undoubtedly we will take them over eventually, but in the meantime Baltimore is faring very well indeed in being relieved of the cost and trouble of running the station.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

All taxes heretofore or hereafter lawfully assessed by any body politic against money or other property held by the Alien Property Custodian shall be paid out of such money or other property, and if that be insufficient, shall be charged thereto and paid out of any other moneys or properties required from the same enemy or ally of enemy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERLEY] to the concluding words of this paragraph:

And paid out of any other moneys or properties required from the same enemy or ally of enemy.

Does that mean "required" or "acquired"? It would seem to me that the word "acquired" would be the proper one. I do not know of any provisions of law which "require" money or other property from the enemy or their allies.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the reason the word "required" was used was because in the act creating the alien-property custodian and defining his duties, it is required that property of the enemy or allies of the enemy shall be turned over to him. The language is practically in the form in which it was prepared by the counsel for the alien-property custodian. I think it ought to be "required," though frankly it does not read very smoothly. Without further consideration I think it would be a mistake to change it to "acquired."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think the word "required" is in the law. We had to go over that the other day, and I remember we suggested that the word "requested" or "demanded" be put in its place. The alien custodian makes out a requirement that certain property be turned over to him.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have just been handed a copy of the law, and I find that the word "required" runs through the act. For instance, it reads:

If the President shall so require any money or other property owned by or belonging to or held for, by, or on account of or on behalf of or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this language says moneys or properties required from the same enemy or ally of enemy.

Now, we do not require the enemy to turn over that property.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, we do. That is exactly what we do. We require that the property that belongs to any national of an enemy or an ally of the enemy shall be turned over.

Mr. WALSH. We only require the alien in whose custody or charge that property is to turn it over.

Mr. SHERLEY. No matter whether it is in the custody of an alien or not, if it belongs to a national of the enemy or an ally of the enemy, then under the act we require it to be turned over to the alien property custodian. I think the gentleman will find that the language is right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and including not exceeding $15,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $3,500,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

I am quite sure that nobody who has given any attention to this very important measure can conclude that the committee in framing it have not sought to economize in the conduct of the various departments of the Government which are not intimately associated with our war activities. In many instances they have reduced the appropriations very materially, and so in offering this motion I do not wish to have it considered as in any wise a criticism of the committee who have recommended a continuation of this appropriation. But let me direct the attention of the committee to the fact that here is a work costing millions of dollars annually, providing for the valuation of the railroads of this country, and for this year we are asked to appropriate $3,515,000 in addition to any unexpended balance. This work started several years ago and has dragged along from year to year. The purpose of it was to secure as nearly as could be some estimate of the value of the rail carriers of the country, and it has been contended that now, in view of the Government operation of the railroads, the Government certainly ought to know something about their value. That possibly is true. My criticism is that the work now has continued so long that the values in every other line of industry and every kind of property have advanced to such an extent that work done five years ago in estimating the value of railroad property in the far West, or even near the congested centers, will be of but little real value. I have not heard of any method or scheme whereby the commission can bring that work up to date, so to speak, or can by any estimate ascertain what the value of the properties are at the present time.

Now, if it is intended to be urged in the future, when the war shall have been won, that the Government shall take over the railroads and that we shall be launched on a program of Government ownership, this work of valuation which has been done during the last five years can not be of any controlling benefit, nor can it enter into the computation for fixing the price to be paid to the carriers, because this valuation, as I understand it, is only the physical valuation of the railroad property, and in estimating this no attempt has been made to place or attempt to place a value upon corporations as going concerns.

It seems to me whether that be true or not, here is an opportunity to economize to the extent of $3,500,000. When we are appropriating millions for purposes intimately connected with the war, and even if this valuation is to be taken into account later, one year's cessation of it, or two years, or its cessation from now until the completion of the war, would not, it seems to me, seriously affect the report which will be made at some distant day by the commission.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the statement submitted a few days ago in compliance with the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], to ascertain the number of employees under this branch of the Government service who had been exempted from military service on account of services to the United States, shows that a large number of these exempted employees are designated as civil engineers doing this kind of work?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is true. It is well known that this commission employs a large force of men in the field, some of whom are civil engineers and expert engineers. The Government is in need of their services in our war work. The statement submitted in response to the resolution which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] mentions, shows that here is a large number of men assigned to that class of work by the Interstate Commerce Commission that might properly be assigned to work in connection with the military activities, and it is for this reason, I think, this paragraph ought to be stricken out, that we may economize by dispensing with this appropriation at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] wish to be heard?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, one of the real difficult problems that confronted the committee in the preparation of this bill was to determine what activities and to what extent such activities should continue now in these times of war, when there should be a conservation both of money and energy on the part of the people of the country, so as to use it for the one primary purpose of winning the war. Therefore, I am not without sympathy with the gentleman from Massachusetts in making his motion, even though I differ with him as to the wisdom of the application of that view to the particular matter in issue.

This field work is 70 per cent finished. It will be completed in January, 1920. The office work should be completed a year later than that. The work has been so conducted as to enable it when completed in its entirety to represent the value of the roads at the time of the completion of the whole work. There is proposed now a division whose special duty it will be to check up the additions made by railroads in the way of expenditure for betterments and improvements so that not only their returns but the checking of other returns will give the Government a knowledge of the actual value of such property.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if in his opinion, when the commission finishes its work, the report furnished by the commission will give the valuation of the railroad property at the date of the publication of the report.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is my understanding that it will.

Mr. JUUL. How will the commission get at the increase of advance and of value from the date of the extension of the work until they finish?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not able to answer the gentleman exactly.

Mr. JUUL. Approximately?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was gone into a year ago or two years ago when the same objection was made that the time taken in the valuation of the road would make the valuation worthless. I am prepared to state, on the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that they are so valuing and gathering such data as to enable them to make a report that will be current at the time it is made.

Now, if the gentleman will permit, no one is quite wise enough in this day of rapid change of governmental activity and governmental thought to say what will be the policy of this Nation touching railroads. That it is never going to be quite what it was I think all of us will agree. Personally I hope, and have always hoped, that it would not be necessary for the Government to become the permanent owner of the railroads. I believe the time will come when there will be permitted such consolidation of the railroads as will make possible these economies that are not possible under the competitive system, and that that will be done under such regulations as will safeguard the public. But whether the development takes such a line or takes the line of complete Government ownership, or goes back into the old status that existed prior to the war, this is certain: A knowledge of the values of these roads upon the part of the Government will be fundamentally essential in order properly to control and regulate such railroads.

Mr. JUUL. I wish to say to the gentleman that I realize the necessity of having a valuation.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that be true, being in this work, which is 70 per cent completed, I submit to the House that it is not the part of wisdom to stop it. If the report loses value because of delay in the making of a finished report, there is all the more reason why we should not add to that delay by having a cessation of the work at this particular period. We have been reading in the papers of proposals looking to the expenditure of nearly a billion of dollars upon our railroads. The country is going through a material, physical transformation greater than has happened in two or three decades, and in less than two years there will have been greater changes made in the routes of trade, in the movement of commodities, in port facilities, in the habits of the people, than have occurred in any 20 years previously. With that tremendously rapid evolution it did not seem to the committee the part of wisdom to stop this work. I am in sympathy with the viewpoint that wants to conserve the energies of the Nation for the primary object of winning the war, and yet we can not carry that thought so far as to stop all other activities.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. What was the estimated cost of this work in the beginning, and how much have we already expended and what will it require to complete it?

Mr. SHERLEY. The estimated cost depended on who made the estimate. I personally made an estimate which was pretty close to what we are about to expend. We have expended $12,800,000 and we are carrying $3,500,000 in this bill, which would give a total of $16,300,000. I suspect that, first and last, it will cost about $20,000,000 to get a physical valuation of the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for just a moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. I never deceived myself when the matter was under consideration on the floor and we heard talk of a few million dollars for this work. I think I could hunt the RECORD up in which I spoke of the fact that it would cost much more than that, and it is only fair to say of Judge Prouty, who has had the directing charge of this work, that he also in his estimates never put them at anything like the low figure that some of the extreme advocates of the work placed it at.

Mr. AUSTIN. Was not this original proposition brought forward by Senator LA FOLLETTE, and was there not an estimate at that time made which is considerably lower than the amount stated?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall whether Senator LA FOLLETTE was the mover in the matter. I know that he was one of the advocates of it, and it may be that he and others made estimates very much lower; but for a number of years past the House has known pretty accurately what this work was costing and was going to cost. I think the hearings of last year show practically the same as they do now. I am advised that the original estimates ran from a minimum of $12,000,000 to a maximum of $20,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that his time be extended for a minute longer.

Mr. WALSH. Make it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Kentucky will be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. JUUL. When this work is finished and we have the report of the commission, will we have the valuation of every mile of railway within the country, rolling stock and stations and engines and all.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will find on page 425 of the hearings, I think it is, a statement as to the amount of work that has been done, the mileage and the roads over which it is being done. There are approximately 250,000 miles of railroad in the country, and there have been completed about 175 miles of roadway, and that includes, of course, not only the road beds, but the stations, rolling stock, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a fact that the railroads whose property is being valued also carry a number of employees or have heretofore who have cooperated with the Government officials and experts in ascertaining the valuation.

Mr. SHERLEY. The word "cooperate" perhaps is a little strong. This is the fact. The railroads have been taking their own valuations and have been having their own employees make reports as a basis for checking and challenging the Government reports and there have been from time to time and there are now a number of matters in dispute, some of them having been disposed of and some not, between the railroads and the commission as to the basis of valuation. Those are matters of argument and adjustment and finally of decision and presumably as to fundamental matters in the last analysis will be subject to appeal. But this work of the railroads is work that is necessary for them to do and in large measure will be done irrespective of the governmental work.

Mr. WALSH. But now that the Government has taken over the control and operation of the railroads it would seem to be unnecessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that would not affect it at all, because while the Government has taken over the operation of the railroads, it has not acquired the property. Therefore it is to the owners of the railroads just as important, and perhaps more important, that they should know something of the cost and value of their property, something as to expenditure. I do not understand that the Government in operating the railroads now takes the position of owner in the sense that it is solely interested in what moneys are expended upon the roads or what record is kept of the values of the property.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Government is paying these employees that are making this valuation for the owners of the roads. I think the gentleman will find that the civil engineer force of the various roads is on the Government pay roll, even though they may be doing this work for the particular benefit of the railroad owners, the stockholders.

Mr. SHERLEY. This, of course, is what is happening. I take it that there are certain expenses of the railroads that are being allowed as a proper charge in connection with the final adjustment between the railroads and the Government, which perhaps bears no direct value to the Federal Government as the operator of the railroads. And yet it would be manifestly inequitable for the Federal Government to say to the railroads we will only allow as one expense incident to the railroad such expenses as are of value to us, and the basis of compensation could not, of course, in equity be fixed on any such plan as that.

Mr. WALSH. But does not the gentleman think it seems rather paradoxical that the Government should be paying the Interstate Commerce Commission for putting a valuation upon these properties of the railroads and at the same time be paying experts and engineers employed by the railroads to put the valuation upon the same property for the private benefit of the stockholders of the roads?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman raises an interesting inquiry and an inquiry that is pertinent not only here but pertinent to questions such as the inspection that the Government makes as to safety appliances, and so forth.

Now, if you are going to carry your theory to its logical conclusion the Government either ought to cease doing all of the work that it has been doing heretofore under the Commerce Commission or it ought to cease permitting the railroads to do any of that sort of work, and that is predicated upon the conception of a status that I think is not warranted. The Government is not the owner of these railroads; it is the lessee, and it is the lessee under conditions that have been fixed in connection with the taking over of the roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that it can not in justice deny to railroad owners the right to take such steps as are necessary for the proper safeguard of their property and interests, and that within reason those steps must be allowed as part of the expenses of the railroad that should be taken into account when payment is made. But that is a matter that I think we can not settle here now on the floor.

Mr. WALSH. It is establishing apparently a very interesting principle which may turn into a precedent that will rise up to plague us in the future I think.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think our voting moneys to continue the valuation of railroads can not possibly make a precedent as to what Mr. McAdoo, as the officer in charge of the railroads, shall do touching allowances of salaries to be paid employees of the railroad. That is his problem, and for my part I have too much trouble now to take it on my shoulders.

Mr. WALSH. But if we discontinue these appropriations at the present time we might avoid the complication that I think may arise.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not so see it. I think the probabilities are that the railroads will have to continue the work just as much and probably even more so, because they can not afford to go ahead and have money spent on the railroads, not knowing something of their valuation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7237) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9612. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 9160. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4557) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIARION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I think there is one matter that should be kept in mind in connection with this work of valuation. At the close of the war some action will have to be taken with regard to the railroads. What it is to be we do not know. It would be a bold man indeed who would venture to guess at this time as to what the final determination in Congress on that subject will be, but at any rate in the settlement of that question it will be tremendously important to have all the information obtainable relative to the value of the property. Just how valuable this information we are securing through the Bureau of Valuation will be we can none of us say at this time. There are wide differences of opinion on the question, but at any rate it will be the only information we have on the subject, and it is tremendously important that we shall have it and have the work approximately completed. It was in that view of the case that we believe that the committee was fully justified in continuing this work even in time of war when we are utilizing some men in this work who would otherwise be engaged in war service or in productive enterprises. The work will be completed if appropriations are carried on in a regular and orderly way within a couple of years at the outside. I am firmly convinced that it would be very unwise to suspend the work of valuation at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses; equipment, maintenance, and operation of research laboratory, and construction of additional buildings necessary in connection therewith; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, watchmen, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, shall not exceed $43,000; in all, $200,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to furnish office space to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics in governmental buildings occupied by the Signal Corps.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to this appropriation. It seems to be a distinctively scientific investigation that is to be made. Has this committee anything to do with the production of aircraft—that is to say, does it supervise in any way the designing of the aeroplanes that we expect and have expected to be furnished our military forces?

Mr. SHERLEY. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics was created several years ago and was to be composed of men of scientific attainments who study the purely scientific questions in connection with aeronautics and to whom should be referred any matter for study and investigation that the Army and Navy or other governmental agencies dealing particularly with the question may desire. The committee took occasion to have some very interesting testimony, covering quite a number of pages, from Dr. Stratton, of the Bureau of Standards, Dr. Walcott, and also from some gentlemen engaged in aircraft work on the part of the Army and Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Is that Mr. Walcott of the Smithsonian?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. That testimony, I think, will interest the gentleman by throwing some light upon many matters that have been the subject of controversy touching the aeroplane program. This committee does not undertake to function on any military problems in connection with aeronautics, but they do endeavor to test out and to solve problems that arise in connection with construction and flight and to be of such help and aid in the way of advice as is possible. Questions of the effect of the rarification of air in high altitudes, upon the action of moisture, upon the cooling system, the lubricating system, the effect upon propellers, and matters of that sort, are gone into. According to their statement and the statements of these other gentlemen they have been of value in the solution of these problems.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is not the only source the Government has for information upon those matters, is it? The Signal Corps, of course, knows all about those things, I assume.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not the only source, but it is the only governmental scientific agency that has been created for dealing with these matters.

Mr. WALSH. They only give this advice when they are asked. They have no authority——

Mr. SHERLEY. They have no power to direct the doing of things, but there is on the committee a representative of the Army and Navy, and presumably there is brought to the committee information as to the production side and the problems that are occurring there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for just one minute in order to ask another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether this advisory commission had anything to do with or whether it passed upon the motive power of any of the airplanes we are building?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is some interesting testimony on the part of Dr. Stratton and Dr. Walcott touching the Liberty motor. They had nothing to do, I think, in designing it, but they have been parties to the tests of some parts of it and of the completed motor, and have testified as to their judgment of its value.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Is it not a fact that the Bureau of Standards does a good deal of this same character of investigating, and this is rather auxiliary to the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know just which way you would put it, whether the Bureau of Standards is auxiliary to it or it to the Bureau of Standards. Dr. Stratton, at the head of the Bureau of Standards, is a member of this advisory committee, and the Bureau of Standards is frequently the workshop for the doing of work suggested by this committee and paid for by this committee out of funds that have been allowed it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, the Bureau of Standards has been long recognized as the one branch of our Government service to carry on all manner of investigations of this character.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this committee does not undertake in any way to usurp the normal or even the present unusual activities of the Bureau of Standards. But as a committee it considers the problem from the standpoint of scientific inquiry and research, and then frequently suggests and sometimes inaugurates at the Bureau of Standards those actual experiments that will solve or help to solve the problem that has been presented to them.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, my idea is not to criticize——

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that.

Mr. McKENZIE. But is not this an effort or an attempt to in a way decentralize the functions of the Bureau of Standards by engrafting on one new additional body to do independent investigating, and will it not add to the burdens of the Government in the future by overhead charges?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to say it will not add to the burdens of the Government, because all of these committees and commissions do, but I think it was not ever created with the idea of in any way taking from the Bureau of Standards its legitimate work. However, there is certain work in connection with aeronautics that the Bureau of Standards could not do except as there might be sent to it——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Except as there might be sent to it a problem physically to work out and test. But there are a number of things the Bureau is not equipped for doing, and that these gentlemen will endeavor to have done. They expect to make certain experiments down near Newport, at Langley Field. This committee had nothing to do with originating that committee. It was created by law. It has had an appropriation heretofore. It came to us with a regularly submitted estimate. We did not allow everything that was asked, but it made a statement in its own behalf that is exceedingly interesting, and I think the testimony of Dr. Stratton, Dr. Walcott, Gen. Squier, Admiral Taylor, and Col. Deeds, touching the aeroplane situation and the problems they undertake to deal with, is of interest and of value in this whole matter that has been so much the subject of controversy and dispute.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Some time back we had under consideration the question of a boat by John Hays Hammond, jr., electrically controlled or wirelessly controlled. We passed certain legislation about that. If the gentleman is informed, I would like to know what was developed out of it. It is a little aside from the subject under discussion, but I am curious to know how it developed.

Mr. SHERLEY. The final determination as to whether or not the complete invention by Mr. Hammond should be acquired by the Government at the price stated in the legislation that authorized the matter has not been arrived at. You will recall that that legislation called for a joint board of Army and Navy officers and a favorable report by them, which report should be approved by the President, before the money should be paid. I had something to do with the legislation, and we safeguarded it in that way. That experimentation is going on, and going on in connection particularly with its use with aeroplanes. I do not feel at liberty to state just exactly what has developed, but I think this is true, that, aside from the use of the invention in the way of control of torpedoes or other weapons of defense, there has been developed and is now being used such system of wireless control as is of marked value to the Army and Navy in connection with wireless, altogether aside from the use that was first thought of in connection with the invention.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Museum: For cases, furniture, fixtures, and appliances required for the exhibition and safe-keeping of collections, including necessary employees, $15,000;

For heating, lighting, electrical, telegraphic, and telephonic service, $55,000;

For continuing preservation, exhibition, and increase of collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and from other sources, including necessary employees, all other necessary expenses, and not exceeding $5,500 for drawings and illustrations for publications, $300,000;

For repairs of buildings, shops, and sheds, including all necessary labor and material, $10,000;

For purchase of books, pamphlets, and periodicals for reference, $2,000;

For postage stamps and foreign postal cards, $500;

In all, National Museum, $382,500.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. PLATT. Nobody appreciates more fully than I do a good deal of the work done by the Smithsonian Institution. Much of it is work in which I am interested, but I wondered whether in these times of war it is wise to continue these appropriations, not that the money amounts to so much, but could not a lot of the clerical assistants be transferred to other work at this time?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, if the gentleman could have been present at the hearings and heard the pitiful pleas made for many things that we could not consider for a moment—for the reason the gentleman has suggested—that in war times it is not wise to be doing such things—I think he perhaps would be in sympathy with what we have carried. We have tried only to carry along those things that could not be interrupted without a real loss. For instance, the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature is a catalogue that has a tremendous value, and its value is dependent upon the completeness of it, and it is a work that goes along year after year and could not be stopped without materially, if not permanently, impairing the value of the work.

As to the Astrophysical Observatory, there has just recently been an eclipse of the sun. The gentleman may recall that we carried, a year ago, a provision of several thousand dollars for some special observations of that. These men, who have spent their lives in that sort of work and who are fitted for no other work, if denied the power to continue to a slight extent their observations, would think that all of their work and its continuity and its value had gone to smash. The committee has carefully refrained from in any way increasing in the slightest degree the activities; we have curtailed the activities. What we have presented here represents neither in money nor in men a sufficient outlay as to interfere with the conduct of the war in any material way, and the testimony before the committee was that practically all of the nations at war were, at least to the extent of activities of this sort, continuing their scientific work.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Has this anything to do with the appropriations made for the Naval Observatory?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not here.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not true that the appropriation for the Naval Observatory carried with it the right to investigate this eclipse and pay the expense out of that appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no doubt of it, and I have no doubt that not only that observatory and the Astrophysical Observatory, but a hundred others in America made observations and examinations, and that the value of any one work is dependent in large measure upon the checking of it given by virtue of the others.

Mr. BLAND. And the Naval Observatory people discovered the new star by reason of the expenditures made by Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know as to that.

Mr. BLAND. They did. I found it out last night.

Mr. PLATT. The item on line 21 of page 44 is for continuing preservation, exhibition, and increase of collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and so forth, $300,000. Those expeditions, as a rule, take young men, do they not? I am greatly interested in them. I would not like to see them cut off, but I doubt the wisdom of some of this work at this time.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not for an expedition. That is for preserving and exhibiting the collections that have already been obtained as the result of previous explorations.

Mr. PLATT. And their classification, and so forth?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. There is a great deal of material in the Smithsonian Institution that has never been completely classified or arranged for exhibition. The statement was made that much of it would suffer irreparable loss if the institution did not continue its work upon them and preserve them for permanent exhibition. They asked for more money than we gave them. We cut them down.

Now, the men who are engaged in this work are, many of them, men who have passed the meridian of life, who have given 20 or 30 years of their lives to just this particular line of work—of curing and preserving and mounting specimens—and not to supply the money would simply mean to break up this organization. Some of these men have been working for years upon very meager salaries, and they continue their labors out of a scientific devotion to their work that takes no account of their personal profit.

Mr. PLATT. I know that is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. They would be useless individuals, like Othello, with their occupation gone, if they will not have this work to do.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LONDON. Just to make an observation. The distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is called upon to know everything and to advise us on everything, including scientific matters, has done very well in his reply to the gentleman from New York.

I want to make this observation that some field of human endeavor must be kept free from the spirit of war. The realm of science should be saved from the malady of war. Let there be somewhere in society a group of people who shall be privileged to forget that men are fighting now. Let them deal with the world-wide, universal, abstract propositions that are good for all time, that are beautiful for all time, that are true for all time. Let us save the scientist at least from the horrors of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flood control: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

Mississippi River, $5,670,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$5,670,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$8,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Amendment offered by Mr. HUMPHREYS: Page 68, line 24, strike out "$5,670,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,000,000."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied there has been some mistake in this item because it fails to take care of the work that is authorized and which the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Engineers say is absolutely necessary in order to carry on the work as directed by the flood-control act. I will read a letter which I received from the Chief of Engineers on this subject. He says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, June 13, 1918.

Hon. BENJAMIN G. HUMPHREYS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: 1. In response to your oral inquiry inviting my attention to the fact that the item carried in the pending sundry civil bill for flood-control work on the Mississippi River provides only $5,650,000 instead of the estimate of $10,000,000 submitted by the War Department for this work, I have the honor to state that the estimate of $10,000,000 was only submitted after careful consideration of the needs of this work, and, as in the case of other items, was viewed in the light of existing war conditions, which require all estimates to be reduced to the lowest limit deemed compatible with a due regard to the public interests involved.

2. Information received from the president of the Mississippi River Commission indicates that the sums already offered by levee boards as their share of levee work, together with the bank revetment and dredging works that are most urgently needed, will require an appropriation of at least $8,000,000. This sum, however, would make practically no provision for contingencies which may arise, nor would it permit the full prosecution of the work in accordance with the authority given in the flood-control act which is deemed so important in view of the enormous interests involved. I believe that, if practicable, the full $10,000,000 should be provided for this important work.

Very respectfully,

W. M. BLACK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

I realize, of course, that in the emergency which confronts us we must shave all appropriations below what we expected to get and would have insisted upon and no doubt would have gotten in normal times. With that in view I took up this matter with the engineers, and after going over it very carefully they said that the hazard was too great; that they could not and would not indorse any proposition to reduce this amount below $8,000,000. The items which go to make this up are—first, $3,400,000 of revetment work, which the commission and the engineers agree is absolutely essential to preserve the work that has been done, because if the banks are permitted to cave and the levee to tumble into the river we not only will have the disaster of an overflow, but much of the work that has already been done will be wiped out and will have to be done over again.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. How much of this work has already been done?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Since the flood-control bill was passed?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The flood-control bill was approved on the 1st of March, 1917. Prior to that time appropriations had been carried for this work at the rate of $6,000,000 a year in the river and harbor bill, and the river and harbor bill for the Sixty-fourth Congress, last session, carried that item. That failed in the Senate, as did many other appropriation bills, the sundry civil bill among the number, so that when we met in the extra session last year the sundry civil bill was simply reintroduced exactly as it had passed, with no provision for this at all, and it went to the Senate. In the meantime the River and Harbor Committee had been deprived of jurisdiction in the matter by the passage of the flood-control act. When the sundry civil bill got to the Senate the Senate put this item in just as the river and harbor bill had carried it, to take care of the work for this year, $6,000,000, assuming that this pending sundry civil bill would, as contemplated when the flood-control act was passed, be the first to undertake to carry out the provisions of the flood-control act. That answers the gentleman's question. There was $6,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. There was $6,000,000 spent there last year?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; that is, $6,000,000 by the Government.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I mean. Now, how much by private interests?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The private interests contributed in the neighborhood of $3,000,000. Under the terms of the law private interests are required to put up $1 for every $2 put into levees. As a matter of fact they do contribute toward the revetment, and in some districts they build levees where the Government does not contribute at all. One of the levee districts in my congressional district, for instance, is just now about two-thirds through with a $800,000 contract for levee work that the Government would not contribute to at all, so it is something more than $3,000,000.

Now, under the terms of the flood-control act they have levied their taxes and raised $2,800,000, which they have tendered to the commission, but under this bill the commission will not have enough money to put up against it; because, when we do anything, the first essential is to revet the banks. That is $3,400,000 there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Now, we have to keep the channel open. They have estimated $1,000,000 for dredging and for various channel work and miscellaneous expenses. They propose to cut that down to $600,000, which they say is as far as they can come. That makes $4,000,000 for revetment work and channel work, leaving only $1,600,00 for levees. Now, we propose to put up 2 to 1. The local interests have come up with theirs. They have levied their taxes and raised the money, and they have got $2,800,000, which would make $10,000,000. But, as I say, we are willing now to make it $8,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Are you not experiencing the same shortage of labor that they are elsewhere in the country?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; it is very difficult to get labor, and the work is more expensive.

Mr. SNELL. Will they be able to get labor so that the full amount can be expended during the coming year?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; they could expend $10,000,000, but they will not get as much work done as they ought to get and as they would get done in normal times. For instance, probably $6,000,000 last year would do as much work as $7,500,000 now, for there is an increase of at least 25 per cent in the cost of the labor. This levee district in my congressional district, just mentioned, has this contract for $800,000 for levee work, which was something like half completed. A month or so ago the levee board raised the contractor's price 50 per cent, because it either meant that or bankruptcy for the contractor. They raised it 50 per cent.

Now, aside from the economic waste that would come if we should have a flood next spring—and nobody can tell whether we will have one or not—I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in 1912, according to the statement of Mr. Bush, the president of the Iron Mountain road, his road had 617 miles put out of commission—300 miles of it for five months—on that one road by the flood of that year. There are nearly 4,000 miles of railroad protected by the levees. Now, the gentleman will understand that we are committed to spend this money——

Mr. SNELL. I know that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So we are not saving the money. All we are saving now by the reduction is the interest on the amount that we withhold. Can we for that amount, in this emergency, take a gambler's chance on having a flood next year that may put out of commission two or three thousand miles of railroad?

Is not that too great a chance for us to take, laying aside every other consideration? As I say, the revetment work must be done. They all agree on that. The people down there behind the levees agree to that. They say, "If you have not money to do everything, revet the banks," because otherwise where the levees are threatened they will cave into the river. Then, of course, the other amount is to go for keeping the channel open. So that will leave us only $1,600,000, whereas we have pledged those people that we are going to give them $5,600,000 for levees. In this amendment, however, I am not asking for that. I am only asking an increase of $1,800,000.

Mr. SNELL. You say the people down there have already levied their taxes?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. My friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] can explain that to you. They have already raised the money and tendered it to the commission. The commission have on hand to-day out of that last appropriation only $450,000. I have a telegram from the Mississippi River Commission that they now have on hand $450,000, and they can not spend that, and I will tell you why.

When the great floods come they must have some money on hand. They can not let it all out by contract; they try to keep $1,000,000 on hand for an emergency. In the flood of 1912, in addition to the $52,000,000 worth of property that was utterly destroyed Congress was forced to appropriate a million and a quarter dollars for emergency work down there among the people who were driven from their homes and who were ruined. So that you see the unreasonableness, gentlemen—and I say it advisedly—of the gambler's chance in this matter when we withhold an appropriation which the engineers warn us is a chance that we can not afford to take.

Mr. SNELL. Why does the Appropriation Committee cut it down if the engineers recommended this sum?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I am of the opinion that the committee gave the amount given last year.

Mr. SNELL. Did they not have hearings on it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They had Col. Newcomer before them, and he asked for the $10,000,000, but they did not seem to go into all the details, I am sorry to say. I said at the start, and I repeat it, that I think they made a mistake. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have some personal knowledge of facts that perhaps may throw some light on this matter. The levee districts in the country do not entirely lie in the South, but extend up along the Mississippi River to a point in Whiteside County, about 25 miles north of the city of Rock Island, near the northern boundary line of Illinois. From that point south to the southern line of Illinois there is almost a continuous line of levees on both sides of the Mississippi River at this time. I know in the particular district I represent of 170 miles along the Mississippi River, about one-half of the entire distance on my side is protected by levees.

Now, this is the situation: It is very apparent, it is true, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has told you, that all the money now proposed to be appropriated by this item will be required for revetment work and administration expenses, except a little over $1,000,000. I know that in the various districts along the river this money will be required up to the amount asked for by the gentleman from Mississippi—$8,000,000—if all the work heretofore proposed is carried on to a conclusion. The Mississippi River Commission require the various communities to put up the full amount of money in cash and have it on hand in the Treasury before they will appropriate any money to spend on levees. In Illinois we have a law that provides that all this money raised for the building of levees shall be raised by special assessment upon the lands contained within the district. There is a similar law in the State of Iowa, across the river, and in some of the States farther south, but in Illinois particularly all the money is raised by special assessment against the lands in the district.

The procedure is this: As soon as they find out how much money they will need—and they find out by ascertaining how much the commission will give and, therefore, how much the district must raise—they proceed in a court of record to file a petition for an additional assessment against the land. Then there is an assessment spread, if it is allowed, against the lands of the district, and on that assessment, with the assessment as a basis, they issue bonds.

Those bonds have been issued in many districts, in my congressional district, and all up and down the river in Iowa and down South and are to-day outstanding obligations against the lands in these districts. They are paying 6 per cent interest in many cases on this money levied against their land. They are paying it year by year, and if this money is not forthcoming then the Government has induced them by its action to do a thing which is absolutely valueless and brings no results to them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. If I understand, this is simply asking the Government to appropriate a part of the $45,000,000 that has already been authorized. This amount of money the Government has some time got to pay, and if they pay a million or two more now than the bill provides for they will have so much less to pay hereafter; it is costing the Government nothing at all more to pay it now than it will two years hence, except probably the interest.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Here is another proposition: There are thousands of acres of the best land in the United States contained in these levee districts. In my country the best land we have is there. Last year in one district 5,000 acres of this land were planted in crops and were destroyed to the value of $200,000 because of the failure of those who built the levees to build them high enough to resist the high waters that came last year. There has been an appropriation made by the Mississippi River Commission for this district, and if the money is not forthcoming they can not reclaim those levees. It is only keeping good faith up and down the Mississippi River for the Government to fulfill its obligations when it has induced the landowners to invest their money, bond their land, and put up the cash from time to time. I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi will be adopted and permit the Government to fulfill those obligations and permit these lands to be reclaimed, so that we can raise as much as is possible. We have spent millions of dollars in this Congress that will not do as much good as it will to take care of this matter now. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations tried to deal as fairly with this subject as they have tried to deal with all the others. They are not infallible, but they are quite sure that the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] ought not to prevail. The hearings do not disclose such a situation in the work of this commission as will warrant us, in this time of want and shortage of labor in America, in increasing the sum $2,340,000 over last year's work. We provided in the bill $10,000 more for the Mississippi River than was provided last year. It is within the memory of Members of this House when one-half of the amount that the gentleman from Mississippi is now asking for was considered a very large amount for the Mississippi River. The time was when $2,000,000 annually expended was looked on as a very large amount. The very law which authorized this separate expenditure fixed a maximum of $10,000,000 yearly, and gentlemen seem to think that unless we go to the extreme with them they are not being treated fairly and equitably. There is not an activity in this bill unrelated to the war that shows an increase over last year proportionately to what the gentleman from Mississippi is asking from this House. It seems to me that if gentlemen who are vitally interested in this work were to come forward with reasonable criticism as to the committee's action they might receive at the hands of the committee some disposition to consider their viewpoint; but if they think that we are wrong $2,340,000, then, for my part, on behalf of the committee, I am prepared to stand by what the committee says and let the issue be tested through the last final vote that can be had upon it.

I say that not in the way of a threat, but I say it because I think something is due to the Committee on Appropriations who have worked on this matter and have had the hearings on the bill. We have endeavored to deal fairly with all of the different projects. We are making a cut of a considerable amount in connection with Alaska that does not meet with the views of those who are interested in Alaska, and yet the committee felt it was justified. I can take item after item in this bill showing cuts that have been made in matters that are of infinitely more vital importance from the standpoint of direct relationship to the safety and progress of this country than is the Mississippi River project. There is no evidence to my mind that warrants the belief that $8,000,000 can be wisely expended in the next fiscal year.

There is still another situation. Congress meets again in December. The short session adjourns on the 4th of March. If the situation in the Mississippi Valley becomes so acute as to require additional moneys the Congress will be in session, but for it now to appropriate this amount of money is to show toward this project a liberality in these war times which has been shown to no other project, and I insist that the advocates of this increase are not showing that moderation that is calculated to win converts to their judgment. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee, in making up this bill, considered this item, as it did every other item, with the utmost care. I was born on the banks of the Mississippi River, and all of my life I have lived in the valley of that great stream. I am in harmony and in sympathy with the proposition of flood control, of levee building, revetment, and protection of the banks provided in the flood-control law, under which we are making appropriations. I approached the consideration of this item with entire sympathy, with the desire to do ample and complete justice. What are the facts in regard to this work and the current appropriation for it and the situation as to the future? There was an appropriation of $6,000,000 for this work for the current year, of which $5,600,000 was apportioned to the Mississippi River. On the 1st of January there remained in the Treasury of that $5,600,000 an unexpended balance of $4,700,000, of which sum practically $2,000,000 was represented by contracts then entered into. There was then a free balance of $2,700,000 in the Treasury, and it appeared at the hearings that in all probability it would not be possible to even award the contracts before the 1st of July covering the entire sum of $2,700,000 then free in the Treasury, much less do the work under those contracts. The probability is that when the fiscal year opens there will be work under contract and far from completion on the Mississippi River under the current appropriation amounting to over $3,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand from what the gentleman said was the unexpended balance last year.

Mr. MONDELL. The 1st of January the unexpended balance was $4,700,000 out of a total of $5,600,000, of which $2,700,000 was a free balance not covered by contracts, and the Chief of Engineers expressed some doubt as to whether he could enter into contracts during the balance of the fiscal year to cover all the remaining $2,700,000.

Mr. SNELL. On that basis it would be absolutely impossible to expend this money next year that has been asked for.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no sort or manner of doubt in my mind—and I think we went into this matter carefully—that it would be physically impossible to spend or waste the amount of money originally estimated.

Mr. SNELL. I understood from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] that we had expended practically the full amount.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. All but $450,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Where does the gentleman get that sum?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I get it in a telegram from the Mississippi River Commission, dated day before yesterday.

Mr. MONDELL. The hearings are very recent, and they show clearly and definitely that there was $4,700,000 on the 1st of January unexpended, of which $2,700,000 was a free balance, and in answer to questions as to whether or not it would be possible to make contracts during the remainder of the fiscal year in that amount the engineers expressed doubts as to whether it could be done.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And even if that were done there would still be a large amount of work to be done under the contracts because those contracts frequently cover two seasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. It developed in the hearings that all work under contracts which were let prior to the 1st of January would not be done at the end of the fiscal year; that in addition to that there was $2,700,000 to be utilized in new work. We all know that those contracts entered into during the last months of the present fiscal year could only be fairly under way when the new fiscal year started.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. SNELL. Would it be possible to let contracts at the present to do a great amount of work of that character?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not pretend to know as to the situation in the Mississippi River Valley, except as we know of the country generally, and we know that it is difficult to let large contracts of any sort except at very great cost. The committee was in no wise disposed to curtail this work, to check it, or to do otherwise than to allow it to proceed along reasonable and normal lines of development, but realizing there would probably be considerable free money, from two to three million dollars, of incompleted contracts at the beginning of the fiscal year, we felt that the sum we granted was under all circumstances sufficient.

The large items in this bill are in the main predicated on knowledge of the fact that Congress will be back here in December, that the next sundry civil bill will pass before the 4th of March, in all human probability, and that we can take care of any extraordinary situation at that time. Now, personally, if the balance of the committee were so disposed I should have no objection to an additional reasonable sum for this work. I realize that we are not appropriating overliberally in this item, or in many other items in the bill, but I believe we did recommend as liberally as we were justified in doing under all the circumstances. I believe we granted as large a sum as is likely to be used and utilized economically under present circumstances within the period for which the appropriation is made. At any rate, the additional sum now asked is clearly excessive and should not be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the figures "$5,670,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$6,670,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment by way of a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina as a substitute for the Humphreys amendment: Strike out the figures "$5,670,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,670,000."

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky that we add $1,000,000 so as to get together on this proposition?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that any Member who will take the trouble to read the hearings contained on pages 633 and 634 will become convinced that it is absolutely impossible for the engineers wisely to expend more than the sum I have named in my amendment. The engineer stated that he did not expect to expend the amount appropriated for this fiscal year, and that in his opinion it might go until the end of this calendar year, and now at a time when every man of our country is needed for other work certainly we should not increase the appropriation for this work more than $1,000,000, which increase is contained in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for recognition in my own right. The committee has brought in a bill which carries nearly $1,000,000,000. The committee does not claim absolute wisdom. It does claim conscientious labor extending over months. It has given all of the items that are in this bill its most careful consideration. This matter is one of importance—of importance even in this day of great events. I believe that the table on page 638 of the hearings justifies the action of the committee. Many of these gentlemen have a detailed personal knowledge of the matter that is not possessed at least by myself. Their proposal of $8,000,000 was so far out of reason that in my judgment it could not be defended. I should not have been willing to have seen it voted without having had a final roll call to test the opinion of every Member of this House; but I said to those gentlemen informally that if the committee had made a mistake and had brought in a sum that would not properly take care of the work, having all things in mind, that the committee did not want to be arbitrary and would be glad to consider the matter.

The membership of the subcommittee that dealt with this matter did consider it. We took the trouble of going over our hearings, and it became the final judgment of all of us, Republicans and Democrats, that we would be justified in agreeing upon the amount that has been named by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], but that we would not be justified in agreeing to a cent more. And in doing that we think we have gone to the extreme of liberality in connection with this work.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. In reaching the amount set forth in the item did the committee take into consideration the increased cost of working material?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. And the committee took into consideration also the increased difficulty in getting people to work and the increased reasons for not having them work at anything other than direct war work. I am perfectly willing to agree to the amendment, but I would not agree, either here or elsewhere, to a cent more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, just one word. As I said a moment ago, I believe that the sum the committee recommended is probably sufficient for this work for the period intended to be covered. I believe it is about as much as can be economically used. Conditions might arise that would require or warrant the use of a larger sum. In view of the fact that it is tremendously important work, and that there may be use for a larger sum, I am willing to agree to the increase proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, a member of the committee. I want to say in regard to it, however, that I think in doing this we are going the limit, and, for one, I should not be disposed under any circumstances to at any time agree to another penny for this work for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which touches almost every district in the country, and nearly every Member of the House is interested in some section of the bill. Now, the committee has appreciated that at this juncture we must exercise great forbearance and economy for two reasons. One is because all the energies of the country should be devoted to war purposes; and, secondly, because the ordinary expense of any improvement at this time is so much more than in normal times, and consequently the money will not accomplish as much. And I must say that most Members of the House have recognized that fact and been extremely reasonable, and in the appropriations that come to their districts have been moderate in their demands and have recognized that at this time they could not expect, and so they have not demanded of the Committee on Appropriations, and they do not intend to demand of the Committee of the Whole, that it shall be liberal in the appropriations. And I confess I am sorry that in one great appropriation like this, in which, of course, many Members of the House are interested, which applies to one section of the country, that local Members instead of recognizing that at this time we should all be moderate and economical should try to force a large appropriation upon us. I see present in this small attendance of the Committee of the Whole many Members from that section directly interested in this particular item. It may be that a majority who happen to be present just now are so interested, but I trust that they will not expect that in this item the committee is going to depart from the principle that we have tried to follow throughout, to be moderate and economical, and to recognize that under these war conditions we must restrain expenses. And whereas possibly there might be a majority in this small audience here I can not believe that a majority of the House will approve that in one sectional proposition like this we should depart from the principle which has governed the formulation of this bill. So I trust the Members directly interested will not urge this amendment which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has suggested, but will recognize that in this coming year such an appropriation would be extravagant; that we must curtail that whole type of expense; that the work would cost a great deal more this year than at any other time; and that we must all of us try to moderate our demands upon the Treasury. I trust the gentleman will not try, even, to take advantage of present conditions to urge the amendment which he has presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by way of substitute by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment by way of substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $60,000.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OSBORNE: Section 1, page 77, after the figures "$60,000" and semicolon, insert the words "for the construction and equipment of a sanitary fireproof hospital on the grounds of the Pacific Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in Los Angeles County, Cal., to be expended under the direction of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $500,000"; line 10, page 77, erase the figures "$558,500" and insert the figures "$1,058,500."

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, the National Home for Disabled Soldiers at Santa Monica has the largest number of members of any of the soldiers' homes in the United States. It has a membership of 3,500, and there are in constant attendance at the home about 2,500 survivors of the war. The hospital, with which I am personally very familiar, as I have visited it a great many times, is composed of wooden buildings three stories in height, and they are extremely dangerous. The inmates of the hospital are, many of them, in the second and third stories of these buildings, and in the event of a fire, which is quite possible, they would be in serious danger of a great disaster. I introduced a bill into the House about a year ago making this provision for a sanitary fireproof hospital. It was presented to the members of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Home, and they all agreed that it ought to be done, but they did not feel that they could ask for the amount necessary. Since then great changes have taken place, and it is altogether probable that all these soldiers' homes will be occupied soon with victims of the present war. This home ought to be put in condition for the reception of those people. We ought to have a fireproof hospital there, one that is safe and up to date, and I offer this amendment, hoping the committee will consider it favorably.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the construction of this building has not been estimated for, and it is not asked for by the board of managers, and there is no representation to the committee that it is either necessary or advisable to start a building at this time. Certainly now we should not engage in the construction of any building which is not necessary, and the board of managers, in charge of these hospitals and homes, ought to know what construction is necessary for the proper care of them. And I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that the vote on this amendment ought to be taken upon the first part of the amendment first.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have not reached line 10, and therefore it could not be considered at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first part of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OSBORNE: Section 1, page 77, after the figures "$60,000" and semicolon, insert the words: "For the construction and equipment of a sanitary fireproof hospital on the grounds of the Pacific branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in Los Angeles County, Cal., to be expended under the direction of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the second.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to withdraw the other part of the amendment. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Opening Indian reservations (reimbursable): For expenses pertaining to the opening to entry and settlement of such Indian reservation lands as may be opened during the fiscal year 1919: Provided, That the expenses pertaining to the opening of each of said reservations and paid for out of this appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States from the money received from the sale of the lands embraced in said reservations, respectively, $10,000.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back for a moment to page 52, line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which is understood by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 52, line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANFORD: Page 52, line 10, strike out line 10 and insert "For rebuilding main roads, including one public road running through the arsenal grounds, $32,000."

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to explain very briefly the purpose of this amendment at this time. It is to include in the bill an item an estimate for which came from the War Department too late to reach the committee before the bill was drawn.

The purpose for this increase in the appropriation is to restore an old road that the Government built with an appropriation carried in a bill similar to this in 1892. By reason of the unusual work that is being done at that arsenal at this time that road has become comparatively impassable. Those old blocks that were put in 25 years ago have sunk and the road is so rough that ordinary transportation is almost impossible over it, and the Government officials, the War Department, and the commandant at the arsenal and all those acquainted with the situation united in urging upon the committee the consideration of this item at this time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have received a letter from Gen. Williams, the Acting Chief of Ordnance, relative to the road to which the gentleman has referred. A road runs through the arsenal that is a main line of travel and is used by the arsenal in conveying material to and from the plant. From the statement made in the letter of Gen. Williams, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York seems to be a proper one, and the committee has no objection to its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, United States Geological Survey, $1,260,215.50.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. I do that for the purpose of saying a word about the item for topographic surveys, $142,196. Probably most of the members of the committee are aware of the fact that the topographic mapping of the Geological Survey is now being done almost wholly along the Atlantic coast, particularly the south Atlantic coast, and somewhat on the Pacific and Gulf coasts, and that the general topographic mapping in the interior of the country has, for the time being, been very largely suspended. The committee would have granted a considerably larger appropriation for this work had it not been for the fact that the Army appropriation bill carries a very considerable appropriation—$800,000, I think it is—for topographic surveys.

Mr. SHERLEY. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as I recall.

Mr. MONDELL. As a large part of that sum will be transferred to the Geological Survey and will be expended by the Geological Survey in the topographic mapping that they will carry on this year, the committee did not feel justified in carrying as large an appropriation in this bill as otherwise would have been carried. We believe that the sums herein provided, together with such sums as will be turned over to the survey by the War Department, will be quite sufficient to carry on all the necessary war work and to continue such other work as may now be under way in other parts of the country. There was no disposition to curtail the activities of the Geological Survey in this regard. They will, as a matter of fact, be largely extended this year over their activities in ordinary times.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Not exactly on this item, but I wish to refer to the appropriation for testing conditions favorable to the boring of artesian wells. Can the gentleman give the committee any information as to what the department has been doing in that regard? How has that money been expended? I have had the matter up a number of times with the Geological Survey, to get them to make some tests in my districts, but so far I have been unsuccessful, and I would like to have some information concerning their operations.

Mr. MONDELL. The probability is that the gentleman can get very much more detailed information from the survey than I can possibly give him. The appropriation has not been large, and it has not been possible to do a very great deal of actual drilling. The committee felt that at this time—and we think the people of the survey were of that opinion—we would scarcely be justified in making very large expenditures on that character of work.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman know whether or not they have done any drilling, and, if so, where it has been done?

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is that they did some drilling, but I will not be real certain about that. They anticipated doing some, and, I think, did so, but I am not clear as to that.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have presented requests to the Geological Survey from year to year since I have been in Congress, and yearly I have been informed that possibly next year, when they will secure larger appropriations, they may be able to give some attention to my district. I think that generally is the experience of other Members from the public-land States.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that it would require a very considerable appropriation to do any very extensive drilling. That is rather extensive work, and the Congress so far has not shown a disposition to make very large appropriations for that purpose. Generally, as my friend knows, private parties undertake drilling for one purpose or another. That develops the situation with regard to the presence of artesian water. By and large and in the main it is not a work that we should engage in in a very large way out of appropriations from the Public Treasury. A certain amount of that work may be essential where there are conditions warranting the belief that artesian waters are available but where there is no incentive on the part of individuals to make the test. My own hope is that in the future we may be able to continue such work, to a certain limited extent at least, in regions of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation as to the causes of mine explosions, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to the mining industry, and including all equipment, supplies, and expenses of travel and subsistence, $370,000.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 23, page 93, the figures "$370,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$387,210."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 93, line 23, strike out "$370,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$387,210."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have only asked to increase this appropriation for the Bureau of Mines to the extent of $17,210. This is certainly a modest request, since we are all the time talking about millions and billions here. Some one has suggested that I would stand a better chance of getting the amendment passed if it was for a much larger sum, but I feel that the justness of the proposition will appeal to you, and I ask your careful attention for only a very few moments while I explain to you the peculiar situation that requires the adoption of this amendment.

As some of you know, we have in the south central portion of Indiana some of the largest coal mines in the world. We have mines producing 7,000 tons of coal a day. They are not hillside, ground-hog mines, but they go down into the bowels of the earth and mine out thousands of acres of coal, which lays almost parallel with the surface.

Different kinds of gases are found in these veins of coal, and it is not an uncommon occurrence for the mines to explode when this accumulated gas comes in contact with the miners' lamps or electric sparks. Some of these large mines have been known to be sealed for many weeks after the explosion because the coal in the mine was set on fire. Lives are frequently lost and great damage done to property. One of the most recent and destructive explosions, which closed one of our mines for several weeks, fortunately occurred when there were only a few of its several hundred employees in the mine.

In this field in south central Indiana there has been enormous development in the last few years, and the development is increasing, but it is very much handicapped for the lack of men and mine equipment. As new development progresses there is an increased probability of gas explosion.

Aside from the humanitarian standpoint which requires the passage of this amendment, I urge that it is distinctly a war necessity. We must encourage men to work in the mines. We must let them know that this Government, while praising them for their patriotism and urging them to speed up the coal production, is willing to do everything in its power to protect their lives and the happiness of their wives and children. The mining occupation at the best is a hazardous one. I have lived almost all of my life among the coal miners of Indiana, and I am proud to say that during all of my public life I have been trying to make conditions better for them.

There are almost a dozen miners' rescue stations and nine well-equipped rescue railroad cars scattered over the United States, and some of them are in places where there is probably but little possibility of gas explosions compared to the section of Indiana I speak of. In this great bituminous field, where the possibility of a disastrous explosion is imminent, the Federal Government has given but little attention. The rescue car which is stationed at Evansville is an old, worn-out Pullman, which, according to the testimony of Director Manning, is so old that the railroads ofttimes refuse to haul it.

What we need is a centrally located mine-rescue training station, where proper helmets and appliances are kept in repair and ready for use in training as well as in actual rescue work.

Mr. Manning has assured me that if this amendment passes he will established this training station in the most convenient and most advisable place in the heart of this coal field where the training is most needed and the danger is most imminent.

The operators of my district, and especially in Knox County, recognizing the imminent danger to the lives of their men and to their own property, have made some steps in the direction of rescue and training work, but we need the help of the Federal Government to buy an auto truck and to furnish at Government expense the necessary apparatus and chemicals, together with at least five expert employees, who will devote their time to educating miner and operator as how best to defend themselves against these terrible explosions which frequently visit the bituminous coal mines in our section of the country.

The Director of Mines, Mr. Van. H. Manning, is thoroughly awake to the alarming conditions in this section of the State, and during my frequent visits to see him concerning Government aid for the mines in my district he has assured me of his earnest desire to be of assistance and explained to me the necessity of this appropriation. On May 22, 1918, he wrote me a letter in which he stated that he favored my proposal and would give me an estimate of the cost of the equipment of the rescue station I desire. I read you his letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, May 22, 1918.

Hon. OSCAR E. BLAND,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLAND: I received your letter of May 15 regarding the establishment of a mine-rescue station by the Federal Government, to be located in the most convenient place in southern Indiana where the most gaseous mining district is found.

The bureau has the following fixed mine safety stations: Pittsburgh, Pa.; Birmingham, Ala.; McAlester, Okla.; Jellico, Tenn.; and Seattle, Wash. The personnel in each case consists of a district mining engineer and a foreman miner. These men are paid out of the lump-sum mine accident appropriation of the bureau, the salary of the district mining engineer ranging from $2,000 to $4,000 per annum and the foreman miners from $1,500 to $1,900. In addition to these stations, there is a station at Norton, Va., established by Congress. This station has allotted to it $6,800 for the employment of a foreman miner at $1,800 and a first-aid miner at $1,500, the remaining $3,500 being for supplies and equipment. This amount was added to the lump-sum appropriation for mine accidents.

You ask my views on the necessities for and the benefits to be derived from such an institution. The bureau's experience has generally been in favor of movable stations; in other words, mine safety cars operating on railroads except in such districts where the mines can be readily reached in a short time over good roads by use of auto trucks. I am informed that the roads in the coal districts of Indiana are kept in good condition, which is favorable for the establishment of a station provided with a rescue auto truck.

The Federal Government's activities in this direction primarily have been for the education of the operators and miners in the needs and use of rescue apparatus and first-aid methods. Neither the Federal Government nor the State government should be asked indefinitely to take care of the individual rescue and safety work of operators, since such work should be the function of the operators and miners themselves.

In order that rescue work shall be effective a station must be close at hand. If any large number of men are entombed in a mine by an explosion or mine fire, they must be rescued generally within the first half hour or so, as the gases are frequently very deadly. Manifestly it would be impossible for the State or Federal Government to establish stations at every mine or every group of mines in the United States, but the initiative must be undertaken by the Government.

For many years it has been the regulation in the principal countries of continental Europe that a certain proportion of the miners must be trained in rescue and first-aid work. More recently (1911) Great Britain adopted a similar method. It is advisable that at least 10 per cent of the men of every shift on a mine be thoroughly trained and be able to act as a professional city fireman does in fighting fire.

The bureau has been asked to recommend the establishment of stations in many parts of the country, and Congress has appropriated funds for the establishment of 5 stations and 11 movable stations of cars. Eight of the latter are in service, five of which are old wooden cars which will soon have to be scrapped. There are three modern steel cars and three will shortly be completed. One of the cars is headquartered at Evansville, Ind., and circulates through western Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois. This car is an old one and can not be handled on fast trains, but will be supplanted by a modern steel car as soon as the latter can be constructed. One more car has been authorized by Congress. It is believed that with the final establishment of these cars and stations, and appropriations of ample funds to keep them going at maximum capacity, that the requirements in an educational way can be well taken care of, with possibly a few exceptional places.

The fixed stations are provided with mine rescue auto trucks. To make the station worth while it must be well equipped and well manned, and I am willing to recommend that Congress authorize the establishment of a cooperative station with the State of Indiana for educational purposes at a point deemed most appropriate as regards nearness and convenience to the most dangerous portion of the coal-mining field of Indiana.

I estimate the following annual cost of equipping, repairing, and maintaining mine rescue and first-aid equipment:

1 mining engineer		$4,000
1 foreman miner		1,800
1 first-aid miner		1,500
1 stenographer and clerk		1,500
1 laborer		900
Total for personnel		9,700
6 sets new apparatus	$810
Repairs and renewals	400
Oxygen and soda supplies	1,000
Miscellaneous equipment and renewals	500
		2,710
Travel and subsistence when away from headquarters		1,200
Grand total		13,610
Auto truck		4,000
		17,610

You will note that in the foregoing no sums are included for the erection or rental of a building or buildings or the maintenance of buildings and ground. To erect a new building to properly house such a station with suitable training galleries and with exterior walls of brick or concrete, judging from past experience, would cost at least $15,000, and the furnishing and equipping thereof about $5,000 more. To heat, light, repair, and otherwise maintain such a building I estimate that it would cost at least $5,000 per annum.

I favor the establishment of a station such as described above to be located at the most convenient place in Indiana to the most dangerous coal mines.

Quarters for the station at Norton, Va., were provided for in the public-building act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat., p. 876), in the following language:

"United States post office at Norton, Va., $75,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to provide in said building suitable quarters for a mine rescue station."

Cordially, yours,

VAN. H. MANNING, Director.

I have not asked for seventy-five or a hundred thousand dollars for the building of a new building, because I think this can be taken care of in another way. In fact, I have been assured that provision will be made for suitable headquarters for this station.

I believe if the Committee on Appropriations had been thoroughly familiar with the facts that the present bill would have provided for this station, but owing to a misunderstanding as to what the bill was to contain when it came out of committee, I did not appear before the committee to give them the facts.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. I think I ought to say, confirming what the gentleman from Indiana has said, that he spoke to me about the item when the matter was before the committee, and I misunderstood the exact character of what he desired and misled him as to the appropriation, for which I am sorry.

Mr. BLAND. I am blaming no one about the matter, and thank the gentleman for his generous statement.

Now, gentlemen, if you will allow this amendment to pass and give us this small sum, I guarantee you that the operators and miners of my district will cooperate with the Government and assist in every way toward making this expenditure one of the best business propositions contained in this bill. If the Federal Government will encourage us in Indiana, I believe the State legislature will, at its next session, make such provisions and appropriations as to fully cooperate in the splendid work of mine rescue training.

Illinois, as has been said by Mr. FOSTER, chairman of the Committee on Mines, has provided three rescue cars at State expense. Illinois is helping itself in this work now, but you must remember that the Government first helped it and it has had for many years an experimental and rescue station at Urbana, Ill.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says his mines are gaseous?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Do not the operators in those mines maintain apparatus?

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman mean in each mine?

Mr. MONDELL. At the mine or in the vicinity of the mine.

Mr. BLAND. No; they do not. Some of the operators have got together and have some equipment; but the big factor is that we need to train these men, and back of this training we need men of recognized experience and ability, men who are salaried and kept by the Government and who receive the benefits of the investigations by the Bureau of Mines, for which you are spending so much money in this appropriation bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but, in addition to that, some one ought to suggest to the gentlemen operating these mines that each and every one of them ought to have this equipment.

Mr. BLAND. They have been and they are contributing toward that equipment.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The equipment such as the gentleman is advocating is furnished to other sections of the country?

Mr. BLAND. Absolutely; in 17 different ways.

Mr. MADDEN. And there is no more important mining country than that which the gentleman represents?

Mr. BLAND. That is absolutely true.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems that when we are spending billions of dollars, much of which is wasted, we could not spend $17,000 more justly or advantageously than to provide for the protection of the lives of the miners in that section of the country from which the gentleman comes.

Mr. BLAND. I appreciate the gentleman's statement, and it it absolutely correct. Gentlemen, I promise you that if we get this appropriation Mr. Manning says that he can provide the equipment. If this amendment is adopted, and if we can get this, I assure you that we will take care of the training of the men in the mines in my State, and the State legislature will help us out next spring.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that the Government is maintaining in other sections of the country what the gentleman is asking for?

Mr. BLAND. Indeed it is.

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman represents one of the most important mining sections in the country?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Now, my colleagues, I want to give you some additional reasons why you should recognize the miners of Indiana and let them know that you are interested in their welfare. When this war was declared the coal miner, regardless of politics, nationality, or personal views, realized that the successful winning of the war largely depended upon his strong right arm in getting out the coal to supply the energies to munition the greatest army the world will ever know. He has not complained, although his task has been a hard one. He has not only given his toil uncomplainingly, but he has given his son to this great cause. No class of men in America have responded more quickly, more loyally, or more unanimously than the coal miner of the State of Indiana. When liberty bonds were to be purchased he not only contributed out of his own purse, but he voted in his local union that it should contribute, and with the same earnestness and enthusiasm the district organization voted large sums of money for the purpose of buying liberty bonds.

I desire to read to you a letter from Ed Stewart, president of District No. 11, United Mine Workers of America:

TERRE HAUTE, IND., May 6, 1918.

Mr. OSCAR BLAND,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR OSCAR: In answer to your telegram of May 4, asking me to write you a letter as to the attitude of the coal miners toward the war and liberty loan, as to how much the organization had subscribed, I will give you the best information I have. It is impossible for me to give you any way near the accurate amount subscribed in liberty bonds.

As to the attitude of the coal miners toward the war, will say while the miners as a general rule have always been opposed to war, but no more so than the ordinary American citizen, they realize now, as much as any other citizen, if not more, that this war must be fought to a final and successful conclusion. They have repeatedly gone on record as pledging to the Government of the United States their last dollar and last man, if necessary. The record in the international office shows up to this time that we have in the service of the United States about 23,000 coal miners and more yet to follow.

Most of the local unions have bought liberty bonds out of their local treasury, some to the extent of $15,000. There is scarcely a miner in this community—and I think this will hold good, taking the district over—who has not purchased a liberty bond. The district organizations have bought liberty bonds very liberally. Our district being rather weak financially, so far as the treasury is concerned, has deposited with the international organization $25,000 to be used to purchase liberty bonds. Each district deposited certain amounts for that purpose, and the total amount deposited by each district organization for that purpose was something like $800,000. The international organization has already purchased something like $100,000 worth of bonds previous to this. Illinois alone, out of its district office, has purchased $400,000 worth, and I am not in a position to say just what other districts have done, but I know they have purchased very liberally.

I think we would be safe in saying that the mine workers' district organizations now hold several million dollars' worth of bonds. Individual members hold several million dollars' worth. I do not think we would be in excess of, say, twenty million. In addition to that, I am sending you a statement of 10 local unions who have subscribed to the Vigo County war fund, giving you the per cent of members subscribing from those 10 local unions. I have not been able to secure any more than the 10 locals up to this time.

Practically every coal miner in Indiana is wearing a Red Cross button, and I am sure you can go on record as saying that the coal miners' attitude in this war is as above stated, with their last dollar and last man if necessary.

Hoping this information will be of some service to you, and with best personal regards, I am,

Yours, truly, ED STEWART, President.

I am informed that the national organization of United Mine Workers of America has purchased in round numbers a million dollars' worth of liberty bonds, and I desire to say right here that this great, powerful, progressive organization of men never did an act that will establish them in the hearts of the citizens of the United States more than this splendid act of patriotism. Here is a clipping from a small local paper which shows the attitude of the coal miners of my district. Listen to this:

Indian Creek miners to a man—and there are 433 of them—voted to give $1 a month for five months to the Red Cross work. The Oliphant-Johnson miners did likewise, 418 of them.

It makes my heart swell with pride to know that these men who toil so hard for the necessities of life, and who are surrounded by such peril while they work, willingly give up a portion of their monthly wage voluntarily and enthusiastically that the soldier boys at the front may receive all the comforts and necessities possible while fighting in this great war for human liberty. I do not know how you feel about it, but I think I know. You will not begrudge the Indiana miners this pittance toward saving their lives and limbs for future patriotic deeds of sacrifice and devotion to country. I believe there are about 8,000 coal miners in my district and I know most of them and wish you knew them as I know them. A great many of them have been called to the front and they are making splendid soldiers. I had a letter yesterday from one in France. He was enthusiastic, reckless, and daring, anxious to offer his life for Old Glory, and I shall not forget one statement in that letter. He said:

Oscar, lay the hammer on the slacker and the unpatriotic trouble-maker when you get home.

And in my answer to him I pledged him that I would do so.

I hope, gentlemen, that you will not withhold your consent to do this small act of justice to these men who are at this time doing so much for the country. They are entitled to it and I think it is a splendid investment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that the district from which the gentleman from Indiana comes has large coal-mining interests and that they have gaseous mines. It is not the intention of the Government to establish a mine rescue station in every coal field in the United States. As to the particular location of any station, that should be left to the department and not decided here. There is a car located at Evansville, Ind., which can be utilized for Indiana, southern Illinois, and Kentucky. The greatest work that the Government does along this line is the training of miners, training those who may become skilled in mine rescue work. There ought to be in every coal-mining center, maintained by operators, an equipment necessary to do this work. No first-class operators now maintain their coal mines without supplying the equipment that is so necessary in case of explosion. I do not know what the State of Indiana does in reference to this work. The intention of the Government is to provide these cars and the necessary apparatus to train miners so that they may become skilled in this work and know how to use helmets and go into mines to rescue those who may be shut in on account of explosions.

The coal fields of Indiana, situated in the gentleman's district, in Knox, Greene, Sullivan, and other counties, are quite extensive and these miners ought to be trained. If the State of Indiana is not doing it, it ought to be done by the Federal Government. The intention of the Federal Government is not to maintain for all time to come these mine rescue cars and stations, but it is the intention of the Government, as I have stated on the floor a number of times, to make investigations and teach people how to do the work, and eventually the Federal Government to withdraw from this work. We have established stations with that idea in view.

Now, I think this work could be done to great advantage in Indiana and would be the means of educating these miners, which would probably mean the saving of the lives of many. As the gentleman says, coal miners throughout the United States have been loyal and have worked and contributed liberally of money for the success of the Government in this war.

For the saving of human lives, the preventing of these horrible accidents which occur, when hundreds of men lose their lives at one time, we ought to furnish sufficient money to carry on the work. The Federal Government ought to be willing to do what is necessary to carry on this work, and if possible reduce these accidents occurring each year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While the work is rather local in its character, does not the Federal Government generally receive the benefit from the output of these coal mines?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; the whole country receives the benefit of the coal mined.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So it is not purely a local matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Up to the time that the Bureau of Mines was established the Government did very little work along these lines. The State of Illinois has already established mine rescue stations and cars, locating them in the principal coal fields of the State. They go to different mines and instruct the miners. As a result we have hundreds of men in Illinois who have become experts in this particular work. The State of Indiana should do its part of the work also along these lines. That has been the result of the starting of this work by the Federal Government, and I have no doubt the same thing would occur in the gentleman's district if the interest were shown in starting this kind of training.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it was never the purpose of the United States Government to undertake to establish one of these stations at every coal mine, or even in every coal area. The work of the United States Government has been a work of education to induce the operators to realize the value of training the miners how to use this apparatus and to send their mine rescue cars around to every mine in order to train the miners. This bill carries an appropriation for mine rescue cars, the very purpose of which is to go to the mines in every area and there educate the miners to the importance of this work, showing them how to do it. In nearly every State, by legislation, the operators are compelled to maintain stations. If that is not true in Indiana, it ought to be.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. There is no law requiring them to do it in Indiana; the operator is required to furnish certain first-aid equipment, and so forth; but I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that at Evansville, as mentioned by the chairman of the Committee on Mines, they have one of these rescue cars, and it is one of these old Pullman cars that has been worked over. The gentleman from Indiana who sits by the gentleman's side will tell him that that car, being an old car, is in such shape that the railroad trains will not always carry it over the country. It is in a sense condemned, and is going to be abandoned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And because that is true this bill carries appropriations for new cars, and they are being furnished year by year to take the place of these old cars. New cars are provided for, and there is no reason why one of the new cars can not be sent to the area in which the gentleman is interested to perform the duty heretofore performed by this old one.

Mr. BLAND. That car serves the entire western Kentucky field.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But the fact that that car has deteriorated and is no longer serviceable does not mean that the work is to be abandoned. The very purpose of these appropriations is to provide new cars for the cars which are no longer of service, in order to provide for the extension of the work as well as its maintenance, and this bill carries an appropriation of $17,000 more than the appropriation of last year, so that the Director of the Bureau of Mines, if he so desires, can take one of his new cars—and he has the money to even supply new equipment—and send it around there and tell the operators what they ought to do and show the miners what they ought to do. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] knows it is the duty of the operators to spend their own money to protect the lives of the men who are working for them in these mines. They are doing it in every State of the Union, and I have no doubt that they are doing it in the district represented by the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. I think I can safely say this mine rescue car of which the gentleman speaks has not been in my district half a dozen times in all the history of the movement, and when it is there it is only there a very short time and does not get in touch with the miners whom we are so desirous of getting interested in this work. We need a stationary place where the miner can study the situation. In the gentleman's consideration of this bill has the committee been advised that probably the greatest new coal development in bituminous mines of the United States is in this particular section, and that they have the largest mines in the United States, and that new mines are still being opened, and that there is gas in these mines? Has the committee been so advised?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; and we have not been advised that the operators or the State of Indiana have failed to perform their duty. If they have not so failed in their duty, then I know the State has called to the attention of the operators the necessity of affording this training. This bill provides for $17,000 more than was expended last year for this purpose. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is adopted, an amount would be appropriated in excess of the estimate furnished by the Bureau of Mines for this purpose.

Our experience has been that you can always rely upon the director of a bureau asking for every dollar that he can wisely spend, and generally he allows a fair margin for the extension of his activities. He has not done it here. The gentleman's amendment will give him more money than he has asked for.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a statement showing that Mr. Manning, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, says this over his own signature:

I favor the establishment of a station, such as described above, to be located at the most convenient place in Indiana to the most dangerous coal mines.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Director of the Bureau of Mines was before the committee for more than a day and made no request for this appropriation.

Mr. BLAND. I am sorry that this was not called to his attention.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why did he not present it in his estimate? Then the committee could have examined him and made inquiries in respect to the matter. On the contrary, we have given him $17,000 more than he had to expend last year and if it is necessary he can expend some of this money.

Mr. BLAND. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's question, why.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Where does the gentleman from Indiana desire this money to be expended?

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman mean to say how or in what place?

Mr. CANNON. What places or zones in the coal fields?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Manning assures me if this appropriation is increased as I have asked that he will go to the place most needed on account of the surrounding gaseous mines and will establish training among the men. Personally I think it would be at Vincennes, Ind., as I think they are the most gaseous mines in the State or in any other State anywhere near it.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman: I am somewhat familiar with the coal fields of Illinois and Indiana, especially the coal fields beginning at Danville, Ill., and in the counties of Parke, Knox, Sullivan, Ind., and from thence to Evansville, Ind., and westward to St. Louis and covering southern and central Illinois. I understand in the Sullivan, Ind., field the mining is especially dangerous.

Mr. BLAND. And there are gas mines in Sullivan.

Mr. CANNON. Where is there a station in the Evansville country?

Mr. BLAND. There is none.

Mr. CANNON. There is none in that stretch of country from Evansville to Vincennes?

Mr. BLAND. There is no relief there, and at Evansville there is this old Pullman car, which was condemned, and from there clear up to Danville, Ill.——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I wish to call attention to the fact that this appropriation for $370,000, an increase of $17,000, is not limited to any point, but discretion is placed in the director to use that money at any point he wishes, and he can use it in this area. If he does not think they require it, it will be useless to add another $17,000 with no string tied to it, because if the director does not think it is necessary he will not use the other $17,000.

Mr. BLAND. The director says he will use it in that way, and I believe he is an honest man.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have given him $17,000 more than he had last year.

Mr. BLAND. I will tell the gentleman what he asked for if the gentleman will allow me. Will the gentleman pardon me? Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. CANNON. I will yield for the gentleman to make a short statement.

Mr. BLAND. As I stated originally, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had informed me that the appropriation would take care of this particular condition. When I took it up with Director Manning, he said "No," that the appropriation was to take care of the other places already established, and as the result this was not included, although I was asleep on the proposition and did not discuss with the committee the dangers of leaving these places unattended to. The gentleman knows I have letters here——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We gave him $17,000 more than he had last year.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON. Well, possibly I can get through with the three minutes remaining. The coal development in southern Indiana and a portion of central Indiana and southern Illinois runs as far north as my own county of Vermilion, is very extensive, and has an output, if I recollect aright, in Vermilion County of a tonnage of 4,000,000 a year. It is 120 miles south of Chicago and is close enough to Chicago to answer the purposes of South Chicago, Gary, and Joliet.

Now, I want to be exactly fair about it. This mining bureau covering the whole country is a very extensive one. I believe I have always voted for the appropriations for it, because I am in harmony with all proper attention by the Federal Government, with or without—and it is frequently without—cooperation such as ought to be given by the State governments, for the preservation of life, especially where you mine bituminous coal, where in mining it requires careful construction, and where there is need for protection from the gases that are generated and instruction of those engaged in mining to avoid accidents and explosions. And all these require, for the conservation of life, something of expenditures. Considering the number of accidents and considering the desirability of giving security to the men who are down from 200 to 1,000 feet in the earth and who are met with explosions from time to time with great loss of life, I for one, from a humanitarian standpoint, in former years have felt, as I feel now, that while from one standpoint the Federal Government is perhaps not required to cooperate, yet from the standpoint of humanity, as long as we are engaged in this work, such assistance as it renders ought to be fairly commensurate with the service that should be given.

And hence I asked the gentleman whether there was any rescue station in this field. Perhaps it is not necessary to have a station. He replied that there is one obsolete car that goes into Kentucky, but that it is in such condition that it can not run upon the railway tracks, and that there ought to be near by the proper relief for these accidents which come very frequently.

I was not present when this hearing was had, and I have not read it, but from what the gentleman has said this is not an increase of the appropriation for improvements in Knox County, or in the adjacent county of Sullivan alone, or south to Evansville, or across the river over to southern Illinois, or in central Illinois, but it is a lump fund to be used, what for? For taking care of this service. And in my judgment it will not be used unless it is necessary to use it. The gentleman says, and I think it is agreed on all sides, that it is in the discretion of those in charge of these aids to save life as to the expenditure of this money, and therefore, it being in their discretion, in supporting this service I feel, from the statements that have been made, that we can safely give this additional $17,000 or $18,000 that we are assured will not be expended unless it is necessary that it should be expended. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, with much of what the gentleman from Illinois has just said I am in entire accord. Perhaps if I looked at the matter from a purely geographical standpoint I would have as much or more reason to advocate the amendment than either the gentleman who offered it or the gentleman who has just supported it, because Kentucky has extensive coal fields, and this car which the gentleman complains of is not even in the State of Kentucky, but only serves sections of Kentucky after Indiana and Illinois get through with using it.

Mr. CANNON. It is pretty close to Kentucky, if the gentleman will yield—just across the river.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not nearly as close as it is to Indiana, it happening to be in that State; and it is close to Illinois. And the coal fields that are near to Indiana and Illinois are only the small coal fields of Kentucky. The big coal fields are up in another part of the State.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. But this matter is a good deal bigger, of course, than questions of locality.

Now, the committee did this: It gave $17,000 more money than last year, because it was in sympathy with the purposes of this item, and it gave an amount that is very close to the total sum that was asked by the bureau. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says if it is not needed it will not be expended. I should not have been surprised at that statement from a new Member, but the distinguished ex-chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has sufficient knowledge of the Bureau of Mines in particular, as well as the bureaus of the Government in general, to know that whatever is given is expended if the ingenuity of man can find methods for expending it.

Now, the committee has no pride of opinion about this matter; We are desirous of providing all of the money that can properly be used in the safeguarding of human life, though I would like to put the emphasis, rather than the soft pedal, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] did, upon the need of the States and the localities and the mine owners to perform some of their functions, and not always ask it of the Federal Government. The tendency has grown up of late years, and is still growing, to shoulder everything off on to Uncle Sam, and that tendency will continue just to the extent that we acquiesce in it by increasing appropriations.

Now, I find from the last annual report of the Director of the Bureau of Mines this statement:

> Because of their condition five of the old Pullman cars being used as rescue cars had to be extensively repaired. These cars were practically idle in September, and in October went to the repair shop in Chicago. In May, 1917, the three new specially designed all-steel cars, authorized by Congress, were placed in active operation. They are known as cars 1, 2, and 5, with headquarters at Reno, Nev.; Raton, N. Mex.; and Butte, Mont. Cars 3, 4, 6, 7, and 8 were returned from the repair shop in April and May in good order. Their headquarters are Evansville, Ind.; Pittsburg, Kans.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Ironwood, Mich.; and Huntington, W. Va.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. In the hearings before your committee, on page 1061, Mr. Manning says:

> Three cars were delivered last year, three are under construction now, and this is the remaining seventh car. These cars will eventually have to take the place of the five old cars in the service, because I imagine that in the next two or three years the old cars will have to be scrapped. These cars were old Pullman cars and they will soon have to be put out of service. In many cases the railroads refuse to haul them because of their unsafe condition.

That was the testimony just a little while back, just a few days ago. That is the condition of those cars down there.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman, I think, is mistaken in his full conclusion. There were more than these five cars.

Mr. BLAND. We do not get any of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Some of them were not capable of being repaired; but the statement made by the director in the report showed that those cars were repaired and that they are being used.

Now, the gentleman's situation is no different from—it is very much better than—the situation of a great many other mine fields in America, and we are asked to appropriate this $17,000 on the basis of having it expended for the benefit of his district. That is the statement he makes to us, because he says he is assured that if he gets this appropriation increased, the Bureau of Mines will use the amount by which he gets it increased for the purpose that he desires. Incidentally, I may remark that it is always possible to get any bureau of this Government to make that agreement. If you go to them to get something done in your district they will always tell you, "We have not the money, but if you get the appropriation increased by a certain amount of money, we will take that money and spend it in your district," which is a very good trading arrangement.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman assumes that I must have some influence with the splendid official. I assure you I have none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean that the gentleman has any improper influence or any influence other than that which properly belongs to a Member. I commend the gentleman's zeal for his district. But I have had some experience with the habits and the breed of directors of bureaus. I tell you that it is a universal habit always to agree that to the extent you increase their money they will expend it in your district, if you can give them anything like a prima facie case.

Now, the whole question is simply this, and it is up to the Committee of the Whole: We have increased by $17,000 the money for this bureau over last year. We have been liberal with them. The amount that the gentleman asks is in excess of what the director submitted as an estimate to the Congress. If the Committee of the Whole wants to go beyond the estimate that the Bureau of Mines submitted to the Congress, the responsibility is upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say, considering the time consumed in the discussion of this $17,000 item, that the cost of maintaining and running this House for that length of time would far exceed that amount.

Now, there is not a more efficient, faithful, painstaking bureau chief in this Government than Mr. Van. H. Manning, of the Bureau of Mines and Mining, the worthy son of a former leading Member of Congress from Mississippi. He says this work is needed and he has recommended it in a letter which has been read in our hearing, and the Committee on Appropriations, in fixing the amount carried in the pending bill, has been guided by his recommendations. In the consideration of this Indiana case, before the bill has been acted upon by this House, why should we not give weight and consideration to Mr. Manning's subsequent or final recommendations? If there were two lives lost in a railroad accident through no fault of the person killed, an American jury would assess damages perhaps in excess of the amount asked for in the proposed amendment, which involves the protection of the lives of many thousand industrial workers. During this session of Congress we will appropriate, doubtless, $21,000,000,000, and yet Members are opposing this item of $17,000. If we were to examine carefully the many supply bills of this Government I doubt whether we could find in any of them a better investment or a more valuable investment, considering the amount involved, than is contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND]. This Indiana coal field is being rapidly enlarged and extended. The coal-mining industry is of vital importance to our Government and the people, especially at this time, and the Members of Congress owe a very serious and a very great duty and responsibility to the men who are risking their lives every day in these dangerous, gaseous coal mines.

I do not understand why any Member of this House should hesitate to vote this insignificant sum of money, which means so much to the miners of Indiana. It is no argument to say that the original purpose of this legislation was to inaugurate mine rescue stations and then abandon and leave them to the States or the coal operators. The Federal Government never abandons work of this character and value. It does not abandon its annual appropriations for the eradication of the tick or the boll weevil. We do not stop a great work of that kind on account of the failure of a local community or of a State to take it up. I represent a great mining district, the one which secured the first mine rescue station in the South. Had this great work been inaugurated about seventeen years ago we would perhaps have saved the lives of 160 miners, every one of whom perished in a mine disaster at Fratersville, Tenn. I speak from some personal knowledge of the value and importance of this great work, which has been in operation in the coal fields of my State for 10 years. How many men are stationed at these mine rescue headquarters? One or two? How much territory and how many mining camps can two men cover? To how many miners can this needful aid and instruction be carried with a few stations and a limited office or station force? In the name of justice and humanity, we can not afford to take the position that because there is one rescue station in a great mining State like Indiana it is sufficient to cover an immense and far-reaching coal field. If we fail to adopt this amendment, provide for this additional rescue station, and a fatal mine disaster should occur in that State for lack of this great service, what a responsibility will be upon the minds and consciences of the Members of this House! [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND), there were—ayes 30, noes 19.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

The clerk read as follows:

For investigation of mineral fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States, with a view to their most efficient mining, preparation, treatment, and use, and to recommend to various departments such changes in selection and use of fuel as may result in greater economy, and including all equipment, supplies, and expenses of travel and subsistence, $135,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, while we are on the subject of mine explosions I want to call attention to the fact that while the Federal Government has for a number of years past taken an active interest and appropriated liberally for the purpose of installing apparatus and giving aid, assistance, and instruction with a view of decreasing mine accidents, it is an unfortunate fact that mine accidents have increased in the last year. I shall place in the RECORD a brief statement of the mine accidents for the years 1916 and 1917:

Fatalities at coal mines for the years ended Dec. 31, 1916 and 1917.

Cause.	Number killed.
	1916	1917
Underground:
Falls of roof or face	962	1,147
Mine cars and locomotives	390	482
Gas and dust explosions	170	199
Explosives	146	111
Electricity	90	79
Miscellaneous underground	269	361
Total underground	2,027	2,379
Shaft	49	52
Surface:
Haulage	75	114
Machinery	26	51
Miscellaneous	49	109
Total surface	150	255
Grand total	2,226	2,696

It will be noted there was an increase in the number of fatal accidents due to dust and gas explosions in 1917 over 1916 of 29. The total number of fatal accidents increased from 2,226 in 1916 to 2,696 in 1917, an increase of 470.

Mr. FARR. In the entire United States?

Mr. MONDELL. In the entire United States.

Mr. FARR. Does the gentleman include both bituminous and anthracite mines?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; this includes all the mines of the country. That is a very great and lamentable toll of lives sacrificed to this great industry, and it is our hope and expectation that we may be able to reduce that total very largely in the future.

The Director of the Bureau of Mines, in reply to questions by members of the subcommittee, said that he was not entirely clear as to all the causes for this increase of accidents, but it was possibly due largely to a very great effort that was made during 1917 to increase and speed up the coal production. Whenever an effort of that sort is made there is a tendency to grow careless and to fail to utilize all the instrumentalities useful in the prevention of accidents.

During the present year and until the close of the war there will be a very earnest effort to speed up production. We ought to increase the coal production in this country 60,000,000 tons during the year 1918 over last year. There is great danger in doing this that there may be an increase in accidents. We have now granted the Bureau of Mines all and a trifle more than they asked, and a sufficient sum to enable them to reasonably assist in safeguarding coal-mining operations in the country, so far as the Federal Government has been able to cover the field up to this time. Eventually we ought to cover the field more thoroughly than we have. It is also tremendously important that the mine operators shall themselves realize their very great responsibility in this matter.

Until recently there was scarcely a mine in the country, even the most gaseous of the mines, where gas helmets were kept, where the operators maintained apparatus needed for rescue work in the case of gas explosions. We are all familiar with the frequent lack of care in safeguarding the miners, so essential in this dangerous industry.

I am rather inclined to believe that the Federal Government has permanently entered on this work, but the Federal Government can not entirely cover the field. That is impossible. The best the Federal Government can do is to give aid and assistance at the most important mining centers, to endeavor to build up a public sentiment in the State and in the communities that will lead to the exercise of greater care and caution by the men themselves and by the operators and that will bring the operators to a realizing sense of their responsibility, in order that they may provide the safest possible conditions in and about the mines. This is a very great, a very useful, and a very helpful work. We can not do all that we would like to do; we can not cover the whole field; but the Government is doing a splendid work, and it is highly essential that the work shall be kept at the highest state of efficiency at this time, when we are making such an earnest effort to speed up the coal production of the country. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances, with a view to improving health conditions and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; and including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, and subsistence: Provided, That no part thereof may be used for investigation in behalf of any private party, $100,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12441, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 15, 1918.

(Legislative day of Friday, June 14, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon.

STATISTICS OF INCOME.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a compilation of statistics of income prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS OF ELMER ELLSWORTH BROWN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refers to the Committee on Printing an address delivered by Elmer Ellsworth Brown, chancellor of the New York University, at the eighty-sixth commencement, for determination as to whether it ought to be printed in the RECORD or referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. From that committee I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11284) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 507) thereon. I will say that this is a bill of very great public importance, and the Commerce Committee authorized me to report it without amendment as it came from the House, and to ask for its immediate consideration. I do not think it will take more than a moment. Of course, if there is objection I do not want to break in upon the consideration of the bill which is the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it go to the calendar. I would like at least to read it and see what it is.

Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist on that course. I have a letter from the President asking that the bill be passed as a war measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Everything is presented to Congress as a war measure.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. This is a very important bill. The President has written a letter about it. It is very urgent. It relates to the Lighthouse Service, and there are some points where it is a matter of vital interest in connection with our naval operations. It is substantially the bill which was passed in the Senate, with only two changes, or possibly three. It will take but a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a House bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is a bill which passed the House, and the committee reported it without any change as it came from the House.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Having in charge the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I will offer no objection to its consideration, as I think we can get through with the appropriation bill very shortly.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read so that we may see what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that the District of Columbia appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily in order to consider this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which has been read?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move that the bill (S. 4427) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, being order of business 433, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 238).

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A few days ago I presented a conference report upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended. Later in the day the conferees found several verbal errors in the report which was presented, and I asked leave to withdraw that report, which was done. I now present a corrected report, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the second subdivision (4) of section 22 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended, relating to the definition of the term 'parent,' is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(4) The term "parent" includes a father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, father through adoption, mother through adoption, stepfather, and stepmother, either of the person in the service or of the spouse.'

"SEC. 2. That four new sections are hereby added to article I of said act, to be known as sections 27, 28, 29, and 30, respectively, and to read as follows:

"'SEC. 27. That whoever shall obtain or receive any money, check, allotment, family allowance, compensation, or insurance under articles 2, 3, or 4 of this act, without being entitled thereto, with intent to defraud the United States or any person in the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"'SEC. 28. That the allotments and family allowances, compensation, and insurance payable under articles 2, 3, and 4, respectively, shall not be assignable; shall not be subject to the claims of creditors of any person to whom an award is made under articles 2, 3, or 4; and shall be exempt from all taxation: Provided, That such allotments and family allowances, compensation, and insurance shall be subject to any claims which the United States may have, under articles 2, 3, and 4, against the person on whose account the allotments and family allowances, compensation, or insurance is payable.

"'SEC. 29. That the discharge or dismissal of any person from the military or naval forces on the ground that he is an enemy alien, conscientious objector, or a deserter, or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude, or willful and persistent misconduct shall terminate any insurance granted on the life of such person under the provisions of article 4, and shall bar all rights to any compensation under article 3 or any insurance under article 4.

"'SEC. 30. That this act may be cited as the war-risk insurance act.'

"SEC. 3. That section 200 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 200. That the provisions of this article shall apply to all enlisted men in the military or naval forces of the United States, except the Philippine Scouts, the insular force of the Navy, and the Samoan native guard and band of the Navy.'

"SEC. 4. That the second and third paragraphs of section 201 of said act are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'The monthly compulsory allotment shall be $15. For a wife living separate and apart from her husband under court order or written agreement, or for a former wife divorced, the monthly compulsory allotment shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order, decree, or written agreement to be paid to her, and for an illegitimate child, to whose support the father has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute, it shall not exceed the amount fixed in the order or decree.

"'If there is a compulsory allotment for a wife or child, then a former wife divorced who has not remarried and to whom alimony has been decreed, shall not be entitled to a compulsory allotment, but shall be entitled to a family allowance as hereinafter provided.'

"SEC. 5. That section 203 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 203. That in case one-half of an enlisted man's monthly pay is not allotted, regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, may require, under circumstances and conditions as may be prescribed in such regulations, that any proportion of such one-half pay as is not allotted shall be deposited to his credit, to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed. Such deposit shall bear interest at the same rate as United States bonds bear for the same period, and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to the person or persons who, under the laws of the State of his residence, would be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy.'

"SEC. 6. That the third and fourth paragraphs of section 204 of said act are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Class A. In the case of a man to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children—

"'(h) If there is a former wife divorced who has not remarried and to whom alimony has been decreed, $15.

"SEC. 7. That section 206 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 206. That family allowances to members of class B shall be paid only if and while the members are dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and then only if and while the enlisted man makes a monthly allotment of his pay for such members in the following amounts:

"'(b) If an enlisted man is making a compulsory allotment for class A the additional allotment for class B required as a condition to the family allowance shall be $5, or if a woman is making an allotment of $15 for a dependent husband or child the additional allotment for the other members of class B required as a condition to the family allowance shall be $5.'

"SEC. 8. That section 210 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 210. That upon receipt of any application for family allowance, the commissioner shall make all proper investigations and shall make an award, on the basis of which award the amount of the allotments to be made by the man shall be certified to the War Department or Navy Department, as may be proper. Whenever the commissioner shall have reason to believe that an allowance has been improperly made or that the conditions have changed, he shall investigate or reinvestigate and may modify the award. The amount of each monthly allotment and allowance shall be determined according to the family conditions existing on the first day of the month.'

"SEC. 9. That sections 4, 6, 7, and 8 of this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1918.

"SEC. 10. That section 300 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 300. That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the line of duty, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided; but no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct: Provided, That for the purposes of this section said officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service: Provided further, That this section, as amended, shall be deemed to become effective as of October 6, 1917.'

"'SEC. 301. That if death results from injury—

The amount payable under this subdivision shall not exceed the difference between the total amount payable to the widow and children and the sum of $75. This compensation shall be payable for the death of but one child, and no compensation for the death of a child shall be payable if the dependent mother is in receipt of compensation under the provisions of this article for the death of her husband. Such compensation shall be payable whether the dependency of the father or mother or both arises before or after the death of the person, but no compensation shall be payable if the dependency arises more than five years after the death of the person.

"'If the death occurs before discharge or resignation from service, the United States shall pay for burial expenses and the return of the body to his home a sum not to exceed $100, as may be fixed by regulations.

"'The payment of compensation to a widow shall continue until her death or remarriage.

"'The payment of compensation to or for a child shall continue until such child reaches the age of 18 years or marries, or if such child be incapable, because of insanity, idiocy, or being otherwise permanently helpless, then during such incapacity.

"'Whenever the compensation payable to or for the benefit of any person under the provisions of this section is terminated by the happening of the contingency upon which it is limited, the compensation thereafter for the remaining beneficiary or beneficiaries, if any, shall be the amount which would have been payable to them if they had been the sole original beneficiaries.

"'As between the widow and the children not in her custody, and as between children, the amount of the compensation shall be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulation.

"'The term "widow" as used in this section shall not include one who shall have married the deceased later than 10 years after the time of injury, and shall include a widower, whenever his condition is such that, if the deceased person were living, he would have been dependent upon her for support.'

"SEC. 12. That subdivision (1) of section 302 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(1) If and while the disability is total, the monthly compensation shall be the following amounts:

"'(a) If the disabled person has neither wife nor child living, $30;

"'(b) If he has a wife but no child living, $45;

"'(c) If he has a wife and one child living, $55;

"'(d) If he has a wife and two children living, $65;

"'(e) If he has a wife and three or more children living, $75;

"SEC. 13. That subdivision (4) of section 302 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(4) The amount of each monthly payment shall be determined according to the family conditions existing on the 1st day of the month.'

"SEC. 14. That two new subdivisions are hereby added to section 302 of said act, to be known as subdivisions (5) and (6), respectively, and to read as follows:

"'(5) Where the disabled person and his wife are not living together, or where the children are not in the custody of the disabled person, the amount of the compensation shall be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulations.

"'(6) The term "wife" as used in this section shall include "husband" if the husband is dependent upon the wife for support.'

"SEC. 15. That where section 301 of said act is amended by striking out the provisions that a mother is entitled to compensation only when she is widowed and substitute provisions are included to the effect that compensation is payable to a dependent mother or dependent father, such substitute provisions shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917.

"SEC. 16. That section 311 of said act is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 17. That section 312 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 312. That compensation under this article shall not be paid while the person is in receipt of service or retirement pay. The laws providing for gratuities or payments in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to any person in the active military or naval service on the 6th day of October, 1917, or who thereafter entered the active military or naval service, or to their widows, children, or their dependents, except in so far as rights under any such law have heretofore accrued.

"'Compensation because of disability or death of members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) shall be in lieu of any compensation for such disability or death under the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.'

"'SEC. 313. (1) That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed to the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made.

"'If a beneficiary or conditional beneficiary shall have recovered, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other person, such money or other property so recovered shall be credited upon any compensation payable, or which may become payable, to such beneficiary or conditional beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person, other than the United States or the enemy, to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid to such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(3) The bureau shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the purposes of this section. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the American Experience Table of Mortality.

"'A conditional beneficiary is any person who may become entitled to compensation under this article on or after the death of the injured person.

"'SEC. 401. That such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation, except that those persons who are in the active war service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of such contract of insurance may apply at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled, or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his widow from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or if there is no widow surviving him, then to his child or children, or if there is no child surviving him, then to his mother, or if there is no mother surviving him, then to his father, if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total and permanent disability, shall be so paid. The amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between children as may be provided by regulations.'

"SEC. 20. That section 19 of this act amending section 401 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the payment of monthly installments, authorized to be made under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted, for the months up to and including June, 1918: Provided further, That all awards of automatic insurance under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted shall be revised as of the 1st day of July, 1918, in accordance with the provisions of said section 401 as amended by section 19 of this act.

"'SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them. The insurance shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value, if any, of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½ per cent interest in full of all obligations under the contract of insurance.'"

And the House agree to the same.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I trust the Senator will not interfere with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was only going to say——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We ought to get through with the appropriation bill in a short time, and the matter which the Senator proposes to bring up will, I have no doubt, occasion considerable debate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move to reconsider the vote adopting the committee amendment on page 45, lines 25 and 26.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, after line 24, the following amendment was inserted:

Ten librarians in high and normal schools, at $950 each; 28 clerks, at $800 each; in all, $31,900.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered, without objection.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, as a committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Maryland if he has a substitute for the amendment which has just been stated?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am offering a substitute for it now. I will say that we inadvertently reduced the salaries of some officials and took away from them their longevity pay, which we desire to reinstate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment previously adopted, it is proposed to insert the following:

Ten librarians in high and normal schools in class 5, at $950 each; 28 clerks in class 4, at $800 each; in all, $31,900.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon we postponed the further consideration of the bill because, as I understood, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desired to sumbit some remarks in regard to the item relative to the Metropolitan police.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, the pending amendment is on page 60, in line 3, after the word "each," where the Committee on the District of Columbia propose to strike out the words "492 privates of class 3, at $1,200 each," and in lieu thereof to insert "513 privates of class 3 (including crossing policemen), at $1,320 each."

Mr. President, the only question involved in this amendment is whether or not we are to appropriate to pay the policemen who are guarding the crossings of the street railroads in the District of Columbia or they are to be paid by the street railways, as they have been in the past. Last evening, immediately after the conclusion of the session of the Senate, a representative of the street railroads called upon me and directed my attention to the fact that in the hearings before the subcommittee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill there was submitted in writing to the committee a communication signed by Mr. B. H. Warner, jr., who, I understand, is the counsel for the Washington Railway & Electric Co. I want now to read that short communication, because it will give the Senate the history of the matter. I also want the Senate to understand the attitude of the street railroads themselves. I read from the communication as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1918.

Hon. JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Chairman Subcommittee on
District of Columbia Appropriations,
Washington, D. C.

In the matter of crossing policemen.

MY DEAR SIR: By act approved June 24, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 489), entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes," under section 3 thereof, Congress enacted "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to station special policemen at such street railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as the said commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies" * * *.

This section was added in conference. I have examined the record relating to the passage of this act, as well as all of the reports of the committees of both the House and the Senate, and can find nothing that would indicate that any railway in the District of Columbia knew of this proposed legislation.

This action on the part of Congress was protested against by my clients, the Washington Railway & Electric Co., time and again. All of which protests have been ignored. We have presented this matter to your committee at previous sessions in the hope that some relief might be granted us. In place of being granted relief our burdens have been made the more oppressive finally in the passage of the act approved September 1, 1916, an act making appropriations for the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1917. (See last paragraph on p. 50 of said act.) This action made crossing policemen regular members of the Metropolitan force, except that their pay had to continue to fall upon the railway companies.

The committee may recollect that in the hearings before it, in the Sixty-third Congress, third session, on H. R. 19422, it was recommended by the commissioners that the railway companies be relieved of the burden of paying for these crossing policemen. (See pp. 79 to 82, and 122 and 123 thereof.)

In the Sixty-fourth Congress, H. R. 14670, introduced by Mr. CARLIN, was favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. This bill, except for the pay feature, was inserted by the conferees in the appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1917.

We have come to you again this year, at the suggestion of the president of the Board of District Commissioners, and ask that you relieve us of this crossing policemen burden.

Our cause has not only the approval of the commissioners and the chief of police but the engineer of the public utilities commission as well.

The street railway companies of the District of Columbia are required to sell six tickets for 25 cents. This makes their gross receipts practically 16⅔ per cent less than most other cities in this country. When you take into account the further restriction that a passenger must be hauled from one end of the District to the other for one fare, the gross receipts are fully 20 per cent less than in any other city.

The street railway companies, in addition to paying the regular tax of 4 per cent on gross receipts and the usual real estate taxes, are required to pay for paving between the tracks and a distance of 2 feet on either side thereof and for the removal of snow at certain crossings. No other form of traffic pays any portion of the paving or removal of snow.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to read the remainder of this letter, but it succinctly states the position of the street railroad companies of Washington. Mr. Warner told me last night that the burden of maintaining these policemen—he calls it a burden—falls upon the two street railway companies of the District, and the amount paid by both for this purpose is about $75,000 per annum. In other words, Mr. President, if we take——

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, it is a matter of very small concern, but the exact amount is $68,040.

Mr. SMOOT. What I have stated is what Mr. Warner told me last evening.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say to the Senator in regard to these crossing policemen that I look upon them as a necessary protection against the automobiles. I am not afraid of the street cars; they can be seen; but the streets at certain places in the city are filled with automobiles, and it is for the protection of the people against the automobiles more than against the street cars that we need the crossing policemen. I think the authorities of the city are negligent in allowing our streets to be blockaded with automobiles, and certainly at the street crossings we need protection against them more than we do against the street cars. That is the reason, so long as the District Commissioners allow automobiles to run as they do, why we ought to have these crossing policemen, and they ought to be charged to the city.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota as to the necessity of the crossing policemen to guard the public against automobiles. I myself think that three-fourths of all the traffic that is directed by the crossing policemen is made up of automobiles and trucks.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me further, whenever I approach these crossings I am not worried about the street cars; I am not looking for them, but I am looking for those "cussed" automobiles that run all over, regardless of the life and limb of citizens. We need protection against them rather than against the street cars.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that in the large cities of the country before there were any automobiles there were policemen at the street crossings to protect the people against vehicular traffic and the street cars; in fact, policemen were required at busy corners to direct the traffic in order that it might proceed at all. I know what the Senator says, so far as automobiles are concerned, is true, but even if automobiles were not a part of the traffic, the general traffic would be so congested unless directed by some one that vehicles would be running into each other and would hardly be able to move without accidents occurring.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a member of the committee I have taken little interest in this matter, although I have always felt that these crossing policemen ought to be a part of the Metropolitan police force. I wish to ask the Senator whether he has knowledge as to the rule in other cities? I know that in Boston and in New York the regular policemen guard at least the pedestrians crossing the streets. I have always supposed they were a part of the regular force. Does the Senator know whether in any other city the surface railroads are required to pay the salaries of crossing policemen?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not a list of the cities, but I am informed, Mr. President, that there are a great many cities where the street railroad companies are compelled to pay the policemen who stand at the crossings and whose only duty is to protect the public from accidents. I also know that there are other cities where that work is done by the city police force.

Mr. GALLINGER. Members of the regular force?

Mr. SMOOT. Members of the regular force, paid by the city. So that I do not think there is any universal practice in this regard.

Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question about crossing policemen. Do they have any other duties except to act as crossing policemen?

Mr. SMOOT. I think they spend all of their time at the crossings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Their entire time is taken up in looking after the crossings?

Mr. SMOOT. Their time is taken up in looking after the crossings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the city any jurisdiction over them?

Mr. SMOOT. It has.

Mr. McKELLAR. To what extent?

Mr. SMOOT. They are now, under the act of September 1, 1916, under the direction of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are under the direction of the Metropolitan police, but their duties are confined solely to the crossings?

Mr. SMOOT. To the crossings.

Mr. McKELLAR. By whom are they appointed?

Mr. SMOOT. I presume, however, that they have the power to arrest anyone violating the ordinances of the District.

Mr. McKELLAR. Any ordinance of the District?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but they do not patrol regular beats as other policemen do. They stand at the center of the crossing, where the street railroad tracks turn or cross, and their duty is to direct the traffic at that one spot.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then their duties are solely to prevent accidents at those crossings?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is their whole duty.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, of course, it is to the very great advantage of the street railway companies to prevent accidents?

Mr. SMOOT. It is of advantage to the street railway companies, and it is also an advantage to the District of Columbia. I will admit that. It is only a question of policy; it is a question as to whether the street railroads shall pay these policemen, as they have done in the past, or whether the burden shall be transferred to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the General Government.

Mr. SMOOT. And the General Government—half to be paid by the District and half to be paid by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long has this system of the street car companies paying the crossing policemen been in vogue?

Mr. SMOOT. Ever since June 24, 1898. I will state that was the act which was first passed, which was entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes."

Mr. McKELLAR. What special reason is given by the committee for overturning that long-established custom?

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. Warner, the attorney of one of the railroad companies, representing them, thinks that it is an injustice. He also points to the fact that many other cities pay the police for doing similar duty, and he says that in the District six tickets are required to be sold for a quarter, while nearly all other cities charge 5 cents straight. He also calls attention to the fact that the law requires the street railroads to carry their passengers from one end of the District to the other without additional fare, and figures that the street railroads of the District of Columbia are at a disadvantage as compared with the street railroads of other cities.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will indulge me again, I wish to ask this question: Did the original act by which the street railway companies were required to maintain policemen at the crossings grow out of some relationship with the city? In other words, in 1898 did the street railway companies or other railway companies obtain any grant or privilege from the city? Is that one of the agreements that was made at that time?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say that I have not read this act carefully. All that the attorney refers to is found in his letter, and reads as follows——

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard the Senator read that. I was present and heard that letter.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will not read it again.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Utah permit me to ask a question of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did this arrangement by which the street car companies pay for the policemen at the crossings grow out of a contractual relation between the street car companies and the city in 1898? Very frequently, of course, as the Senator knows, in all large cities from time to time there are agreements made between the cities and the street railway companies, and quite frequently the street railway companies agree to certain terms and conditions upon which contracts or privileges or extensions of privileges are granted them. I should like to know whether or not there was anything of that kind in this case.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question I will say that the fact is that this matter has been brought to the attention of the subcommittee on several occasions, and they have felt that it was a wrong policy. I agree with the Senator from Utah that it is a matter of policy. When the matter was brought up this time it was insisted upon that the railway people should be divorced from the Metropolitan police and that the police should be under no obligations whatever to any corporation. So far as I am concerned, I know nothing about the corporations' interest in this matter; but as a matter of principle and a matter of policy it is wrong that the police of the city of Washington should be in any way dominated, by pay or in any other way, by a corporation. We felt that it was best that this matter should be taken out of the hands of the street railway companies and that the amount involved should be paid by the city government, and that they should have full power to direct these policemen—which they have now, in a way—as they see proper, and they should be under no obligations to any corporation. If the street railway corporations are making more money than they ought to, let us tax them more; but let us not get it by allowing them in any way to have control over the police of the city of Washington.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I want to say, Mr. President, that Congress took specific action in this regard. The law itself says:

> That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to station special policemen at such street-railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as the said commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies.

In other words, the railroads have nothing whatever to do with selecting these policemen. The Commissioners of the District do it, and they are not beholden to the railroads at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. For their appointment or anything else?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have an idea, just from the general trend of the thing, that in 1898 the companies must have been asking for some privileges, and must have agreed, in return for privileges contracted with the city, to pay the salaries of necessary policemen at the crossings. If such were the case, it would materially affect our action here. Certainly it would materially affect my action. I do not know whether it is the case or not; and I should like to know, from the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee, what the facts are.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I was very much struck with what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] had to say in regard to these crossings—that it is much more important to protect the people from the automobiles than to protect them from the street cars. From 70 to 80 per cent of the traffic is automobile traffic, and I do not think there ought to be any restriction whatever. I think the police ought to be absolutely under the control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and they should be under no obligations to perform any special work. They should be there for general work and all work.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand the suggestion that the Senator makes, but what I am asking about is a fact. In other words, I want to say, with perfect frankness, that if this particular system grows out of a contractual relation with the city I am going to vote to maintain it. If it is a question of general policy, that is a wholly different question; and I should like to know if the Senator from New Hampshire can enlighten me on that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I think the street railroads had nothing to do with this one way or the other. It was put in the bill in conference without any consultation with the railroads, and they certainly did not ask for it, nor did they oppose it, as I remember. I do not know that I was a member of the conference committee at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. It just came up in an appropriation bill, did it?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; there was legislation in reference to a small railroad in the District of Columbia, I think, called the Belt Railroad Line. As the Senator knows, we had 14 or 15 railroad corporations in the District of Columbia at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall it, by reputation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think 11 of them were consolidated into the Washington Railway & Electric Line, as it is known now. Pending that legislation concerning the railroad, which I think was not a matter of any consequence, except that we were constantly dealing with those questions, this amendment got into the bill in conference. That is my recollection of it. I may be wrong, but that is the way I recall it. I will ask the Senator from Utah if that is not so?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I think the answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee is this: I do not think this burden was imposed upon the railroad companies in connection with any franchise that was given to them. It is a burden that was imposed upon them directly by legislation, without any direct consideration, and you can not call it a part of the franchise in any sense. That is my understanding. While I have not been a member of the District Committee, I have, to some extent, kept track of this matter, and I do not think it can be treated in any way as a burden imposed upon them in consideration of or as a part of any franchise that has been given to them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see just how the Congress would have been willing to put this tax on them, just for certain crossing policemen——

Mr. NELSON. They did it by main force.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless it was in consideration of permission to consolidate, or to use each other's tracks, or to use the streets, or something of that kind; and if so, I think we ought to know exactly what the facts are about it before we vote on the question. I hope the Senator will let that particular amendment go over until we do ascertain what the facts are.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Utah has the original act now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will read it for our enlightenment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have sent for the statute, and I have the act itself, and therefore I will read the whole of it:

Be it enacted, etc., That any corporation operating a street railroad within the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to purchase the property and franchises of the Belt Railway Co. under any sale thereof by decree of court or otherwise; and such corporation so purchasing may operate the property and franchises so purchased as a part of its system, subject to all rights and obligations imposed by existing legislation or by this act, so far as the same shall be applicable; and in case the property and franchises of said Belt Railway be purchased by any person or persons at any sale thereof under decree of court or otherwise, such person or persons, or his or their associates and assigns, shall possess and enjoy all the corporate rights, privileges, and franchises heretofore conferred on the said Belt Railway Co. by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, as well as the right to be a corporation under this act; and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchaser or purchasers and his or their associates or assigns shall file for record with the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia a certificate of incorporation hereunder, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its officers, and the names of its directors for the first year, and the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds. The capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares, each of the par value of $100; and any corporation so purchasing or so created and organized hereunder is authorized to issue its bonds and capital stock either for cash or in exchange for the stock, bonds, property, or franchises of the said Belt Railway Co.: Provided, That stock and bonds may be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by a majority vote of the stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the issue of such stock and bonds shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment of said Belt Railway, and shall in no case exceed the sum of $150,000 per mile of single track. And within one year from the ratification by the court of such sale the existing railroad company purchasing the said Belt Railway, or the corporation created and operating hereunder, shall, under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, construct and put into full operation on the entire line of said railway as now constructed an underground electric system similar to the one now in use by the Metropolitan Railroad Co., upon plans to be submitted to and approved by the said commissioners. And the said commissioners are hereby authorized to require such slight changes of tracks along the streets upon which the said Belt Railway is now constructed as may be necessary for the public convenience, and all expenses incident thereto to be borne by said railway company. And the right is hereby expressly reserved to Congress to require at any time the owner or owners of said railroad to widen any of the streets along or over which said railroad line is now constructed, or to change the route thereof, and the entire expense of such widening of such street and all expenses incident or to a change of route thereto shall be borne by the owner or owners of said railroad.

SEC. 2. That the purchaser or purchasers of the said Belt Railway shall, immediately after said purchase shall have been ratified as herein provided for, and before any permit shall be issued to begin such work, pay all taxes and special assessments due and unpaid to the District of Columbia, and all indebtedness due the employees for labor, or due others for coal, feed, horseshoes and other supplies, contracted for by the receiver of the said Belt Railway Co., duly appointed by the court, and used on behalf and for the benefit of said company during such receivership, and to be approved by the court appointing said receiver, and shall begin the construction of the underground electric system herein provided for; and if said system shall not have been completed at the expiration of one year from the ratification of the purchase of said railway as authorized by this act the purchaser or purchasers thereof shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by the said Belt Railway Co., or by the purchaser or purchasers thereof, the sum of $50 for each and every day thereafter until said road shall be completed.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to station special policemen at such street railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as the said commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies; every car shall be brought to a full stop immediately before making such crossing or intersection. Neglect or failure to pay for the service monthly, or to stop any car, as herein provided for shall subject the company to a fine of not to exceed $25 for every such neglect or failure, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. That the company or corporation installing an underground electric system under authority of this act shall deposit such sum or sums as the commissioners may require to cover the cost of District inspection and the cost of changes to public works in the streets.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein shall be construed to relieve the said Belt Railway Co. from any just liability, nor in any manner as affecting any valid subsisting claim of any creditor against said corporation.

SEC. 6. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think I am not mistaken when I say that this Belt Railroad was a bankrupt corporation and that nobody, so far as I recollect, gained any advantage out of this legislation; so that this provision, whether it is wise or unwise, can not properly be said to apply to corporate rights that were granted to any company. It was put in, perhaps, as a wise general provision, at least so regarded; but I am sure it was not placed there as an offset to any advantages that were gained by any corporation in the District.

Mr. SMOOT. Or, in other words, when the law was passed in 1898 the Congress thought that that burden should be borne by the railroads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a proper statement of the case. As I said a moment ago, we had 13 or 14 little corporations here that had been granted charters from time to time. Most of them were in bankruptcy, and in due time we got rid of them by making a consolidation; but this was not a part of that consolidation scheme. It was simply to get rid of one of these corporations that was bankrupt.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. Is it understood that by this amendment we will add 135 extra policemen to the Government pay roll, at a cost of about $156,000?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not one.

Mr. KIRBY. Not an extra one?

Mr. SMOOT. Not one. The 56 extra are the street-crossing policemen. They are added, as the Senator will see, in the bill. There are three amendments——

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; I see there are.

Mr. SMOOT. There are 21 in the first grade, 21 in the second grade, and 14 in the third grade. That makes 56 policemen that are to-day paid by the street railroads. If these amendments are adopted the street railroads will be relieved of the payment of these 56 policemen and the District and the Government will pay the amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there will be no increase in the number of the policemen.

Mr. SMOOT. No; there will be no increase in the number of the policemen.

Mr. KIRBY. But the amendment here provides for 513 privates, whereas the part stricken out says 492.

Mr. SMOOT. But that increase comes from the police that are now paid by the railroads. There is not an increase in the policemen in the District under this bill, but there are 56 more policemen provided for in this bill to be paid by the District of Columbia and the Government who have heretofore been paid by the railroad companies. That is all there is to the whole question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator kindly yield to me again?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just want to say that, as it seems to me, it is perfectly apparent from reading chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, on pages 488 and 489, that this payment of policemen is in reality a franchise tax. Under that act these several corporations were allowed to consolidate and become one or two companies, as the case may be, I do not recall just which; but, anyhow, they were allowed to consolidate. As a consideration for this consolidation and for other privileges given the companies they agreed to pay the salaries of these policemen. That was one of the considerations. It is a contractual relation. The street railways are under a contract with the city of Washington to pay this amount, and they have paid it since the law passed.

The question is not a question of policy at all, because these policemen are city policemen. The street railway company has nothing to do with employing or placing them. They can not say who they shall be. They can not say when or where they may go or what hours they shall work. They have no more to do than any Senator in this body with the selection or discharge of policemen at these track crossings.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from New Hampshire in just a moment. These men are just exactly like any other policemen, except that they have been assigned to duty at these crossings. This act has nothing in the world to do with it, except that as a consideration for being permitted to consolidate and to operate the companies agreed to pay such policemen as the Commissioners might establish at these crossings.

The amount involved is $68,000. It is not a question of policy at all, but purely a business proposition. The question before the Senate is whether we think we ought to relieve the street car companies from that contractual relation. They have borne it for 20 years. They have received and are now enjoying the consideration for it. They have consolidated as provided under the contract that was entered into at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is where I want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no reason in the world offered by the committee why we should release them from their contract at this time. There are no facts whatever before us justifying it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very point on which I wanted to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator say that under that statute the general consolidation was made in which 11 or 12 railroads were consolidated into the Washington Railway & Electric Co.?

Mr. McKELLAR. It so states. It was authorized, and since then it has been carried out. The act says so on its face. It is all in the same act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator read it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, before the Senator reads it, that I had the impression that the consolidation came in connection with legislation relating to the Anacostia Railroad. I am quite clear on that point. The general consolidation was made after that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The language is very broad and would include the Anacostia as well as various other roads. Here is what it says:

That any corporation operating a street railroad within the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to purchase the property and franchises of the Belt Railway Co. under any sale thereof by decree of court or otherwise.

Evidently there was property in the hands of the receiver, and it was contemplated that there should be a sale.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there were 11 or 12 other railroads.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course; but by the purchase of the property of those 10 or 12 others these companies were enjoying the privileges granted by this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that was a different act, a later act.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will continue to read the act:

And such corporation so purchasing may operate the property and franchises so purchased as a part of its system, subject to all rights and obligations imposed by existing legislation or by this act, so far as the same shall be applicable; and in case the property and franchises of said Belt Railway be purchased by any person or persons at any sale thereof, under decree of court or otherwise, such person or persons, or his or their associates and assigns, shall possess and enjoy all the corporate rights, privileges, and franchises heretofore conferred on the said Belt Railway Co. by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875——

Mr. GALLINGER. But manifestly that is not an act to consolidate these 12 roads.

Mr. McKELLAR. It permits them to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; there was subsequent legislation on that point which permitted the consolidation.

Mr. McKELLAR. At all events, the present railway companies have received certain rights and are operating under this statute, and one of the agreements made or one of the considerations that passed to the city for that act was the payment of the salaries of these crossing policemen. I say that where they have deliberately contracted to pay these crossing policemen, where the crossing policemen are for the benefit of the railroad lines of the city and the city has given a quid pro quo for it, there is no reason in the world for the statement that we should violate the obligation of that contract.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just now I am not arguing that point, but I do want the Senator from Tennessee, who is always fair and who is a good lawyer, and I have watched him——

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe that to be true. I want the Senator to understand that the legislation related to one little railroad, called the Belt Railroad, and subsequent legislation was enacted. I wish I had time to get the statute—I have it not now—in connection with the Anacostia road which permitted the consolidation of 10 or 11 of these little what I used to call sore-thumb roads, which amounted to very little and which were not paying their expenses into one corporation called the Washington & Electric Railway Co., which has been, I believe, reasonably successful since then. But this legislation related simply to one little railroad, and it can not be said that they rendered quid pro quo for any benefit they derived from that particular statute.

I am not offering an opinion as to whether the amendment ought to be agreed to or not. I shall vote for it because I acted in committee with my associates in favor of putting it in the bill. But, of course, I recognize there is ground for a different opinion on that point. Some of the street-crossing policemen in the past certainly have been very arrogant because they thought they were independent of the District Commissioners, as they were being paid by the railroads, and I can cite instances where I think they ought to have been disciplined more severely than they were. I have an impression that if they were put under the regular Metropolitan police, as far as appointment and discipline are concerned, and also their compensation, it would be a better system. That is my view. I can not cite cases definitely, but I am sure that the railroads do not pay crossing policemen in the city of Boston or the city of New York. I will ask the Senator from Maryland whether or not they do it in Baltimore?

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator it seems to me the street car companies under this act would have no more right to interfere in any way, directly or indirectly, with the crossing policemen than with any other policeman. The street car companies do not know who they are. They are assigned there by the commissioners, and the commissioners might assign one policeman for half of the day and another policemen for the other half of the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with that statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. The policemen themselves are under no obligations whatever to the street car companies. It is simply a franchise tax, as a matter of fact. The Senator may be entirely correct that there was some other act than this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the case, ought we not to have that other act before the Senate agrees to this amendment by which they wipe out the contractual compensation rendered to the city of $68,000 a year during all these years? Ought we not to have that act and all the facts and have a report here showing the reason why this contract should be violated by the street car companies? The companies are enjoying their privileges granted them by the act. Why should they not continue to pay the Government as agreed by them?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think that is any reason for delaying the vote on this question. That act does not, in my judgment, deal with the matter of paying policemen.

Mr. McKELLAR. The railroad company has agreed for 20 years to pay it and apparently has paid it promptly; there was no question about it, and it has never denied the contract. It is just a question whether we will voluntarily contribute to the railroad companies $68,000 a year from now on instead of the city getting $68,000 a year from the companies for privileges granted to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a correct statement, and upon that I am ready to vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator from New Hampshire asked me a question in regard to Baltimore. I will say, no; and I will go further and say that I do not know of any city in the Union of any size where any part of the police force is paid by the street railway companies.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know of a great many smaller cities where they are not paid by the street railway companies.

Mr. McKELLAR. I happen, in the city in which I live, the city of Memphis, to have been interested in the lighting business, among other projects more or less doubtful, and I know that the lighting company with which I was connected furnishes so many street lights to the city free of charge. They contracted to do it, and I imagine that is the case with almost every city of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. They do here.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is due not to policy, but it is in the nature of a franchise tax. In other words, when the company was asking the city for the privileges—I do not recall what they were; I do not believe I was connected with the company at that time—but when asked for these privileges the city said, "We will give you those privileges provided that you contribute so much to the lighting of the city."

Mr. GALLINGER. Under duress.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not under duress but by voluntary contract. It is exactly as if the city of Washington 20 years ago said, through its then government, to the companies that it was perfectly willing for the companies to consolidate, but it shall be on certain terms, and one of those terms, as shown, was that the companies would pay the crossing policemen; and surely no more proper or useful terms could be made for a city than that. We all realize that these crossing policemen are necessary. They are the best policemen we have. I differ with the Senator who says they do not do their duty or that they go beyond their duty. I do not think we could get along without them. They are absolutely necessary, and I want to commend the wisdom of the gentlemen who put that in the contract 20 years ago. We ought to hold onto it. The street cars would probably kill hundreds of people if it were not for these regulations and these policemen. These policemen are doing an excellent work. The necessity for them was never greater than now while we have so many strangers within our gates. They work for the city only. They have nothing to do with street car companies except to make them obey the law just like they make the automobiles, the wagons, the carriages, and the pedestrians obey the law at these crossings. Incidentally I have no doubt they save the street car companies many times their combined salaries in saving them damages for accidents that would take place but for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the Senator's attention—and I am not going to make any argument about it; I think we ought to vote on this matter—that the statute consolidating these roads was passed June 5, 1900, and it provides that the Anacostia & Potomac River Railroad Co., the Brightwood Railway Co. of the District of Columbia, the Capital Railway Co., the City & Suburban Railway Co., the Columbia Railway Co., the Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., and various others shall be consolidated. That is the act which gave a franchise to one company due to the consolidation of 10 or 11 or 12 companies, as I recall it, and no provision of this kind was put in that act. So it can not be said that in providing for the sale of this one little bankrupt, defunct corporation any franchise benefit was derived. That is all that I want to say about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Evidently, if the Senator will permit me, they are enjoying the privileges granted by this act, and if they are enjoying them they ought to enjoy the burdens. If this act did not apply to them, they would not be paying according to its terms, and they would not be interested in having this amendment adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is about the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wanted to have a vote upon this amendment, but I realize that it is next to impossible to get a quorum, and therefore I will be content, as far as I am concerned, with a viva voce vote. I did promise one Senator that I would ask for a yea-and-nay vote on it, but it is Saturday afternoon; there are very few Senators present; and it will be next to impossible to get a quorum. Therefore all I want is a viva voce vote on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, lines 6 and 7, the committee proposes to strike out "78 privates of class 2, at $1,080 each," and insert "99 privates of class 2 (including crossing policemen), at $1,200 each."

Mr. SMOOT. The other two amendments are the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are the same; and unless there is objection, they will be disagreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There are four amendments on page 60.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be disagreed to, and the Senate will disagree to the total reported by the committee in line 23.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that the Secretary be instructed to correct all totals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will correct the totals in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 23, insert the following:

The German language shall not be taught in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and no part of the appropriations made by this act shall be used for the payment of any teacher to give instruction in the German language or for the purchase of any books for use in such instruction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Senator from Utah has conscientious convictions about this matter of teaching German in the public schools of the District of Columbia, but it does not appeal to me. We can go too far in our prejudices sometimes and in our desire to punish somebody or something. The German language would have been very useful to me a few evenings ago, when I was riding in a street car and overhearing a conversation I did not understand. I do not know that I would have been given possession of any very valuable information, but really at that time I very much wished that I was a German scholar.

It is one of the languages accepted by the world and taught in every school and university on earth. I believe that in some instances they have passed legislation such as the Senator suggests—I think they have in Chicago—but I do not see any good that comes from it. For the life of me I can not see that any good is to come of it.

As I chance to know, a few years ago English and French were taught in every school in the German Empire. I do not know that Germany has taken some——

Mr. SMOOT. It was required.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was required by law that English and French should be taught in every school in Germany; and just now why we should, in a moment of hate, as it may be, for the German Empire, interfere with the educational processes of our country at the Capital of our country is more than I can understand.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator think that the passage of such laws by Congress or by a legislature or by a city municipality tends in a way to brand Germany as a world outlaw? The Senator speaks of hate. I confess that I never imagined that I could develop such hatred toward a nation as I have toward Germany. I think Germany should be branded as a world outlaw, and we should never have anything to do with her again as long as this Union lasts.

Mr. GALLINGER. We may brand as much as we please, but we will have something to do with Germany after this war closes.

Mr. KENYON. In a commercial way, I very much doubt it. I do not believe that we can compel the people of the United States to trade with Germany or to buy German goods.

Mr. GALLINGER. As long as commercialism exists in American hearts, as it certainly does now, I imagine we will trade where we can trade to our best advantage—that is my judgment—after the war is over and peace is declared, and we once more get rid of the horrible, terrible, sickening war we are in now. I do not think we ought to carry our hatred to such an extent as to interfere with educational processes in our country.

Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment, that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am a member of the District of Columbia Committee. I knew the amendment of the Senator from Utah was before that committee, and as a member of that committee I would heartily support the amendment if given an opportunity in the committee or on the floor. The matter I understand never came up in the committee with reference to this bill. I spoke to some members about it and some of them thought it was not a proper place to bring up this question, but in making a point of order it is not made in behalf of the committee in any way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I had any idea that the Chair would sustain the point of order I would make some remarks in discussing the point of order in answer to the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in grave doubt as to what the Chair ought to do about it. The first part of the amendment is clearly subject to a point of order; the last part of it is not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think that either part is subject to a point of order, but in view of the suggestion just made by the Chair I withdraw that amendment and offer the following.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 23, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following words:

Provided, That no part of said appropriation or any appropriation herein shall be used for the payment of any teacher to give instruction in the German language or for the purchase of any books for use in such instruction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, beyond a question a point of order would not lie against this amendment. I have no desire to delay a vote on it or to discuss it. I think we ought to vote on it now and settle it without taking much of our time. I shall vote against it, but if a majority think otherwise, that settles it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in pursuance of the suggestion just made by the Senator from Utah, I had prepared an amendment to his amendment which I was about to offer; but I am informed that the appropriations carried by this bill go only to the public schools, and therefore the amendment that I contemplated would not be appropriate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss this matter at all. I was impressed by what the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] said. The German boys who are on the high seas and in France fighting for the principles in which we believe are the sons of hundreds of thousands of Germans who fought on the Union side during the Civil War. I have never believed, and I never will believe, that any very large proportion of those men have had any intention of being disloyal to this Government. Their sons are not disloyal now. I do not believe those men who went through the hell of the Civil War, carrying the banner of the United States, had any thought of being disloyal. But in this emergency, when we want to encourage those men to stand with us in this great contest in which we believe we will be triumphant in the end, why adopt an amendment of this kind, excluding from the schools the teaching of the language that they were taught to love by their mothers and their fathers, and that, so far as I can see, can do no harm?

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. If it is thought wise to do that, I have no complaint; but it does seem to me that we might well let matters remain as they are so far as our educational institutions are concerned, and all unite, as we are all united, to win this war, and settle once for all the question of German supremacy in the world. I do not think you will add anything to the probability or the possibility of our winning the war by passing an amendment of this kind striking down the German language in the public schools of the Capital of the Nation.

I am ready for the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me one moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I fear that Mr. Creel is encouraging German ideas and German kultur by printing his pamphlets in the German language, a copy of one of which I hold in my hand. I presume the matter in the pamphlet is all right, but according to the decision of the Senate, just announced, it strikes me that it is the duty of the Government in printing documents to ignore the German language and use plain English.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to offer an amendment, but I simply want to take a few moments of the time of the Senator to direct attention to a provision of the bill, but shall not oppose the appropriation provided for in the bill. On page 56 of the bill I find this item:

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, $15,000.

Mr. President, when this item was first appropriated for we were told that it never would require very much of an appropriation, that it was simply to provide a fund to pay the expenses of opening the schoolhouses for certain purposes. I am not going to complain of this appropriation and I did not complain of the amount appropriated in one of the deficiency appropriation bills for the same purpose, but I think the amount asked for is growing rather rapidly and I expect it will grow more so in the future. I told the Senate at the time that it would grow, but I do not like to see it growing with leaps and bounds within so short a time.

Mr. President, what is the program of the people having these appropriations in hand? I have here a memorandum for the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and I say if this program is carried out we will have to appropriate as much for the service as we appropriated for the District schools, and perhaps more.

The activities provided for under the act carried out in the various centers are under the following heads: This is a statement from the officers of the community forum work. Under the head of educational we find these are the subjects to be treated. This is what we are expected to appropriate the money for in future to carry out the ideas and plans of the organization for which we must pay. As under the head of educational we find:

Stenography, typewriting, French, Spanish, English, cooking, sewing, millinery, knitting, crocheting, embroidery, business arithmetic, bookkeeping, decimal filing, violin for youths, and other branches as asked for.

It is unlimited. Under the head of "Civic" we find:

Liberty loan, war-savings stamps, thrift stamps, food conservation, liberty war kitchen, cooking demonstrations, war gardening, community buying, Red Cross, surgical dressing, first aid, child welfare, reconstruction of garments, parent-teacher meetings, citizens' associations, lectures on war topics.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, where are they to receive all these blessings?

Mr. SMOOT. From the community forum, and to be conducted in the school buildings.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. At what time?

Mr. SMOOT. At whatever time the officers shall designate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The schools are to stop, for instance, to fiddle during the session of the schools.

Mr. SMOOT. They are not supposed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator. I see where it is going to lead in time.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the head of "Recreational" we have the following:

Social dancing, rythmic dancing, folk dancing, dramatic art, glee club, community orchestra, community band, choral society, literary club, swimming, rowing, rifle club, basket ball, baseball, gymnasium work, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, library.

Mr. President, can not we see where we are drifting? Is it possible that we are going to make a precedent here, to be followed or pointed to by all the States of the Union, and say that notwithstanding the wonderful public-school system that is established in every State of this Union, which every citizen in the Union approves of and every citizen says, "Tax me to the limit for the education of the American child, whether I have children or not," we are going to embark upon this sort of so-called education and to be carried on in the public-school buildings?

I believe in the proper education in most of the subjects named, but the work should not be connected with our District schools. The Senator from Arizona lives in a part of the country where he knows there are organizations for carrying on a great deal of this work, but they are not organizations the officers of which are paid annual salaries and given clerks and extravagant expenses paid.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Nor connected with the public schools.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor connected with the public schools, as the Senator suggests. If this program is carried out, what time of the day is going to be occupied in the teaching of our children? The schoolhouses are to be used in the evening, I suppose, for dancing and recreation. If stenography and typewriting and crocheting and knitting and cooking are to be taught, it must be done in the daytime, I think. Where will all this lead?

Mr. President, I am not going to complain further, only to say that the program is started, and Senators know whenever there is an item put in an appropriation bill, particularly where it provides for the employment of any number of people, it never gets out of the future appropriation bills and never grows less in amount. Since I have been a Member of this body I have seen the initial appropriation provide for a few thousand dollars, and the statement made upon the floor in explanation of it that it was only a temporary matter, and that a similar appropriation would never again be requested. I have seen appropriations grow from $5,000 per annum up until they exceed at present a quarter of a million dollars. I wondered whether this appropriation is going to be one of the same character. I hope not.

Mr. President, I do not ask for a reconsideration of the vote increasing the appropriation from $10,000 to $15,000; I do not ask for a vote upon it; but I felt that it was my duty to call attention to the program that is mapped out, so that it would appear in the RECORD for future reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will withhold the motion for a moment.

SPANISH WAR AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION PENSIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4444) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in the Boxer rebellion in China. It is not my purpose to press the bill at this time if it is the desire of the Senate to adjourn, but I should like to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I hope the Senator will not insist on that. Of course, it would necessitate the calling of a quorum, and it would be utterly impossible to get a quorum here this afternoon.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not see why it should be necessary to call for a quorum. The bill is on the calendar, and we can certainly pass on a motion of this character by a viva voce vote. This is the manner in which it is usually done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think it will necessitate calling for a quorum, because there are other measures that have the right of way.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the Senator will not call for a quorum. I know of no other measure that has the right of way, and this is an important bill and has already been too long delayed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I shall be compelled to do so if the Senator insists on his motion to call up the bill.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that now.

Mr. KING. The Senator can prefer his request on Monday just as well.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Kansas that he give notice that on Monday at the first opportunity he will make a motion to take up the bill. Then Senators will have notice given that this is the Senator's intention and then he can follow up that notice with action.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I wish to say that I made that suggestion for the reason that I know a number of Senators understand that there are some measures of very great importance which have the right of way, if I may be permitted to use that expression, and they would have been here to-day if they had suspected that a motion was to be submitted to bring some other measure before the Senate for consideration. I have no objection at all to the consideration of the measure offered by the Senator from Kansas, but I feel, in justice to the understanding of a number of Senators, that it would be improper not to make the call for a quorum if the Senator insists upon calling up the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to say that I know of no bill which has the right of way, and this is the first favorable opportunity I have had to present this matter. I make the motion at the request of a large number of Senators and numerous constituents, who are interested in the bill. I am satisfied that a majority of the Senate want to consider this measure at an early date. But in view of what the Senator from Maryland has said, that the chances are we will be unable to obtain a quorum this afternoon, and in line with the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah, I give notice now that at the first opportunity, at the close of the routine business on Monday, June 17, I shall move to take this bill from the calendar. I adopt this course now in order to save the calling for a quorum, which I am satisfied we could not obtain, and we would be compelled to adjourn without action on my motion.

Mr. KING. I should like to make one observation. Permit me to say in this connection that there is a measure I am very much interested in and that I should like to have moved at this time to make the special order for consideration on Monday; but in deference to the wishes of others, and in view of the fact that a number of Senators are not here who would have been here if they had anticipated that any business was to be called up to-day for consideration on Monday, I did not even urge the consideration of my own measure.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill called up by my colleague, the senior Senator from Kansas, and have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose ways are past finding out, help us with the eye of faith to penetrate the vale that we may see somewhat beyond the inscrutable mysteries which surround us, that we may live to our best thoughts, to our highest and noblest aspirations, and thus fulfill Thy commands and satisfy our own desires. Let Thy blessing be upon our soldiers, sailors, and aviators, and guide them to victory, that peace and tranquillity may once more smile upon the world, for liberty, justice, and mercy, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, June 14, 1918, appears the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], made on June 13, on the Post Office appropriation bill. In the course of the speech, referring to the pneumatic tubes, the following colloquy is reported as having occurred between the gentleman from Tennessee and myself:

Mr. MOON. You need not accept it as an apology. If I had the proof of fraud on the gentleman, I would tell him about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank enough to believe the gentleman would, and therefore he fails to produce any.

Mr. MOON. But I tell you one thing, I want you to keep away from that bourse, or you may be liable to such a charge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has no knowledge of any bourse, and the gentleman ought not to make such an insinuation.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to defer this for a moment as I have sent for the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This involves no controversy, it is simply a clerical error. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] was speaking in a low tone of voice and his words were not distinct. His reference to fraud in connection with the pneumatic tubes was challenged by me and some pleasantries occurred between the gentleman from Tennessee and myself. I did not quite hear all that the gentleman from Tennessee said, but when I obtained a copy of the reporter's notes I found that the gentleman was reported as saying:

But I tell you one thing, I want you to keep away from that boss, or you may be liable to such a charge.

Then I revised the reporter's notes of my answer to the gentleman from Tennessee so that it would correspond as follows:

The gentleman has no knowledge of any "boss" and the gentleman ought not to make such an insinuation.

I now find as the speech is finally revised by the gentleman from Tennessee that he has stricken out the word "boss" as it appeared in his statement and inserted "bourse," and that the word "boss" is stricken out in my reply, so that I am made to say:

The gentleman has no knowledge of any bourse, and the gentleman ought not to make such an insinuation.

I do have knowledge of a bourse. The bourse is a large business institution in my city which has opposed the Postmaster General and also the gentleman from Tennessee on the pneumatic-tube question about which we were contending. To say I had no knowledge of it would have been a ridiculous statement. What I did say in answer to what I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to say, and which he was reported as saying, was that I had no knowledge of a "boss." I do not know just how they interpret the term "boss" down in Tennessee, but it is more or less offensive in the State of Pennsylvania, and I was impelled to resent it as it appeared in the notes. If the gentleman said "bourse" and not "boss," I can understand the situation, but it leaves me in an awkward position.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that the RECORD be corrected so far as I am made to say that I "knew no bourse." I certainly do know there is a bourse in my city, a very influential organization.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I did not say "boss" at all; I did not refer to "boss" in any way, shape, or form. My only reference in the world was to the Philadelphia Bourse, and that is the matter I said I wanted to talk with the gentleman about. I did not mention any boss. I did not know the gentleman had any boss in Philadelphia. It is mighty hard to boss him down here, I know. [Laughter.] I made no reference to a boss at all and did not intend to say anything about a boss. If he talked about a boss, then he is at liberty to make any correction he desires. I was talking about the bourse.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman is so pleasant about it.

The SPEAKER. What is it that the gentleman desires to do?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nothing more than to accept the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, which clarifies the RECORD. The gentleman confirms what I try to affirm myself, that I know no boss—except my wife. [Laughter.]

THE SPACE PLAN OF CARRYING MAIL.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from the Postmaster General with reference to the change from the weight to the space plan in carrying the mail.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from the Postmaster General. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM A. AYRES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. AYRES: Referring to your inquiry as to the economy effected in the transportation of the mails through the establishment of the space basis of pay, which economy has been brought into question by Representative STEENERSON in his speech on June 13, I beg to advise as follows:

Representative STEENERSON was wrong in saying that "the last report of the Postmaster General shows that they paid $3,250,000 more than they would have paid under the weight plan." The annual report referred to makes no such statement. The report shows what the Post Office Department has always contended, that if the service exacted of the railroads under the weight basis were paid for under the space basis the cost of the service would be greater than under the weight basis, but that under the space basis of pay economies in loading and dispatching could be made that would enable the department to save to the public several millions of dollars in the cost of transporting the mails.

The space basis went into effect at midnight of October 31, 1916. At that instant not the actual pay but the annual rate of pay to the railroads increased $3,250,000. However, the Post Office Department immediately began its readjustment of the transportation service by a system of intensive loading and of more rational dispatching of the mail, with the result that the annual rate of pay to the railroads quickly and steadily declined.

The Post Office Department's expectation of saving $7,000,000, referred to by Representative STEENERSON, is fully justified, as will be seen from the following reports on authorized annual rate of pay to the railroads at various dates:

Oct. 31, 1916, on weight basis	$62,242,000
Nov. 1, 1916, weight and space combined	65,492,000
July 1, 1917, weight and space combined	58,518,000
Sept. 30, 1917, weight and space combined	56,509,000
Dec. 31, 1917, weight and space combined	55,046,000
Mar. 31, 1918, weight and space combined	53,890,000

If there is still doubt in the mind of anyone as to whether the Post Office Department has reduced the cost of carrying the mails on railway lines, let him ask the railroads.

Sincerely, yours,
A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, this seeks to increase this appropriation by $100,000. In the urgent deficiency appropriation bill of March 28, 1918, there was carried the following appropriation:

War materials investigations: For inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances which are particularly needed for carrying on the war, in connection with military and manufacturing purposes, and which have heretofore been largely imported, with a view to developing domestic sources of supply and substitutes for such ores and mineral products as are particularly needed, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries; and including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, and subsistence, and not exceeding $5,340 for personal services in the District of Columbia; to continue available during the fiscal year 1919, $150,000.

As that passed the Senate it appropriated $250,000, but as finally agreed upon by the conferees it carried $150,000. I thought that the extra $100,000, to be used during the coming year, would be appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill, but the bill does not carry any amount. For that reason I have offered this amendment to increase this amount, to restore it to the amount as originally provided in the Senate. This is an important work, and one that ought to be carried on in the coming year, and there ought to be sufficient money with which to do it.

This investigation is made to develop, if possible, sources of minerals for war needs in our own country. We passed, as you remember, a bill which provided for the Government taking over, if necessary, and controlling all the mineral resources necessary for war purposes. This investigation is going forward and the appropriation of $150,000, true, is available for the year 1919, and does not expire with the coming 1st of July; but the work is so important in connection with this war that we ought to make sure that there is sufficient money to do this work during the year 1919, and I submit that these materials, which are necessary for the Government, which must be had in the manufacture of steel and the manufacture of munitions, must be had. We must get them somewhere, and if they are not developed in this country we must import them, and now we all know that the question of importation is a serious proposition for our own country and we ought to relieve the imports of this country to just as small a margin as possible, and if we can possibly secure what is necessary here it ought to be done. We have not paid so much attention to these low-grade ores in the past by which we might secure manganese, tungsten, and other materials which are absolutely necessary, and the war can not be waged without these materials, and for that reason I have introduced this amendment to appropriate $100,000, and I think that there is reason why it should be done in connection with the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman state what is being done to get tungsten from South America?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know; I can not tell the gentleman; but I know we are developing now more tungsten in this country than was ever developed before, and part of the work—part of this $250,000, if it shall become available, shall be used for developing tungsten in our own country and increasing our own supply, so that we may, if possible, be independent of any imports which might have to come from another country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am informed, and I shall submit the information to the gentleman who is chairman of the Committee on Mines, that a number of Americans are interested in the development of tungsten in Bolivia, but are very much hampered in getting it now by reason of the shipping conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no doubt the gentleman is correct about that, because we know shipping has been taken for use for other purposes and there are no ships to import that material into this country now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Banking conditions have something to do with that, also.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will any of the money which the gentleman proposes to have appropriated by his amendment to be used in any way toward the development of foreign ores?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is simply for use in the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. In the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is his amendment in anticipation of the mining bill which was passed by the House some time ago—the $10,000,000 bill?

Mr. FOSTER. This has nothing to do with that any more than to help the development——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. And if possible find those ores in sufficient quantities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it necessary to adopt this amendment now in view of the mining bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the mining bill has not become a law and I do not know whether it will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is in anticipation of that bill?

Mr. FOSTER. That went to the Senate some time ago, and it is still there. I do not know what they are going to do, but I submit it is an urgent and important matter for the carrying on of the war that we shall find out where these ores are and, if possible, secure them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman this: Is the gentleman preparing to provide for this inquiry whether the $10,000,000 mining bill passes or not?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And if the mining bill does not pass, then he would have this $100,000 appropriation to go upon?

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct. There would be some help to secure the necessary war materials.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether we are now progressed in the development of tungsten and manganese ores to any appreciable extent in this country?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman we are, and also with chrome. They are making investigations so as to enable our Government to secure more manganese, more tungsten, and more chrome than we have ever done before.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Where does the tungsten come from?

Mr. FOSTER. Largely from Colorado.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know whether it is true, because a good many fictions come out of Mexico, but I have been told in that country there are important deposits containing tungsten.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not doubt that is true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman has not investigated that, however?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember as to that now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As to manganese I am sure they have it in large quantities. In obtaining it from there we would not be bothered with the question of ships or water transportation.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But by some other troubles.

Mr. FOSTER. But we are trying to develop so if any emergencies should possibly arise so that we can not secure these materials which are now being imported, that we may be able to rely absolutely upon our own country and have these materials necessary for war purposes developed right here at home.

Now, that is the situation. Of course, it is for the House to do what it thinks best in the matter, but I submit that $100,000 in war times to make investigations to be sure that we have within the United States war material is not a large amount, and I think the Bureau of Mines ought to be given that amount to make these investigations, if possible, that we may be more independent from the world.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior for this investigation was $200,000. After that estimate was furnished to the committee an estimate was submitted for a deficiency of $150,000, which appropriation was granted in the deficiency bill, and that appropriation is made available for the next fiscal year. So that for the next fiscal year the bureau now has an appropriation of $150,000. In addition to that $150,000, this bill carries an appropriation of $100,000, making a total appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose of prosecuting this work, which is in excess of the amount first estimated for by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If you will excuse me, I will yield to you later.

Mr. HAMLIN. Right at that point.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not.

Last year the bureau had for this purpose $100,000. Under the deficiency bill they have secured an additional appropriation of $150,000. Mr. Manning, when before the committee, in reply to the following inquiry, said:

Mr. BYRNES. How much of it do you expect to spend by July 1?
Mr. MANNING. Of the $150,000?
Mr. BYRNES. Yes.
Mr. MANNING. I can not tell, because an organization must be created. It is difficult to get men at the regular salaries that the Government is paying now. The bureau is getting some of the highest-priced men in the country who are giving their services gratuitously to the Government.

Mr. Manning practically stated that he did not believe he could perfect an organization to prosecute this work until the beginning of this next fiscal year. And from July 1 on he will have $250,000 to pursue the work.

Now, Congress is not going to adjourn forever. Even if $250,000, in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], is not sufficient for this work, notwithstanding the department asked for only $200,000 originally, the Congress will be in session in December, and if this organization is perfected and they enter upon the work, and an additional amount is desired, he can come before the committee, and in the appropriation bills that will be passed at the short session money can be provided for this work just as we anticipate providing it for other work mentioned in this bill.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] refers to his mining bill, providing for similar investigation, which has gone to the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield before he leaves that? I would like to call his attention to a letter——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield now.

And the gentleman from Illinois says that this appropriation is in anticipation of that. But he did not mean that. It is in extension of the work provided for in his mining bill. He states it is pending in the Senate and may not pass. Because that bill may not pass, he asks for this appropriation of $100,000. In justice to himself he ought to make it $10,000,000. But if the original bill, providing $10,000,000, does not pass the Senate we have no assurance that an appropriation here for $10,000,000 or an additional $100,000 will pass the Senate. We have to rely on the director of the bureau asking for the money that he thinks essential for the prosecution of this work at this time. He asked for $200,000 in his original estimate, and if you adopt the report of the committee you will give him $250,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Of the $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated in the other bill not one cent of that money can be used for this purpose, not a penny, because it is a different proposition entirely and so provides in the bill. Now, the $500,000 appropriated in that bill is for the administration of the work. So there is not a dollar, when you come to think about this, in that bill that can be used for this work.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois mentioned that bill, and for that reason alone I referred to it. It does not affect in any way the question here that the director of the bureau asked for $200,000, and if you adopt the report of the committee you will have given him $250,000. I think he ought to know the work he can perform, and he stated in April he had not perfected his organization.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman says this can all be used. Now, in the regular appropriation of this money which has existed for several years, there is other work to be done with this $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a letter written by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, or rather to such portions of it as apply to this particular item. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] says that this work is not organized and can not be organized within the very near future. The Acting Secretary of the Interior does not seem to agree with him, for he says, after referring to another matter in this bill:

The second item is for $100,000 for mineral mining with reference to special war minerals required in the conduct of the war. In the urgent deficiency bill, passed in March of this year, $150,000 was provided for this same purpose. The work on these war minerals has been started under this appropriation and can be continued for some months longer, but unless this additional $100,000 is authorized this work will come to a standstill without having brought to a successful conclusion the work now under way to secure the information necessary to insure this country having an adequate supply of special minerals absolutely essential in the conduct of the war.

Now, that is the statement in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], in regard to this particular item. I am in entire sympathy with the policy of the Appropriations Committee, as I understand it, and that is to practice economy wherever it can be done without injury, of course, to the interests of the Government. But I submit, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, that there are two different ways to practice economy, or, rather, there are two kinds of extravagances. There is one kind of extravagance, for instance, where we would throw open wide the doors of the Treasury and appropriate money for every purpose that might be suggested and without any regard to the amount appropriated. That would, of course, be unreasonable extravagance. On the other hand, we can be just as extravagant, so far as the effect goes, if we were to withhold the necessary appropriations to carry out work already in progress and for which the Government has already expended hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in that way lose the benefit of the money already expended.

I have been convinced, as a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, that there is scarcely anything connected with the prosecution of this war that is of more vital importance than the conservation and the production of essentially necessary minerals in this country. It is impossible for us to continue to import necessary materials for the manufacture of arms and ammunition in this country on account of the lack of ships.

I have here a letter from the Bureau of Mines which gives information that may be of great interest, and I think will be interesting to Members of the House. I read:

The Bureau of Mines has completed a survey of the pyrite mines of the country and of the principal sulphur deposits. It has made a preliminary study of the concentrated acid plants with a view to increasing their output. It has cooperated with the work leading to the establishment of nitrate plants. It has examined the principal manganese districts of the country and undertaken to analyze metallurgical practice as related to the use of lower grade alloys and ores. It has undertaken a study of the nonessential uses of chromite, although at the same time making a detailed study of the steps necessary to increase production. It is studying milling and grading methods to increase the output of graphite produced in this country.

and to overcome the difficulties involved in its use for crucibles. Investigations in many other minerals are under way. The principal technical work essential to these problems has been laid out, but will be brought to a standstill through a lack of funds, unless additional appropriation is made.

The importance of these minerals—

Referring to the minerals which we have been talking about—is far greater than either their tonnage or value would indicate. The two fundamental materials for the production of all modern high-power explosives are nitrate, chiefly as nitric acid, and concentrated sulphuric acid made from pyrite or sulphur. Manganese is the most essential alloy for high-grade steel for munitions and important industrial uses. Flake graphite is used for crucibles required in the production of brass and crucible steel. Mercury is used as fulminate to explode cartridges and shells, and is essential for the safe and effective use of all high explosives. Potash is used chiefly for fertilizer with smaller amounts for explosives, soap, glass, and chemicals. Tungsten is an essential alloy for high-speed tool steel. Antimony is required for hardening lead for bullets. Chromite is used to make an alloy for tool steel, and as a refractory lining in basic open-hearth steel furnaces. Magnesite is used as a refractory in metallurgical plants. Mica is indispensable as an insulating material in the manufacture of electric apparatus.

The supply of these minerals is now inadequate, due to scarcity of ships and interrupted import and to greatly increased military requirements. The minerals to be considered represent an import tonnage of about 2,000,000 tons, requiring the constant use of from 300,000 to 400,000 tons on dead-weight shipping.

These are figures that ought to attract the attention of Members of the House. I read further:

The continuance of this import is becoming more uncertain every day, due to the need for ships to transport troops. Besides the ship tonnage required, dependence on foreign import for essential minerals may involve diplomatic concessions, foreign financial obligations, inadequate supply, and congestion of port facilities.

In 1918 the probable value of these minerals produced in the United States will be about $100,000,000. The value of these minerals imported will be about $170,000,000, and the value of the alloys and chemicals produced from them will be $230,000,000, making a total of $500,000,000.

A large part of the domestic development has taken place since the war, and if these industries are to be permanent, so that the country will be self-sustaining in its supply of these essential minerals, all possible technical assistance and stimulation must be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, I submit that this statement appeals to my reason. I do not know personally whether this Bureau of Mines needs this additional $100,000 or not. I take it that they do. They say so. The Acting Secretary of the Interior says so, and Mr. Manning, the Director of the Bureau of Mines, says so.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. In just a moment. Now, I am not in sympathy with the statement that I heard on the floor yesterday to the effect that the chiefs of these different bureaus are profligate and extravagant in their requests for money, and that whatever we give them they spend, whether they spend it rightly or wrongly. I do know that these people in their desire and ambition to develop and crowd forward the work of their departments sometimes perhaps are not as economical as you or I would be. Yet I do not believe that those officials are absolutely unconcerned about the welfare of the country or the condition of the Treasury in making these requests. I have learned to believe that down at the Bureau of Mines we have got some of the best scientists on earth and men just as patriotic as they can be; that they realize that we have in this country to-day the essential raw, basic materials that are necessary to make this country self-sustaining in this war, and that all that we need to do is to give them the opportunity to teach the public, to demonstrate to private capital in this country that these minerals can be developed and can be treated in a commercial way that will pay them to go into the business.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. And give to this country the benefit of those materials and not have to depend on Germany or any other country for them. Now I yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that the reason the gentleman wanted to appropriate $50,000,000—to get private capital to develop the work?

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Missouri was advocating not the appropriation of $50,000,000. If the gentleman from Kentucky will only remember, the gentleman from Missouri said on that occasion that he was not wedded to any special amount; that if $50,000,000 were necessary, then he wanted it appropriated. If $10,000,000 would serve the purpose, then that would be satisfactory.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I was talking about was the gentleman's talking about educating private industry to do it itself, and yet the other day, when we had up the $50,000,000, he was talking about the need of the Treasury to step in and get it done.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman fails to distinguish between the purposes of that bill and this additional appropriation of $100,000 to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was just struck with the facility of the gentleman to make arguments to meet the needs of the hour.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Missouri was entirely consistent in advocating that bill which provided for the development and treatment of certain rare materials in this country, and this appropriation is to carry on work for which the gentleman's committee has already appropriated $150,000, but which the Secretary of the Interior says must stop within the next few months unless this extra $100,000 is added.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in making up this bill the committee endeavored to exercise economy in all items, but the committee was very careful not to reduce estimates made for war purposes unless it was very clearly developed that the estimates were excessive.

In this case the committee not only gave, in view of what had been given in the deficiency bill about two months ago, all that was estimated but $50,000 more, and my own personal opinion of the matter, based upon some information, is that the Director of the Bureau of Mines was reasonably satisfied with what the committee did. But chiefs are sometimes persuaded by gentlemen who imagine that there should be increased appropriations and approach them with that theory, and generally in a case of that kind the chief is willing to admit that if he had more money he would try to spend it.

Now, what are the facts in regard to this particular appropriation? Last October the bureau estimated $200,000 as the sum necessary for carrying on this work relative to what may be called the minor, though important and essential, war minerals—alloys, principally; but in March he concluded that he needed some of that money before the beginning of the fiscal year. An estimate was made to the committee for $150,000 in advance, and that $150,000 was granted, and Mr. Manning, when he appeared before the committee a very short time ago with the opportunity to explain fully to the committee, with the committee sympathetic with his aims and purposes, made this answer to the question of the gentleman from South Carolina. I will read this again in order to emphasize it:

Asked if he had been able to spend this money, or how much of it he had spent, he did not say that he had spent any of it. Asked as to how much he expected to spend before the 1st of July, he said:

I can not tell, because an organization must be created.

That was six weeks ago, and he then had $150,000 on hand. The organization had not been created. He said it was difficult to get men at the regular salary the Government is paying, and so forth and so on.

When the committee reached this item of $200,000, it necessarily took into consideration the situation, to wit, that $150,000 of the $200,000 had already been appropriated and was on hand, largely unused, unexpended; and instead of giving the balance of $50,000, we gave $100,000, or $50,000 more in all than had been estimated as being necessary and essential. Now, to give an additional sum would be simply pressing on this bureau a sum of money that they could not intelligently or economically use. Now one thing more on that subject——

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask you a question right at that point.

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman understood that no part of this $150,000 had been used, and that they were only asking for $200,000, how did the committee happen to give them $100,000 more?

Mr. MONDELL. We are dealing not only fairly but liberally in this bill with every war industry; and if the gentleman's case has so little foundation that he now quibbles——

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not quibbling.

Mr. MONDELL. And complains because the committee gave more than the original estimate, I can not yield to him further to discuss the proposition from that standpoint.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the situation with regard to these matters?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield now.

Mr. HAMLIN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman was criticizing my position, and I asked him to yield. Unless he is willing to yield, I shall certainly object to his request.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman desires to object, that is his privilege, and I have no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. I certainly will, unless the gentleman does me the courtesy to yield for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. When one makes a request for an extension of time, the Chair hardly thinks that another Member can reserve the right to object in order to propound a question. It must be a matter of objection or no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Chair will permit me, under ordinary circumstances I think that is correct; but the gentleman from Wyoming referred to the gentleman from Missouri in a rather uncomplimentary way, and I had already asked him if he would yield, and he had declined to do so. Unless he yields I shall certainly object.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that no one made any such condition when the gentleman himself asked an extension.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, I will not object. Let the gentleman go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Now I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was just going to say that I think the gentleman from Wyoming had no right to refer to what I said as "quibbling." The point I was trying to get at was this: Did not the committee have some information before them, something to lead them to believe that this Bureau of Mines would need more than the additional $50,000, and was not that the reason they gave them the $100,000?

Mr. MONDELL. The committee felt that this was, so far as it was necessary to carry it on, an essential war service.

Mr. HAMLIN. And that perhaps $50,000 additional would not be enough.

Mr. MONDELL. This sum that was granted on the deficiency bill was granted some little time ago. A small amount of it might have been spent. There could not have been much of it spent, and the committee felt that in granting $100,000 they were unquestionably granting a sum which, with the sum still on hand, would give the bureau practically its entire estimate at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not doubt the good faith of the committee. I think the gentleman is fair in his statement, but it now appears that they need an extra $50,000, as shown by the statement of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Acting Secretaries sometimes have considerable basis of information for their communication, frequently do; but do not always have any very considerable amount of information on which to base their communications, as we all of us know who have been here any considerable length of time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the situation by and large with regard to this and many other important matters: The Federal Government can render some assistance. The Federal Government ought to render all the assistance it can in reason, but my personal opinion, based on some knowledge of the situation, is that after all there is not so very much that the Federal Government can do in the matter of encouraging the production of steel alloys at this time.

As a matter of fact there is some question as to the need that there shall be much done by the Federal Government in that direction. I say that after having agreed to give these people all they ask.

The present market price of all these metals—tungsten, chromium, vanadium, and the like—is very high. The demand for them is very great. That situation itself stimulates production to the very limit. There is comparatively little that the Federal Government can do further to stimulate that production. The high price and the great demand stimulate the production in a marked degree, and we are increasing our production of these metals continuously all the time, and will do so as long as production is stimulated by this great demand and these very high prices. I question whether we can do very much to help, though I am willing to spend $200,000 in trying.

Why, Mr. Chairman, yesterday I was informed, when I asked a neighbor about some very fine berries that he had, that while it was impossible to secure these berries in good condition and at a reasonable price at the Washington market I could get all I wanted for the picking if I would go out on the farms of Maryland or Virginia where they grow. He said the farmers found it impossible to hire help to pick fruits. They have a wonderful crop, in splendid condition, which is spoiling on the trees and bushes. What we need these days is not men going nosing about, inquiring into this thing, that thing, and the other, taking the time of busy folks, of people who are actually doing the work of the country and actually producing things themselves. I confess to but little patience with this harping on the necessity of the Government spending the good money of the people hiring folks to go around and get in the way of busy people who are accomplishing things. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is more than the $100,000 involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I think this committee ought to come to a conclusion as to whether it wants the Bureau of Mines or an Acting Secretary of the Interior to determine the judgment of Congress. We have hearings before the committee for the purpose of affording various departments an opportunity to present their views. It never was expected that, having presented their case, because they did not agree with the judgment of the committee that they should then be permitted to write ex parte letters that are not subject to cross-examination and send copies of them to the various Members of the House with the idea of building a back fire upon the committee and upon Congress. That at one time was the habit of the Geological Survey, and one of the most historic fights that ever took place on this floor took place in order to teach the Geological Survey its proper functions in connection with the Congress of the United States.

I had hoped that lesson was recent enough for the Bureau of Mines and other departments to appreciate it. Here is a letter that has been read from by the gentleman from Missouri, signed by Mr. Vogelsang as Acting Secretary. What happened, I assume—because it happens in all cases that I investigate—was like this: The bureau involved comes to the Acting Secretary complaining that they are not getting what they should have, and the Secretary says, "Suppose you prepare me a memorandum." They write a letter, which goes to the Secretary's desk, and he signs it in routine with a lot of other things. It is brought to the House, and gentlemen get up and talk about the Secretary or the Acting Secretary saying this, that, and other things. The Committee on Appropriations takes with due allowance such letters coming in after the bill is marked. Mr. Manning had his opportunity before the committee, subject to cross-examination. If we are to be controlled by the letters written afterwards we had better dispense with the labor and time consumed in examining these men. If they are to tell us and their judgment is to be final, we are wasting a great deal of time. It is useless.

The testimony under cross-examination does not show any justification for this additional $100,000. They got in March $150,000 as a deficiency, and they testified on the 1st of April, 1918, that they did not know how much of that money could be spent during this fiscal year, because it was a matter of getting their organization under way. Manifestly at that time little or none of it had been spent, and yet they now write a letter and say if they are not given $100,000 more the work will have to stop. If that is true, what they have asked for is nothing like an adequate amount. According to their own statement, even with the additional $100,000 it will make it useless to appropriate it now, and we had better wait for a deficiency.

The Bureau of Mines from its inception has been undertaking to expand at a rate that is equaled by hardly any other bureau of the Government. I am in sympathy with much of its activities, but if we are to be swept off our feet because of the zeal of the director in getting letters written after bills are reported we had better dispense with our hearings. The gentleman from Missouri says that he has found the people there do not spend money unless they think it ought to be spent. I am not denying it, but here is a proposition that he overlooks. Every man is an advocate of the special work that he does. There are men engaged in scientific pursuits here who honestly believe that their work is more important than any work in connection with the winning of the war, although it has no more to do with the winning of the war than the sun spots have, but they are zealous and enthusiastic in regard to the work of their particular bureau. While it is commendable for them to have that viewpoint, it would be absurd for Congress to have that viewpoint. The very function of Congress is to measure the needs of different bureaus, having in mind always that the Government does not get something for nothing; that it does not create money even by printing presses without the people having to pay; and every time you increase an appropriation you are increasing the taxes of the people. I say to gentlemen that the time is coming in America when they who are paying the taxes are going to ask a more accurate accounting from their Representatives in voting moneys on such cases as are made by ex parte letters. I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is not debate exhausted upon this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Tennessee has moved to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GORDON. But that is a dilatory motion. You can continue a debate on an item here all day by moving to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, while it is usual always for those in charge of a bill to close debate, I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] shall talk five minutes if he wants to.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am gratified to know of this new position of our colleague from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. I want to hurry along this war legislation.

Mr. AUSTIN. And I take it we will never hear him in this House take advantage of the opportunity to strike out the last word or two.

I have listened to two members of the Committee on Appropriations, who are opposing this amendment, endeavor to answer the statement submitted to the House by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], and I think that should be all-controlling in this matter and that upon it the decision of the House should be determined. Those charged with the responsibility of this important work, 60 days after the hearing, after the organization and equipment for this work, state in a letter that unless this additional amount is appropriated this work will have to stop, and the public investment that we have already made of $150,000 will be practically wasted—thrown away.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And against that statement, or that alleged statement, is the unquestioned fact that there is $150,000 now available, that $100,000 is carried in this bill, making in all $250,000, and that only $200,000 was originally asked for.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the importance of this work was recognized by this Congress and by the Committee on Appropriations when they made a prior allowance of $150,000. Here is a statement from those charged with the responsibility of the work:

> The work on these war materials has been started under this appropriation and can be continued for some months longer, but unless this additional $100,000 is authorized, this work will come to a standstill without having brought to successful conclusion the work now under way to secure the information necessary to assure this country having an adequate supply of special minerals absolutely essential to the conduct of this war.

I say that statement has not been answered.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I say that the statement has not been backed up by any proof. It is an ex parte statement made after the examination of the man who makes it, and it does not fit in at all with his examination before the committee when he was subject to examination.

Mr. AUSTIN. This House placed its seal of approval upon the efficiency of this bureau by voting $150,000 and by directing that this important work go forward.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. If I can get some more time; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want the gentleman to yield on terms. The gentleman should either yield or not yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think that because we voted one sum that is a guaranty that the House must always vote any additional sums? I take it that it is a reason for placing the burden upon those who wish it to show why we should vote an additional sum.

Mr. AUSTIN. Against the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is not in direct charge of the prosecution of this work, who is not a miner, who is not at the head of the Bureau of Mines, I place the statement of the gentleman who is, and I prefer to take the statement of the chief of that bureau rather than the statement of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, who are not charged with the responsibility of this work, who are not in touch with it, and who can not state to this House to an absolute certainty whether it is necessary or not. As long as these men fill these positions, appointed by the President of the United States, we have a right to presume that they are honest, that they are truthful, and that they would not misrepresent this matter to the American Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. And will the gentleman not also state in connection with that very important statement, which I think he has made, the further fact that the very things that this bureau is now seeking to work out are vitally necessary to the manufacture of arms and ammunition that we must have, if we are to win the war?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the statement made here, and it is not contradicted and can not be successfully contradicted.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is a vital thing.

Mr. MONDELL. Was the gentleman here during the early part of the debate, and did he hear what was said?

Mr. AUSTIN. I can not stay here during all of the speeches that are made. I am frequently called out by constituents or urgent official matters.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not know what has been controverted.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have been discussing this amendment which has been brought forward this morning. There has been discussion of it and the development of these facts. Of course, this Bureau of Mines has expanded. It is a new bureau, established by the Sixty-first Congress. This great, immense Empire with its undeveloped resources stood without this important agency for industrial development for more than 100 years. We have attempted in 10 years to do what ought to have been done by the American Congress years and years ago, and there has not been a useless dollar voted for the Bureau of Mines. The record of its achievements, and the excellent and useful work which it has done and is doing in this country, will compare favorably with the work of any other bureau for the same length of time and the same amount of money expended. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For the employment of personal services and all other expenses in connection with the establishment, maintenance, and operation of mining experiment stations, authorized by the act approved March 3, 1915, $510,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 96, line 8, strike out the sum "$510,000" and insert in lieu thereof the sum "150,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that I desire to say it is simply a typographical error in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute $225,000 for $150,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment by way of a substitute which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Substitute by Mr. FOSTER to the committee amendment. Strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof, "$225,000."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to offer a word of explanation in reference to this amendment. This paragraph refers to the act of March 3, 1915. This was the law which established a certain number of mine safety stations and mining experiment stations, and also provided that not more than three should be established in any one year. Now, this year the committee has appropriated for those already in existence, but have not appropriated for those to be established as was intended by the passage of the law in 1915. This is to restore the $75,000 for the establishment of those mining experiment stations. Those stations are doing good work and they ought to be continued.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. FARR. How many are there?

Mr. FOSTER. Six established.

Mr. FARR. And their locations?

Mr. FOSTER. I think I can tell the gentleman. One at Berkeley, Cal.; one at Tucson, Ariz.; one at Golden, Colo.; one at Bartlesville, Okla., that has to do with oil; one at Pittsburgh; one at Columbus, Ohio, that has to do with clay; one at Urbana, Ill.; one at Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. FARR. Not one in the anthracite coal region?

Mr. FOSTER. There is one at Pittsburgh.

Mr. FARR. That is bituminous?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be one of these in the anthracite region?

Mr. FOSTER. These are mine experiment stations, not safety cars.

Mr. FARR. The gentleman realizes the conditions operating in the mining of anthracite and soft coal are entirely dissimilar?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, this is more particularly for minerals and not coal.

Mr. FARR. At Pittsburgh?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Pittsburgh is the main station where the building is located. Now, these stations, scattered as they are throughout the United States, lack these others which ought to be established in order to complete this work. While the war is on we all want to save expenses for that purpose, yet I feel that this work is so important it ought to go forward and we ought to carry out the law as it passed in 1915 and establish these stations. There are three of them, costing $25,000 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak a word in behalf of this amendment. I have the honor to represent the greatest zinc-mining district in the world, and I believe that this would be a good thing for the zinc-mining industry and a good thing for our country. I have several times presented to the head of the Mining Bureau the need for an experiment station of this kind in Missouri, where, as you know, we have a large production of zinc and lead, and I have been assured at different times by the Mining Bureau that in due course, according to the law as heretofore enacted, that Missouri and the zinc industry will receive its due attention. Like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] I appreciate the feeling that in this time of war every effort for economy should be made, but I do believe that this would be economy. I might mention just one way in which I believe experimental and research work and study could be carried on beneficially to the country, and that is as to the uses that zinc could be put to commercially and in many ways to facilitate this war. The common impression throughout the country is that zinc at this time is an expensive metal. It is true that prior to our entrance into the war zinc was at a very high price, but since our entrance into the war for many reasons which would not be pertinent for me to mention now the price of zinc is very low; and I believe that if we have a station like this doing research work many uses could be found for this metal to take the place of the much more expensive metals, and I hope that this amendment will receive the favorable consideration of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned at this time with relation to any proposed location of the stations which might be created with the money that will be appropriated if this amendment should pass, but I am concerned about the general mineral-development proposition in the United States. It seems to me that if ever there was a time when we ought to take stock of our mineral resources, when we ought to look out for the mining output, this is the time. If there ever was a time in the history of this Nation when this Government ought to take a prospector by the hand and do everything possible to assist him, this is the time.

There are minerals that are vitally needed in this country for which we are almost entirely dependent at this time upon other lands, and it is the fondest hope of mining men that there may be found in this country a sufficient supply of these minerals to take care of our needs. We have made a very commendable progress in the potash proposition. There is now being studied and investigated in the West the tin proposition. Along many other lines these investigations should be followed and the prospector should be helped by having near at hand stations where he can go for advice, where he can have help to solve the problems that confront him. While men from agricultural States might think the problem is general, the problem is specific. Practically each mineral belt of the Nation has its own problems that are peculiar only to that locality. By establishing mineral stations widespread over the country we will secure the greatest possible benefit in the production of the minerals that we need so badly.

Let me cite to you the situation in the Black Hills of South Dakota. The nearest station there at this time is 500 miles away, and it is not a station that is dealing with the class of minerals that we have. The problems of mining in the Black Hills are peculiar only to the Hills, and that condition also exists with relation to other mineral belts.

Four stations have been authorized by law that have not been located. This amendment seeks to provide that three new ones shall be located. And it seems to me, gentlemen of the committee, that this Congress ought to go ahead with this work; that these stations whose location is contemplated should be provided for; that the prospector may have the assistance that he needs; and, in the end, that the Government and the people generally may have the minerals that are needed so badly in these days of war.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, can we not come to some understanding? The committee does not want to confine debate, but there have been three speeches made in favor of this amendment and none against it, and if each Member who speaks wants to get one of these stations in his district it will take an hour or two.

Mr. HAMLIN. To ease the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky, I do not expect to get any station in my district.

Mr. SHERLEY. That makes it even worse. When you take those who do not with those who do it will occupy a great deal of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if any Member desires to close debate on the amendment——

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to close debate. And it seems to me that to give them three to one is a very bad proposition. I ask unanimous consent that the debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes. I want to be honest. I wish to get one of these stations in my district.

Mr. SHERLEY. After we appropriate the money, I do not know anybody who can claim more credit for getting it than the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and amendments thereto shall terminate in 10 minutes, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] shall have 5 and the gentle- from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] 5.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will take only one minute.

Mr. FARR. I want five minutes. I wish the gentleman would amend his request.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will make it 15 minutes, and I ask to have 1 minute of the 15 minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will give you one out of my five.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in 15 minutes, of which he is to have 1 minute, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] to have the other 14. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. May I have about three minutes?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his request and makes it 20 minutes. Does the gentleman desire the same division of time?

Mr. SHERLEY. Five minutes to be divided by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and myself, and these other gentlemen can have the 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Of which time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can divide five minutes between them. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, personally I have no interest on earth in this matter. It does not make any personal difference to me whether this amendment goes into the bill or not. But from the information I have I am convinced it is a mistake to leave out of this bill this appropriation of $75,000 to establish three stations, since they have been heretofore authorized by law. On March 3, 1915, the Congress authorized the establishment of 10 stations, 3 to be established each year. Six of them have been established, and the locations are as mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] a few minutes ago. For some reason, in this bill the $75,000 to establish the three stations that would in the ordinary course be established this year is left out. The purpose of the amendment is to put in the $75,000 and let these other three stations be established in the regular order this year, as this Congress determined they should be heretofore.

The station at Columbus, Ohio, is entirely engaged on work having direct bearing on essential industries, both during and after the war. It is carrying on investigations dealing with graphite crucibles, the use of chrome and magnesite for lining for steel furnaces, and the development of domestic ores and clays to supply the materials required and whose import has been cut off by the war.

The Minneapolis (Minn.) station is engaged entirely on the problem of concentration of domestic manganese ores for the steel industry, ships for whose import from Brazil are no longer available.

The Bartlesville (Okla.) station is an oil station.

The Tucson (Ariz.) station is taking up the problems of copper production and supply and the survey of western manganese deposits.

The Seattle (Wash.) station is carrying on work on the concentration of chrome, manganese, tin, and mercury ores for war purposes, and is investigating the recovery of waste tin, the development of the electrometallurgical industries, and the conditions of the western coal situation.

The Fairbanks (Alaska) station is working on the development of Alaskan resources.

The amendment just offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] provides for the establishment of three new stations this next fiscal year. The first of these stations is to be in the South, which will deal with essential chemical and electrometallurgical industries, and particularly with the manganese, pyrite, and graphite industries, which are just developing to meet war requirements. The second of these stations is to be in the Mississippi Valley and will deal with the lead and zinc problems, which also involves the production of large quantities of sulphuric acid for munitions as a by-product from the zinc smelters.

Now, that does not, as I stated in the beginning, affect me personally one way or another. The only question for us to determine, it seems to me, is, Is the work of these institutions beneficial to the Government and the people generally at this time?

If they ever were necessary, undoubtedly they are now that this war is on, when these materials are needed in the manufacture of war munitions. If I have a correct understanding of the work of these stations, then they are vitally necessary.

Seventy-five thousand dollars provides for the establishment of three stations. The gentleman may get a wrong idea about that. I had a wrong idea about this until I talked with a gentleman representing the Bureau of Mines yesterday. I supposed that some part of this $75,000 was used in the erection of a building, maybe, or some place where they could do this work. That is not correct. Every dollar of the $75,000 is used in the actual work of these stations. Wherever they locate a station the State furnishes the building and a large portion of the equipment. As a matter of fact, they do this work largely in connection with the State universities of the various States.

I concede that there is some talk, although I have no assurance of it, that if this goes into the bill there may be established one of these stations in the State of Missouri. If so it will be established at Rolla, in all probability, in connection with the School of Mines and Metallurgy, a division or portion of our State University. I have said that I have no assurance that it will be established there. Rolla is not in my district. But if it is established in Missouri I was told it would be established in Rolla in connection with the School of Mines and Metallurgy, and that is the way this money is to be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks so as to put in some information that I think would be beneficial.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting certain matter indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. These are the documents I wish to submit:

JUNE 12, 1918.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SHERLEY: Although fully appreciating the necessity at this time for cutting off all requests for the appropriation of funds for any activity which can be dispensed with or which has no direct bearing on war work, I wish to call your attention to two items relating to appropriations for the Bureau of Mines which have been omitted from the sundry civil bill, recently reported to your committee, and which I believe to be important as war measures.

The first item relates to an increased appropriation of $75,000 for the establishment of three new mining experiment stations as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1915. This amount is in addition to the $150,000 for the maintenance of the six stations already established. As 90 per cent of the work of the bureau is now related to the war and is largely being carried out through these various stations which give direct contact with the mining districts of the country, I feel that it would be most unwise not to extend this work and thus to carry out the purpose of the act establishing these stations.

The second item is for $100,000 for mineral mining with reference to special war minerals required in the conduct of the war. In the urgent deficiency bill passed in March of this year, $150,000 was provided for this same purpose. The work on these war minerals has been started under this appropriation and can be continued for some months longer, but unless this additional $100,000 is authorized this work will come to a standstill without having brought to a successful conclusion the work now under way to secure the information necessary to insure this country having an adequate supply of special minerals absolutely essential in the conduct of the war.

As can be readily seen, both of these items have direct bearing on the war situation, and, as has been indicated by the action by Congress in both cases, have been approved as essential and necessary measures. I feel that the importance of this work is so great that this appropriation should not be omitted from the sundry civil bill. I therefore wish to ask that you consider favorably an amendment to the sundry civil bill by which these two items may be restored to the appropriation asked for by the Bureau of Mines. I feel that this matter is of such importance that I am justified in urging your favorable action.

Cordially, yours,

(Signed) ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

JUNE 14, 1918.

Of the 10 stations authorized by the act of March 3, 1915, 6 have already been established.

The Columbus, Ohio, station is entirely engaged on work having direct bearing on essential industries, both during and after the war. It is carrying on investigations dealing with graphite crucibles, the use of chrome and magnesite for lining for steel furnaces, and the development of domestic ores and clays to supply the materials required and whose import has been cut off by the war.

The Minneapolis, Minn., station is engaged entirely on the problem of concentration of domestic manganese ores for the steel industry, ships for whose import from Brazil are no longer available.

The Bartlesville, Okla., station is a petroleum and natural-gas station, dealing with the problems of securing an adequate supply of oils to meet our greatly increased war-time requirements.

The Tucson, Ariz., station is taking up the problem of copper production and supply and of the survey of western manganese deposits.

The Seattle, Wash., station is carrying on work on the concentration of chrome, manganese, tin, and mercury ores for war purposes, and is investigating the recovery of waste tin, the development of the electrometallurgical industries, and the conditions of the western coal situation.

The Fairbanks, Alaska, station is working on the development of Alaskan resources.

Thus all these stations which have thus far been established are almost entirely working on mineral problems relating directly to essential supplies and minerals for war purposes. The work which these stations are doing will have equally important bearing on the permanent development of many of the new industries which have been undertaken since the beginning of the war to meet our requirements, which were formerly met by imports. This means the development of domestic resources to replace the magnesite which formerly came from Austria and the potash which came from Germany, the manganese which requires ships to import from Brazil, the pyrite from Spain, chrome from South Africa and Pacific islands.

The amendment asked under the sundry civil bill provides for the establishment of three new stations. The first of these stations is to be in the South, which will deal with essential chemical and electrometallurgical industries, and particularly with the manganese, pyrite, and graphite industries, which are just developing to meet war requirements. The second of these stations is to be in the Mississippi Valley, and will deal with the lead and zinc problems, which also involves the production of large quantities of sulphuric acid for munitions as a by-product from the zinc smelters. Lead and zinc are most essential war materials, and the industry will need every technical assistance if it is to be permanent and thrive after the war.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment to increase the number of stations, and I want to submit to members of the committee the claims of the anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania, where from eighty to ninety millions of tons of coal are mined each year without a station of this kind.

It is not sufficient that you have one of these stations at Pittsburgh, representing the soft coal region, because that will not enable them to conduct the research work necessary to know all about the anthracite coal workings. I want to inform the members of this committee now that fatalities are increasing very rapidly in the coal-mining industry of this country, and in the anthracite region, with a shortage of nearly 20 per cent of the workers in and around the mines, the fatalities last year and for the five months this year have largely increased.

Pennsylvania mines more coal than all the rest of the mining parts of the country put together. We have not been a burden upon the Nation. We have splendid laws in our State governing coal miners. We need cooperation, however, on the part of the Bureau of Mines. We need the additional knowledge that they are getting through this research work in order to stimulate greater interest in Pennsylvania, with a view to saving lives and lessening accidents.

I think one of these stations should be established in the anthracite coal regions. I am not going to say that it should necessarily be placed in the district I have the honor to represent. I represent only one county of the great anthracite coal counties of Pennsylvania. Forty-three thousand men are employed in and around the anthracite coal mines in my district—one county. But a station of this kind ought to be established somewhere in the anthracite coal regions, and I refer that matter particularly to the chairman of this committee, and through him to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that Congress has already authorized this appropriation.

It did it four years ago, and the Committee on Appropriations, complying, as was customary and usual with the authorization, brought in bills here bearing appropriations which enabled the department to establish 6 of these 10 authorized stations.

Now, of the six authorized, only one is south of the Potomac River, in the State of Oklahoma, dealing entirely, according to the report from the Bureau of Mines, with petroleum. There are more undeveloped mineral resources south of the Ohio River, a greater variety, than in any other section of this country. The district I have the honor to represent is to-day turning out aluminum, pig iron, zinc, barytes, marble, manganese, coal, and oil, and just across the line, in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. MOON] they are mining copper. Those of us in this House representing southern districts ought to see to it that this additional appropriation is voted, and that that section of this great country be recognized in carrying on this important work; and I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], representng a district south of the Ohio River and a State largely engaged in mining operations, not to oppose this proposition, which means so much for the industrial development of the South.

Now, this war has brought to us all a realization of the importance of discovering and developing the mineral resources of America. We have been compelled to no longer look to Germany, Austria, India, and Brazil for minerals absolutely needed in connection with war activities, and if we are to make our country independent at the close of this war, from an industrial standpoint, we owe it to our constituents, we owe it to America, to make it certain now that when this war closes our own mines shall supply all of these necessary minerals which are important in peace times as well as during war times.

Members of Congress must look beyond the present hour, for when the men of our conquering Army and Navy return from Europe and are disbanded they are going to demand of Congress legislation which will furnish them employment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman really think that Congress can furnish employment by legislation; that you can create industry by just passing a law?

Mr. AUSTIN. We can furnish employment to our people by developing the manganese industry, the potash industry, and all of these mineral resources named in this report. We can do it by giving this bureau the amount of money necessary to develop and open these resources to American capital and American activities; and then we can go a step further and pass the economic laws necessary to protect these industries from foreign competition at the close of the war. I am not prepared to join the gentleman from Texas in the opinion that the American Congress is useless or is absolutely unable to render the necessary service in passing legislation which will mean employment and work for the patriotic men composing our Army when it returns from Europe, and the party in this House, or the Members, who can not see it and realize it and help take advantage of it will be held responsible by the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall use but two of the five minutes remaining. The Committee on Appropriations were confronted with a number of proposals for the enlargement of activities and did not feel that this was a good time to be spending money for enlarging activities which in peace time might receive favorable consideration. These stations have nothing to do with the saving of human life. They are simply stations for experiments in connection with mining. Six of these stations have recently been established, and with the shortage of labor in the country, with the need for direct war activities, there did not seem any justification for creating three additional stations. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] makes an appeal to me as a southern man to vote for this amendment. I am glad to say to him that I believe a man has not any right to represent a district in his work as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; and whether this matter would go South or North or East or West makes no difference to the committee in considering the merits of the case. I might acquire merit, as Kim once said, among some people who measure service by appropriations for districts, by standing not only for this but for a great many other things that might go into my State or affect my State; but I believe that the peculiar duty of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is to be an advocate of the Treasury of the United States, and that field is not so fully occupied as to make me fear being crowded.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the gentleman think that one of these stations ought to go south of the Ohio River, when six of them have gone elsewhere in the United States?

Mr. SHERLEY. It might or might not; but I would not care if all four of them were going south of the Ohio River; I would not vote for the proposition just for that reason. I think it is a good time not to be building additional stations. It is a good time to conserve the resources of the country in money and in men.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Committee on Appropriations are laboring under an advantage or a disadvantage, as you may view it, in the consideration of this item, compared with the gentlemen who have discussed it and who are approving the increase. We are viewing the matter from the standpoint of the general public interest, or we are trying to do so, while all the gentlemen who have spoken in support of the amendment have urged its importance, based on a hope, I assume, that one of these stations will be located in their particular vicinity. There are only three of these stations, and I think we have on the floor now six candidates for the location of them. Some of these gentlemen would have to be disappointed in any event.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. I can assure the gentleman that I am not expecting the location of one of these stations in my vicinity.

Mr. MONDELL. I except the gentleman who has just spoken.

Mr. FOSTER. I am doing what I can for the good of the country.

Mr. MONDELL. I except the gentleman from the general category of those who have favored the increase.

Mr. AUSTIN. I plead guilty. I am going after one of these stations. The gentleman has got one in his neighborhood, in Montana, right next to his State, and I want one for Tennessee.

Mr. MONDELL. No; we have not one of this sort of stations in Montana, but we do have a lively hope and expectation that in the region of country in which I live—not necessarily in my immediate vicinity—one of these stations will be located before they are all established. But I have tried to consider this matter as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, not from the standpoint of our hopes and expectations locally, but from the viewpoint of the general good and interest.

Mr. AUSTIN. They have one in Colorado, a State adjoining Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that one of these six stations is in Colorado. There may be one.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is one at Golden, right near the north line of Colorado and near the south line of Wyoming.

Mr. FOSTER. And there is one at Salt Lake City.

Mr. MONDELL. The echo of those stations has scarcely reached us, which may possibly be an argument against the establishment of more stations.

I am in favor of the establishment of these stations as soon as possible, but as a member of the committee, I did not feel we were justified in building them at this time of high cost and short man power. I doubt if they could be of any value as a war aid unless the war lasts longer than we anticipate.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER) there were—ayes 17, noes 31.

Accordingly the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the establishment of the fuel storage and distributing yards herein authorized, including the procurement of the necessary land, wharves, railroad sidings and trestles; storing, handling, and distributing equipment, including motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for inspectors; and all other expenses requisite for and incident thereto, including personal services in the District of Columbia, $482,300, to be available immediately.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this section, providing for a Government fuel yard in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the first paragraph has been read, and it is too late for the gentleman to make a point of order against that. The gentleman can not make a point of order against the establishment. It is already passed.

Mr. SNELL. At what time would it be proper to make the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). Against what provision does the gentleman wish to make the point of order?

Mr. SNELL. I want to make a point of order against the whole proposition for establishing a Federal fuel storage and distributing yard in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late to make a point of order to that paragraph beginning on line 13, page 99, and ending in line 7, page 100. If that is the one to which he wishes to direct his point of order, he is too late.

Mr. SNELL. I want to make the point of order at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. SNELL. I supposed that I could make it at the end of the whole section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if I understand, the gentleman desires to make a point of order to all of the language beginning on page 13 and running to line 3 on page 101, and I would like to submit to the Chair that the point of order to be effective must be made as each paragraph is reached. One paragraph ends on line 7, page 100. That has been read. Now, if the gentleman is in order, if he desires to insist on the point of order on that part of the language which is contained in lines 8 to 15, inclusive, page 100, which is the item carrying the money, I suggest to the gentleman—I do not want to take advantage of him—that he make his point, or reserve it, touching those lines, so that a statement can be made as to the purpose sought to be accomplished.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on the paragraph beginning at line 8 and ending in line 15, page 100.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has indicated to the gentleman that it is too late to make the point of order to the preceding paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this proposal came to the Committee on Appropriations from the Department of the Interior in connection with the hearings on the Bureau of Mines, having in view the doing for all the governmental departments in the city of Washington what is now being done in a small way for the Department of the Interior; that is, the purchase and storage of coal by the Government in the District of Columbia for subsequent sale to the departments. It is not a proposal looking to the purchase of coal for sale to individual residents of the District. In other words, it is not for the establishment of a municipal yard in the sense that citizens will be supplied, nor is it intended in any way to interfere with the supply of such citizens through the ordinary private coal concerns. But it is an effort to establish a central purchasing and distributing agency for coal for the Government and the District of Columbia, with such storage capacity as will absolutely insure the Government against a shortage in the future.

We have been within a few hours, at different times, of a coal shortage for various departments of the Government here in Washington. The figures and facts presented to the committee seemed to warrant, both from the standpoint of economy and from the standpoint of safety against coal famine, that this proposal should be recommended to the Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any coal in the yards in Washington at the present time?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not go into the question of how much coal there may be in storage in private yards, and so I can not answer the question.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that they are all nearly empty at the present time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand there is very little storage facilities now in the way of private yards. Certainly this is true, that whether these yards are empty or full, we had an experience in the immediate past that warrants the fear that if we depend entirely on private concerns the Government may be short.

Mr. SNELL. Has not experience proved that it is a matter of transportation instead of storage?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a matter of both. If you have sufficient transportation at all times, you would not need storage; but storage is necessarily a safeguard against interrupted transportation. I think the overwhelming evidence is that the most serious thing in connection with the prosecution of this war is going to be the inadequacy of transportation facilities in America. To leave the Government institutions to be subjected to the uncertainties of coal supply now is a risk that I think Congress would not be warranted in taking.

Mr. SNELL. How much coal in storage has the Government at the present time? According to the hearings, they have storage capacity at present for at least 105 tons.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Government has only a limited storage capacity.

Mr. SNELL. Is that storage capacity that they have full at the present time?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is that the storage, which seems large in the aggregate, is arrived at by taking the storage that exists in the different plants, and that storage at some periods is entirely full and at other times it is less, just as the storage in a man's house may be entirely full at the first of the winter, but becomes less as the season advances.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any trouble in letting contracts to supply coal to the Government, provided there is a guaranty to deliver it by railroad transportation?

Mr. SHERLEY. If we should guarantee to the mines that they should get the cars and then guarantee transportation of those cars to Washington, you would get the coal here; but if we should guarantee the coal dealers of Washington a priority over the dealers everywhere else in order to guarantee the Government a supply of coal, that would be remedying the situation at a price that would be almost unconscionable to the rest of the country.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman; but you have got to get the coal to Washington before you can store it. I understand it is impossible to get coal from the mines at this time, so that it is a matter of transportation rather than of storage that causes the shortage, and I can not see how increased storage is going to help under the present conditions.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but it is a proposition of the Government primarily over and above simply the desire of the coal dealers themselves.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then I think that it is a justifiable proposition from the standpoint of economy. I see no more reason why the Government should buy sporadically from the various coal dealers except for their benefit than that it should buy other supplies. We have been centralizing the purchase of supplies for purposes of economy for a number of years past. If the gentleman is prepared to challenge successfully the figures that are presented as to the financial side of the question, that would present a reason why this matter should not be agreed to by the House.

Mr. SNELL. I maintain that this is not the proper time to invest $432,000 in coal-handling machinery here in Washington, when it is not an absolute necessity, and considering the large amount of money we must raise to prosecute the war.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think if by that we can absolutely guarantee that the Government at all times in the future will be freed of any risk of shortage that it is money well spent.

Mr. SNELL. But you can not guarantee it by simply building storage facilities. If that ended it, I would agree to it. I still maintain it is primarily a question of getting the coal to Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. No.

Mr. SNELL. And that is the way you propose to guarantee it in this bill—by simply building storage.

Mr. SHERLEY. You can not guarantee it without building storage.

Mr. SNELL. I think the storage we have should be first used before we invest this money.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think all the storage we have in private yards is necessary in order to enable those yards to deal with private customers. This city has gone through a tremendous expansion in population, an expansion altogether beyond the facility of these coal dealers properly to meet the situation, and if the gentleman wants any proof of that he only has to remember what happened last winter.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that.

Mr. SHERLEY. A more incompetent handling of the coal situation I never witnessed in any district in America at any time.

Mr. SNELL. I am not arguing in favor of the present plan. But I base my contention upon the very questions that the gentleman himself asked Mr. Manning. My mind is in the same doubt you were in when you started the examination, and I can not find anywhere that he answered the gentleman's questions in such a manner or gave any information that would change my opinion.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman pays me a compliment, for which I am indebted. I endeavored on behalf of the House, as I always endeavor in cross-examining people who submit estimates, to cross-examine from the standpoint of hostility to the proposition, in order that they may justify in full degree what they are proposing. I think that the chairman of the committee owes it to the House not to lead a witness so as to make a case, but to cross-examine a witness so as to break his case, if he can, and then, if the witness, in spite of the cross-examination, presents what seems to be a reasonable case, the committee presents it to the House for its consideration.

Mr. SNELL. I read that testimony as carefully as I was able to, several times, in fact, and I can not see that he answered the gentleman's questions. It afforded no proof, to my mind, and I feel at this time, with all of the extra expense of the Government, where we get about only 25 cents value in return for every dollar expended, that it is a poor plan to invest $432,000 for a Government coal yard. Furthermore, according to the testimony, it will be necessary to commandeer some of the trestles already used in Washington for the same purpose. It is not proposed to build any new ones, but in that way cripple the companies now using these yards and put them to so much more inconvenience.

Mr. SHERLEY. These are trestles not connected with the storage. As I recall the testimony, they figure a saving of over $150,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. I know Mr. Manning said that, but he also said the figures were made a long time ago, and he also said since he made those estimates labor had gone up in price 100 per cent and material 250 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will look at the hearing, I think he will find that the figures have been verified as of recent date. On page 1098 of the hearings there was a note submitted which undertakes to show the saving.

I will read the statement there made:

> The above estimate of $0.9162 per ton for haulage by the Government is higher than the average cost of Interior Department haulage due to increased cost of labor and material and to cost of placing coal in storage and rehandling same. It is conservatively estimated that a saving of $0.50 per ton can be made on all coal purchased by the Government, which, based on next year's estimated requirements of 315,000 tons, makes a total saving of $157,500 on a total investment cost of $432,300.

That very sentence shows that the figures are predicated upon the increased cost of labor and supplies.

Mr. SNELL. Are they absolutely made on the extra cost, too?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. In the table above, where he says what he is going to do, he figures on getting laborers at $720 a year. I do not believe you can get laborers to work in a coal yard at the present time at $720 a year, nor can you get men to handle a truck drawing coal at $900 a year.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Government is employing several hundred people at those figures now.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; but they are all complaining, and we will have to raise their wages, and besides they are not handling coal, the hardest kind of work, work that always commands the highest wages, because it takes good men to do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are complaining, and they are getting an increase of $120 a year.

Mr. SNELL. That $120 is not put down here, and I think there are many other expenses not included in the list.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not prepared to claim that the total saving that is claimed here will be made, but if you cut it in half——

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he actually believes it will be made?

Mr. SHERLEY. If you cut it in half and reduce it from $157,000 to $75,000, and that amount represented a saving on an investment of less than half a million dollars, as a business man would not the gentleman believe in it?

Mr. SNELL. I would if I were sure that I could do it, but I do not believe you can do it from the testimony given.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am taking their statement and discounting it by 50 per cent.

Mr. SNELL. I think a statement of that kind you ought to be obliged to discount 50 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right. I am doing it for the sake of argument in order to meet the gentleman's position. Assuming that they are wrong, and that only half of what they say will come true, you have still a showing that economically warrants the investment. All I desire to say to the gentleman is this: I have no pride about this matter. There was no dissent in the subcommittee that dealt with the matter.

What I think is the proper thing to do if the gentleman does not agree with this is to let the Committee of the Whole decide it. Of course, if the gentleman wants to make the point of order I am willing to admit the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SNELL. I do not think there is any question about the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I say I admit that. If the gentleman wants to take the responsibility of making a point of order I am not going to quarrel with him, but we present this to the House for such consideration as it wants to give it.

Mr. SNELL. Out of deference to the committee I will reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from New York will not make the point of order. I admit that I approached these hearings relative to the establishment of a Government coal yard with some feeling of doubt, almost hostility. The committee went into the matter very carefully. The printed page does not give all the discussion which was had by any manner of means, although I think it gives the essential facts of the discussion. After listening to the statements and the arguments, with my knowledge of the local situation, I felt this was a wise investment of money at this time. I think this is a fact that applies generally, that we need to encourage coal storage in this country. I have felt very earnestly on that subject for a long time; have discussed it frequently on the floor of the House——

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a second. We live altogether too much from hand to mouth in this matter of coal, to the very great inconvenience and annoyance of people and the very great detriment of the coal-mining industry. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any place in the country that is not in favor of coal storage? The only question is to get the coal to put in the yards that exist at the present time.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has asked if there is any place not in favor of coal storage. I assume the gentleman is not, as he interposed a point of order against an item that proposes large coal storage. The coal industry is one of the very great industries of the Nation which has not been on a very satisfactory basis. The mines are rushed during the winter season and are idle a good part of the time during the summer. Frequently in the midsummer there is a surplus of railway transportation and cars. There has always been a shortage and always will be a shortage of transportation and cars at the peak of demand in midwinter, and that is particularly true in unusually severe winters, and especially so in times of general congestion of transportation, such as those we are now passing through. It is wise to encocourage the storage of coal generally. It is wise to encourage it locally. The Federal Government could well, in my opinion, encourage large storage if there is to be no saving from that storage, but after having listened to this discussion pretty carefully and having given the matter considerable investigation outside the hearings I am of the opinion there will be a larger saving in the running of the years than suggested by the gentlemen who appeared before the committee in their estimate. I think the estimate is low rather than high, conservative rather than optimistic.

When you take into consideration the fact that with a storage yard here we can utilize to a very much greater extent than we do now the coal-carrying capacity of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal; when you take into consideration the fact that we are not far distant from the great sources of coal supply and could secure a considerable amount of that supply during the summer; when you take into consideration the fact that we have many departments and bureaus of the Government which buy independently, each depending upon its little meager storage in or about its plant; and then when in addition to this you take into consideration the unusual congestion that always comes in the winter, and that is bound to come with unusual force the coming winter and every winter while we are in this war, you will realize we are fronting a situation which demands and requires the careful attention and consideration of the Congress.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARR. Would these storage facilities be in readiness for this year's use?

Mr. MONDELL. It is hoped that a very considerable amount of storage facilities could be afforded very quickly. The proposed storage yard is between two railroads already constructed, between two main lines, and it will take but a very short time to put in the necessary sidings to accommodate the cars and afford the necessary storage facilities.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have some doubt about the matter of saving, but entirely aside from that, if this will stimulate the storage of coal I would be very much in favor of the proposition of storing under present circumstances; but did the gentlemen of the committee take any testimony before the committee as to whether the canal boats would be run to full capacity if we had this place for storage?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, no; we did not investigate that matter, but we all of us know that the canal is used for coal transportation, and I presume gentlemen know that the canal has never been used to its full capacity in the past.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that is true.

Mr. MONDELL. At the time when there is the greatest demand for coal the canal is frozen up, and as long as there is no considerable amount of storage here the canal can not be utilized to its full capacity on this class of work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have two minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will not the gentleman ask for three, as I desire to call his attention to a matter?

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In answer to the question of the gentleman from New York, I think it was, who asked in regard to the saving, let me call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of Dr. Manning. He said this——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Page 1078:

> The short experience we have had during the period of six or eight months indicates that we can save, as we have saved, about 67 cents per ton on coal delivered to the Interior Department, charging off all overhead expenses, including depreciation in the value of trucks, etc.

He said there was 67 cents per ton saving at the time of this testimony.

Mr. MONDELL. I am of the opinion that by the establishment of this central storage yard and the four local delivery yards which are proposed, we can get the coal business of the Government down to a sound financial and business basis. A central agency having this particular matter in charge, able to make its contracts long in advance, can see to it that the various bureaus and departments fill up their storage capacity early and at a time when the coal can be sent direct to those storage places.

Mr. FARR. And at the lowest price.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] has just reminded me that these periods when we ought to be storing coal is the time when the coal is the cheapest. We are now frequently buying it on the peak of the market. I believe that this is a sound business proposition, abundantly justified at any time, and especially justified at this particular time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] insist on his point of order?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, while I am against any new Government activities here in Washington, I will not insist on the point of order if the gentleman feels that it ought to be withdrawn. So I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Salt River project, Arizona: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $797,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting a little information from the committee.

I would like to know what the general proposition or conditions are under which the Government takes up one of these reclamation projects.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will recall that in 1902 there was a law passed by Congress which determined the policy of irrigation, and more recently there was an act of Congress which gave extensions of time in the payment of moneys due to the Government by the settlers on these projects. At the time of enacting the latter law the Committee on Appropriations made a fight on the floor, that was successful, to require the submission of these annual estimates. Prior to that all of certain classes of money that were received from the sale of public lands in public-land States went into the reclamation fund, as it does now, but without need of appropriation before expenditure. The Interior Department was authorized to expend such moneys upon reclamation projects. We believed that as a result of that some projects had been undertaken that perhaps were not wise, and that there was a likelihood of the same thing occurring again.

Mr. SNELL. Right there. Who determines or decides upon these projects?

Mr. SHERLEY. Just a moment. So that we required that in the future there should be submitted to Congress estimates of the money that was needed for existing and new projects. Now, in order to establish a new project there has to be action by Congress, and it ought to be by virtue of the action of the Committee on Irrigation that deals with such matters.

Mr. SNELL. Have there been any new projects established lately?

Mr. SHERLEY. No new projects have been started, but one or two State projects have been taken over.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Government advance all the money?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Government advances all of this money, but it is to be returned by payment of the charges for construction, for the use of the water and of power by the settlers. Presumably, if the projects are successful, we will recover all of the money; but we will not recover it all with interest. I was one of the men on the floor of the House who believed that with this extension that was granted to settlers should have gone a requirement for the payment of interest, but Congress did not agree with me.

Mr. SNELL. What is the responsibility or obligation on the people who own land in irrigation districts?

Mr. SHERLEY. It depends on the extent of the project. There is a responsibility for the repayment of the moneys that are put into the project, the construction charges, and then, after the project is completed and taken over by the settlers, they have to assume the cost of maintenance and pay, as water users, for the maintenance.

Mr. SNELL. There have not been many taken over, have there?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Most of them have not been so completed as to be in shape to be entirely taken over, but there are a number of projects in which the payments that are being made are sufficient to make it certain that the Government will recoup itself entirely for the investment, leaving out of it the question of the interest.

Mr. SNELL. What does the expression "lands of public notice" mean? I noticed that in the hearings.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certain public notice is given by which the payment of that which is chargeable against the land has been fixed, and then the owners of the land and users of the water under the Reclamation Service are responsible under that notice for their pro rata share. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can give the gentleman more accurate detailed information than I can. In a general way, I think I am familiar with the situation, but I have not that detailed information touching the reclamation law that is possessed by him and gentlemen who live in the semiarid country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. I notice some of the farmers in the reclamation district take advantage of the water and some do not. What are the conditions? Is there anything that forces a man to take the water in these districts?

Mr. MONDELL. The lands under reclamation projects are held either as homestead lands, taken up subject to the projects, or they are privately owned lands, lands privately owned at the time the project was taken up. In the case of the homestead settler he can not secure a patent to his land, he can not secure his certified water right, until he has paid all of the charges for a water right. Under a recent amendment to the law he may have a limited patent, evidencing the fact of his residence and improvement prior to all the payments, but a full patent is not issued until all payments are made.

As regards the private owner, he purchases a water right at so much per acre, and the water can be turned off at any time in case he declines to make his payments.

Mr. SNELL. I notice there are a good many delinquent payments. What is done in those cases?

Mr. MONDELL. On most of the projects there are but few delinquent payments, except the delinquencies that are inevitable in any large business. At the end of the fiscal year, at the time the report is made, there is frequently some delinquency, sometimes running into a few thousand dollars. For some reason or other a man may not have been able to make his payments at the time when they were due, but those payments then become subject to an interest charge. On most of the projects the payments are being kept up in good shape. There are a few projects that for various reasons are not in a very favorable situation and there is a considerable amount of delinquency on several of them.

Mr. SNELL. Does the Government have a claim on the land?

Mr. MONDELL. The Government has a complete claim on the land if it is homestead land. If it was private land at the time the project was established, it has no claim on the land, but it has complete control of the water, and in an arid region the land is of very little value without water.

Mr. SNELL. I notice that this bill carries something over $8,000,000 for the Reclamation Service this year. Is it not possible that that can be cut down at this time of extreme expense?

Mr. MONDELL. None of that money comes out of the Treasury. It comes out of a fund which can not be used without a change of law for any purpose except this.

Mr. SNELL. None of this comes out of the Treasury?

Mr. MONDELL. It is all obtained from the receipts from the sale of public lands, and therefore if we reduced these items it would not increase the amount of free money in the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for five minutes in my own right, having used most of the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] asks whether any of the projects under the Reclamation Service had been taken over by the settlers. The project upon which his remarks are predicated—the Salt River project—is one of such projects. As a matter of fact, it is not necessary to carry this item for the Salt River project, because the project has been taken over by the settlers, and they are managing it and meeting all payments. But the estimate was made before that arrangement was consummated, and it is a matter of indifference, so far as the fund is concerned, whether we carry the item or not. The item is carried this year as a sort of insurance, so that if for any reason—and nothing of the sort is anticipated—the people should fail in their contract, the Reclamation Service would then be prepared to go on and maintain the work.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman was just stating in his remarks something that I was about to state myself—that the Salt River project was completed. I did not understand why this appropriation was carried here. Does the gentleman know what it is in the way of further construction that they expect to do there?

Mr. MONDELL. There is practically nothing of further construction on the Salt River project except a little minor work necessary for the irrigation of some Indian lands that lie under the project. There may be from time to time some minor extensions on the fringes of the project, as you might say. But in the main the project is complete and in complete operation now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Just a word right there, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is what I understood, that there was practically nothing but some extension of these Indian lands. But here is an enormous sum, comparatively speaking—it would have been thought so before the war—nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, which is to be expended on that project, and I am at a loss to understand why they should need so much money expended there.

Mr. MONDELL. These sums are for maintenance and operation items. This is almost entirely a maintenance item. It is the cost of the maintenance of the work and of the ditches, and if those settlers had not taken over the Salt River project approximately this sum of money would have been spent and a little more paid into the Treasury. Perhaps the gentleman was not present when I said at the beginning of my remarks that this item is carried here merely as an insurance. Not a penny of it will be spent unless the settlers conclude not to carry out their contracts. There is no expectation that they will so determine. But if they do, this money would be expended and a somewhat greater sum would be paid back into the fund, so that it is six of one and half a dozen of the other. If it is expended a greater sum will be paid into the fund, and if it is not expended nothing will be paid into the fund for operation and maintenance. In either event, the annual payment on the construction cost will be forthcoming. This is no drain on the reclamation fund unless it is used, and if it is used the reclamation fund will be reimbursed by a sum slightly in excess of the appropriation for operation and maintenance, so that, as I say, it does not affect the reclamation fund materially one way or the other whether the item is carried and utilized or not.

Some inquiries have been made as to the general condition of the reclamation projects. I am very glad to be able to say that in the main they are in very excellent condition. There are some unfortunate and lamentable exceptions, but they are in the main the smaller projects undertaken in the twilight zone between aridity and humidity.

It is very difficult to educate people in a humid region to the advantages of irrigation. There are some regions of the world, notably northern Italy and parts of Spain, that are humid and where crops can be grown with safety without irrigation, but where, nevertheless, large sums have been spent and very large works have been built for the irrigation of the lands. In those regions people have learned that the irrigation of the lands very largely increases their productive capacity. But Americans have never learned that, and an irrigation project in our country does not seem to be successful except in a region and under conditions where irrigation is an absolute necessity, where little or nothing can be grown without it.

I am glad to be able to say that there is not a project undertaken by the Reclamation Service in a distinctively arid section that is not either progressing well and up to our expectation or getting on to its feet, if I may use that expression, and into a condition of prosperity. In one way that is evidenced by the prompt payment both of the building and maintenance charges.

We confidently hope and expect that as to all projects in distinctively arid sections the Government will be reimbursed for practically or approximately its entire outlay. There will inevitably be some loss on certain projects. We have already written off what we spent on the pumping plant at Garden City, Kans. We have also a pumping project that is somewhat questionable on the Missouri River, but there is some hope still for that project. There is a project on the Lower Yellowstone, in the twilight zone, in Montana, where conditions are not favorable, and where we may meet something of a loss. I hope that project will eventually work out, although the possibility is that the people may not be able to return the entire investment. We have one project, a small one, the Hondo, where the engineers were mistaken as to the holding capacity of the reservoir, where it developed that the reservoir would not hold water and that it could not be so puddled or cemented as to make it hold water, and we shall incur quite a loss there. The works of the Reclamation Service have stood up well. They have served their purposes splendidly, and many of them are very fine monuments to the skill and judgment of the engineers of the Reclamation Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

King Hill project, Idaho: For continuing construction and incidental operations, $423,000: Provided, That said project shall be subject to the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, so far as applicable and consistent with contract heretofore made between the United States and King Hill irrigation district: Provided further, That for the purposes of issuing patent to lands reclaimed, the reclamation effected by the operations of the United States Reclamation Service may be considered by the Secretary of the Interior as equivalent to reclamation effected by the State of Idaho, under the Carey Act of August 18, 1894.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] made inquiry a short time ago as to whether any new reclamation projects had been taken up recently. One such project has been taken up quite recently, the first appropriation being made last year—the King-Hill project in Idaho. This is, however, not a new irrigation project. It was undertaken under the Carey Act and a large amount of money had been spent upon it. The first company failed and lost, I believe, a large part of their entire investment. The settlers took up the project, and cleared of the incubus and burden of some of the first cost of construction the settlers endeavored to carry the project on, but conditions arose under which it was impossible for them to get the necessary funds, whereupon last year the project was taken over by the Reclamation Service. We are now making the second appropriation. This is a complicated project, not one of the easiest projects in the world to work out, but there is every reason to believe that it will work out and that the settlers under the project will develop a very fine section of country, and that they will be able to make their payments as they become due.

It developed in connection with this project that there was some question as to whether or not the Secretary of the Interior could accept the reclamation accomplished through Federal expenditure as the reclamation required on behalf of the State under the Carey Act. Therefore it was deemed wise to put in the second proviso, which has just been read, in order to make it clear that the reclamation thus accomplished should be accepted as though it had been accomplished under the Carey Act. The first proviso is necessary only for the purpose of making it more clear and definite, although it is probably sufficiently so, that this project is undertaken under the reclamation law and its amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Okanogan project, Washington: For maintenance, operation, and incidental operations, $29,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The appropriation for the Rio Grande project, $1,296,000, is $175,000 above the estimate. That came about in this way: After the estimates were submitted the reclamation officials were of the opinion that the storage which had been contemplated in connection with the Truckee-Carson project could not be wisely undertaken at this time. They therefore withdrew $175,000 of their estimate for the Truckee-Carson project and suggested that the same amount be added to the estimate for the Rio Grande. The major portion of this very large sum appropriated or proposed to be appropriated for the Rio Grande project is for the purpose of drainage. It will be recalled that the Rio Grande project covers territory some of which has been under irrigation at least 350 years, and probably many hundreds of years before the white men first saw the country. It is one of the old Indian irrigation districts of the United States, and irrigation was carried on there extensively by the Indians, the Spaniards, and Mexicans for many years before the United States acquired the territory. Early in the history of irrigation in this country our people began the development of the Rincon and Mesilla and other valleys in New Mexico, north of the El Paso Valley, where irrigation was so early practiced. These regions are all low lying. Some of them have long been troubled with an excess of water as well as at times a shortage. The first great need there was a steady supply. That has been furnished by the building of the Elephant Butte Dam. The second great need was a very extensive system of drainage. It has taken some time to bring the people to a realizing sense of the necessity of the very large investment and expenditure essential to that drainage. In order to make it certain that the sums expended for these purposes shall be returned the proviso which has just been read was carried in this item last year. Of all the items for reclamation projects this is the only one that, in my opinion, can be considered liberal. The others have been cut down to what were considered the necessary, essential amounts under present conditions. If we had not had the extra $175,000 available from the Truckee-Carson project, the probability is that this item would not have been increased that amount; but we believe the money can be spent economically and advantageously. The moment these lands are drained they become immediately productive, because they are largely already under ditch. Much of the land requiring drainage has already been cultivated at one time or another. Therefore every dollar spent for drainage on that project should mean the immediate growing of needed agricultural products. Therefore, inasmuch as the other projects had been reasonably cared for and the money was available in the fund, we felt that we were justified in adding this sum to the appropriation for the Rio Grande.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $1,296,000, together with the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for this project for the fiscal year 1918: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in irrigation districts formed under State laws and upon the execution of agreements for the repayment to the United States of all project investments.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 106, line 3, after the word "for," insert the word "construction," and in line 4, strike out the sum "$29,000" and insert the sum "$154,000."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in justification of the amendment which has just been offered I send to the desk a letter from the head of the Reclamation Service to the Secretary of the Interior, which I wish to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
June 8, 1918.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Okanogan project of the Reclamation Service in northern Washington is threatened with an unprecedented water shortage. In no time in the record of over 15 years has the water supply been as low as this season. The reservoir contains water enough for only about one irrigation, and there is very little snow in the mountains, so that no repletion of the reservoir can be expected.

Unless rains entirely unexpected and unprecedented should occur the project is threatened by an acute water shortage that will certainly destroy all crops this year and probably kill all, or nearly all, the orchards, which are the result of 10 years' struggle and sacrifice on the part of the settlers, the apple crop being the principal dependence of this project.

There are several ways of increasing the water supply: One is by pumping from the Okanogan River, one is by pumping from Salmon Lake, and another by pumping from Green Lake. Still another means is by means of a ditch leading a small amount of water from the neighboring drainage area. These matters are now under investigation by a board of engineers, who telegraph a strong recommendation for an increase of $125,000 in the appropriation for the Okanogan project now pending in Congress. The Water Users' Association has indicated its willingness to enter into the proper contracts for the repayment of this sum, which will, of course, be required before its expenditure.

It is recommended that the said increase be urged upon Congress in order to save large values now threatened with destruction.

Respectfully submitted.

A. P. DAVIS,
Director and Chief Engineer.

June 8, 1918: Recommendation approved.

(Signed) ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in support of the statement of the Director of the Reclamation Service. This project has orchards on it which are 9 or 10 years old. They are now in bearing. Unless something of this kind is done, they will be ruined by the drought and lack of water described by the letter from the Director of the Reclamation Service. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shoshone project, Wyoming: For maintenance, operation, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $400,000, together with the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for this project for the fiscal year 1918.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of saying a word about the Shoshone project. This is the only one of the very large reclamation projects undertaken by the Government that in every way exemplifies what we had in mind in passing the reclamation law. It is a very large project, and practically every acre of the project was raw land when the project was initiated, and all belonged to the Government. Not an acre of it was in private ownership. No considerable work had been undertaken for the irrigation of this area when the Government took hold.

The Shoshone project is a splendid illustration of what can be done by the judicious expenditure of public money in making new homes in new territory. It has had its difficulties. At first the Reclamation Service was not as favorably disposed to this project as to some others, from the fact that it is not in a fruit-growing section. It is in a northern latitude and a high altitude. The soil is not as deep or naturally as rich as it is on some of the other projects. And yet it has been singularly successful in spite of the fact that it developed seepage, entirely unanticipated at the time the project was undertaken. The best engineers who examined the section were of the opinion that underground drainage was perfect and no artificial drainage would be required. And yet it has required rather more drainage than other large projects. That drainage is now well under way. The people have had a hard and trying time there. They have had to practice severe and trying economies, but they are coming out in good shape.

If this project were not in my State and I was not a member of the subcommittee that drafted the bill I should have been justified in saying that I think the estimate for this project is too small. I have not felt justified in making such a suggestion either in the subcommittee or in the committee, and I only make it now to emphasize the fact that this is a splendid growing project, with every prospect of rapid settlement of the land and tilling of the soil as the water is supplied. It is a project whose people have been singularly faithful in meeting their obligations to the Government and it is a project that is entitled to rapid development, more rapid than can be secured by this sum. But we are in war and distressing times and we want to carry all the projects on in a reasonable way, and therefore I am making no complaint.

When fully developed, as I have no doubt it will be, this will be the largest irrigated area in America receiving water from a single source and united in one general system.

Up to this time it has not been so extended, but it is a large project, a thing of beauty and a joy forever, as you view the growing towns and the splendid farms with their magnificent crops, their wonderful fields of alfalfa and grain extending miles up and down the valley, which when I first saw and traversed it had little more vegetation than grows on this floor, valueless except as it afforded a very sparse growth of salt sage, utilized to a very limited degree in winter for the feeding of sheep.

On this formerly desolate stretch of valley have now been established successful American communities, with their splendid farms, growing towns, and fine community institutions. Their prosperity is all based on the beautiful body of water impounded by the great wall of concrete that spans the mountain gorge and the magnificently constructed series of canals that carry the fructifying waters to the foothills and out over the lands. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secondary projects: For cooperative and other miscellaneous investigations, $100,000.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, this item of $100,000 and the item of $100,000 on the following page are designed in part to comply with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, that investigation should be made so that lands may be ready for homes and farms for our returning soldiers after the war.

No one knows how long this war may be prolonged and no one knows how soon it may be concluded. The matter of getting ready these homes and farms for the returning soldiers should not be delayed to wait for extended investigations.

I believe that the entire Nation will unanimously indorse any well-considered movement or legislation designed to reward our returning soldiers by furnishing them with homes or the opportunity to earn them, by giving them, or their families, a tract of the very land they are to-day so bravely hazarding and sacrificing their very lives to defend.

Any tax necessary for that purpose, Mr. Chairman, will be willingly and ungrudgingly paid by a grateful Nation. It will be the most popular tax ever levied. It will be willingly and unselfishly paid by the people, realizing that they owe the very integrity of their fortunes, the security of their lives and persons, and their very honor to the boys who are daily leaving our shores and who are now battling across the water.

I say no one knows how soon this war may be concluded, and therefore our patriotic purpose should not be delayed. It should not wait for extensive protracted investigations. This is not the time for "watchful waiting." We should commence now.

While I approve this item, yet I hope that this administration and the Congress will not consider it necessary to defer action until these additional investigations may be had. The Reclamation Service at the present time has extensive reports, has had data for the past three or four years, now ample and available, justifying the immediate inauguration of this work. I have in my hand five printed reports prepared by the Reclamation Service in conjunction with the State of Oregon.

The State of Oregon appropriated $50,000 for this purpose and the Government appropriated $50,000 for the purpose. Here is a detailed printed report showing the topography, showing the available water, showing the engineering features and the land that may be irrigated. It is a report of 201 pages, referring to the Malheur and Owyhee projects, in the State of Oregon. This report shows 50,000 acres of land that may be irrigated, with water available.

Mr. LONDON. Of what date is that report?

Mr. SINNOTT. February, 1916. Here is another report, of the Ochoco project and Crooked River investigations, covering 98 pages and 55,000 acres of land. Here is another report, prepared by the Government and the State of Oregon, of 179 pages, with maps and all data, of the Silver Lake project, covering 77,000 acres. Here is another report, of 147 pages, the Deschutes project, in Oregon, showing elaborate details and surveys covering 200,000 acres that may be irrigated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have we come to a point yet where anything has been suggested of a practical nature showing how these lands might be distributed to our returned soldiers?

Mr. SINNOTT. That may be very easily done. You can adopt the provisions of the reclamation law, and with just a slight change to give preference rights that law can be made the instrument of turning a part of these lands over to our returned soldiers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will any new legislation be necessary?

Mr. SINNOTT. Very little new legislation. It can be drawn and comprehended in 20 lines. I hold in my hand another report, of 185 pages, covering the John Day project, in Oregon, showing 225,000 acres of land that may be irrigated.

These reports show between 500,000 and 600,000 acres of land that may be irrigated. These reports have been carefully made, at great expense, showing maps, plans, and necessary data for immediate work. All of this land can be made to grow from 30 to 50 bushels of wheat per acre.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. What is the cost of these projects to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. SINNOTT. They vary from $25 an acre to something like $100 an acre. The general average would be about $50 per acre. As I said, these lands will produce from 30 to 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, if we estimate the yield in wheat, and I think it is generally more intelligible to the Members of the House to do that. Of course, they would raise probably other crops also, such as clover, hay, and alfalfa, and they would also raise hogs, sheep, and cattle on these lands.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The question of legislation has been raised. So far as these reclamation projects to which the gentleman has referred are concerned, no new legislation beyond the legislation of the reclamation law is necessary. All that is needed is more money. Is not that true?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think, generally speaking, that is true. Very little additional legislation will be needed other than the granting of preference rights to the soldiers. What is needed at once is to increase the reclamation fund.

Mr. LONDON. Can we not find a precedent for some other legislation in previous wars? I understand that after the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812 something similar was done.

Mr. SINNOTT. After the Revolutionary War they gave the soldiers land through land warrants, and also after the War of 1812 and the Mexican War, and after the Civil War they passed the homestead law and granted special privileges to soldiers.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that we ought to commence at once on this work and not wait for these contemplated investigations in order to prepare the lands for the returning soldiers. If we had the money, we could begin at once on the projects in the reports I have exhibited.

We have appropriated $500,000,000 to finance and rehabilitate the railroads. We have appropriated $500,000,000 for the War Finance Corporation to protect the business of the country. Why not commence at once to care for and rehabilitate our returning soldiers?

We have appropriated, it seems to me, almost every sum that any whim or fancy or the ingenuity of the Food Administration or the Fuel Administration could suggest for the welfare and comfort of those of us who are safe at home, and we ought to do at least as much for the future comfort and welfare of the boys who are now fighting to uphold the flag and fighting for our security. Increase the reclamation fund so that we may take this up at once.

Let us enter upon this work in order to enthuse and inspire those boys "over there." Let us inspire them with the word that a grateful Nation, a grateful people, proposes at this time to dedicate a portion at least of the very home land they are so valiantly defending, as homes and farms for these boys and their wives and children, and when we do this we shall do little enough. At best it will be a scant, a meager, recognition indeed of the great debt that we shall owe to these heroes when this war is over.

The Clerk read as follows:

For an investigation to be made by the Reclamation Service of the reclamation by drainage of lands situated in States other than those enumerated in the "reclamation law," including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase, maintenance, repair, hire, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and for all other expenses, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $100,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the paragraph that has just been read and the purpose of it. It marks a departure, and therefore I think the House is entitled to understand what is being proposed in connection with it. It carries $100,000 for investigation by the Reclamation Service of the reclamation by drainage of lands situated in States other than those enumerated in the reclamation law. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] a few moments ago called attention to the provision of $100,000 in connection with secondary projects under the reclamation law. That money is to be used for investigation of projects as heretofore in connection with public-land States.

This proposal is to go outside of the public-land States, and is put in by the committee with this purpose in mind. There is considerable proper agitation for the development and reclamation of land for the use of the soldiers who return from the war. I have sympathy with that proposal, but unlike the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] I am not willing and ready to go into it without investigation and without knowledge. Neither do I think it is altogether desirable that all soldiers should be sent to Oregon to live, delightful as that State is and anxious as its Representative is to have reclamation work extended and expedited so that all of this land in Oregon that has been made the subject of study and of personal thought shall be developed. In nearly every State in this Union there are thousands of acres that are capable of reclamation, some of them capable of reclamation by putting water on them and others by taking water off of them; some of them in a climate very much more favorable than others, and yet under the restrictions of existing law only land within the public-land States would be considered. I believe that the very essence of statesmanship consists not so much in undertaking to prevent movements as in directing and controlling them. If this agitation for reclamation is left to run riot, as so many advocates would have it, we will have a repetition of the mistakes and sad experiences we had in connection with the reclamation of some of the arid lands, when we had projects undertaken that had no excuse for them except the control of their advocates, projects undertaken where reservoirs were made that could not hold the water that they were supposed to impound, and if the thing is to be done intelligently it must be done as a result of a survey.

We have built up a splendid service in the Reclamation Service, and the head of that service is a man of very level-headed judgment. The Committee on Appropriations felt that it would be performing a distinct service, and a needed and real service, if it gave to that bureau the money necessary to make a preliminary survey of the United States and to get from it information that will enable Congress intelligently to spend money in reclaiming the land rather than to be dependent upon the enthusiasm of advocates of particular projects in particular localities. The matter is of great importance. There have been many bills heretofore introduced in Congress for the drainage of swamp lands, bills for the further reclamation of arid lands, bills for the reclamation of cut-over and burnt-over land. We ought to have a real policy before we start into the expenditure of the millions that will flow from the adoption of any of these schemes under the various authorizations of the different bills which I have enumerated. That is the justification of the item that is carried in this bill, and I felt it was due to the House that it should know just what was being proposed and that it might not be adopted without explanation.

Mr. GANDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. GANDY. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but before asking him the question let me say that the Secretary of the Interior in his letter on the subject recommended three lines of investigation. One of reclamation by irrigation, the other reclamation by drainage, and the third investigation of cut-over and burnt-over land. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if it is his idea that the provision for surveys of secondary projects, line 15, page 106, for cooperative and other miscellaneous investigation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GANDY (continuing). Would cover the investigation of cut-over and burnt-over land?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I desire first to say this: This proposal is not the result of the letter which the Secretary of the Interior sent to a great many Members. When I received that letter I wrote him and said that prior to its receipt and without knowledge of it the Committee on Appropriations had taken this action, and I say that because that was the view of the committee and was not the result of the views expressed, admirable though they may be, by the Secretary of the Interior. Now, answering the direct inquiry of the gentleman, my own judgment is that the language contained on page 106, lines 15 and 16, is sufficiently broad to include surveys in connection with cut-over land.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LONDON. Would the gentleman favor an investigation of the entire subject of restoring the returned soldiers to civil employment? I intend to offer an amendment when we come to the labor department, and since the gentleman has shown the true quality of a statesman by indicating that it is a function of a statesman to direct himself——

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope the gentleman has enough of the quality of statesmanship not to let a very flattering compliment lead him into dangerous paths. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. I have not received a compliment, and it can not lead me astray. Is the gentleman ready to take up that side of the question?

Mr. SHERLEY. A bill passed by the House just recently, which has for its purpose the rehabilitation of wounded——

Mr. LONDON. But that bill deals only with wounded, crippled, and the mutilated. I am speaking of men who will be returned——

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman in this way: In my judgment the soldier who comes home unwounded and uninjured by virtue of his service will not need the directing hand of the Government to enable him to make a useful citizen. He is going to be a very useful citizen in the first instance, and he is quite apt to have intelligence enough to tell us what to do than we tell him what to do. And if we simply give him the opportunity for additional land, we well can trust to his judgment to make the use of it that will redound to the glory of the Nation. I am not afraid of the ability of the American soldier to take care of himself either in war or in peace.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman does not favor an investigation of the entire subject?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not favor any leading strings for him. I think he is amply able to take care of himself. But I do favor making land available for his use when he comes back.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at the close of this war it is probable that we will have under arms more than 3,000,000 men and that an equal number will be engaged in the munitions plants and other war industries. With the cessation of hostilities we will be confronted with the problem of absorbing into our industrial life these 6,000,000 able-bodied men. The places they vacated in order to enter war work have been filled by machinery, by women, and by boys and girls who have entered into gainful occupations earlier than usual in order to meet the extraordinary demands for labor. It is certain that these people will not vacate their employment in order to make room for the returning soldiers and war workers. It therefore requires but little thought for us to realize the serious problem with which we will be confronted, and it behooves us to plan in time of war for the solution of a problem we are certain to face in time of peace.

The other nations engaged in this world-wide conflict will, of course, be confronted with the same problem, and most of them are now planning to meet it. Australia has already appropriated over $100,000,000 for the purchase and improvement of lands for its returning soldiers. Other countries are planning similar measures.

The Department of the Interior, through the Director of the Reclamation Service, presented to our committee a request for an appropriation of $200,000 to enable them to make a survey of the public lands in order to determine upon a plan whereby the returning soldiers might be engaged in the work of reclaiming lands in those States either by irrigation or by drainage.

It was my opinion that it would be unfair to ask of the returning soldiers that in order to secure employment they should leave their homes and concentrate in public-land States. I therefore suggested, and the committee determined to recommend, the appropriation of $100,000 for a survey in the public-land States and $100,000 for a similar survey of swamp lands outside of the public-land States. In the latter States there are approximately 75,000,000 acres of swamp and overflow lands, and the greater part of these waste lands can be drained at less expense than we now incur in the irrigation of the arid lands in the public-land States. In addition, these swamp lands, when drained, will be the most productive lands in the country. Being, as a rule, near the center of population, they will be in greater demand and will consequently be of greater value.

I am satisfied I need not elaborate upon the benefits certain to result from our undertaking this great work. By furnishing employment to returning soldiers it will solve for us the serious problem of having in our midst immediately after the war several million men without employment. Just as Australia has devised a plan for the purchase and improvement of lands for the men who are to-day fighting for democracy, so can we devise a plan either by the purchase of some of this waste land or by an arrangement whereby in return for the investment of the capital necessary to drain a district a given proportion of the land drained in each district be deeded to the Government. If such an arrangement is made, then the soldiers can be given an opportunity to purchase the very land reclaimed by them and be allowed 20 years within which to pay for it, as are the settlers upon the irrigated lands owned by the Government in the West. This will result in making the returning soldiers producers and these waste lands productive farms.

In addition to the economic benefits, this work will result in saving the lives of human beings. To-day these swamp lands produce nothing but mosquitoes and malaria. The construction of an effective drainage system will remove these hotbeds of disease and will increase the efficiency of those who live in the surrounding country. In my Congressional district there are thousands of acres of swamp lands which by drainage can be made most productive. In the entire country there are about 52,000,000 acres of swamp lands unfit for cultivation or grazing. It is, of course, not to be expected that we could undertake immediately the reclamation of all of these lands. The very purpose of this survey is to have the Reclamation Service investigate the swamp and cut-over lands of the country and ascertain those areas which can be most easily drained and which when drained will be most productive and most attractive to settlers. A plan as comprehensive as this must be, in order to accomplish the desired end, can not be framed in an hour or a day. It will require the best thought of the men who have given up their lives to the study of reclamation problems. It was for this reason that we placed the work in the hands of the Reclamation Service. Upon the Government-owned lands of the West the experts of that department have been engaged in drainage work in connection with the irrigation projects. Their experience in the public-land States will enable them to intelligently approach the great task involved, and I am satisfied that if this appropriation is made it will result in the final adoption of a plan whereby our returning soldiers will be furnished employment, our waste lands made productive, our national wealth increased, and our health conditions improved.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH offers the following amendment: Page 107, line 25, after the word "reclamation," strike out the balance of line 25, all of line 26, and the word "law" on page 108, line 1, and insert: "of lands by drainage or other methods," so that as amended the paragraph will read:

"For an investigation to be made by the Reclamation Service of the reclamation of lands by drainage or other methods, including personal services in the District of Columbia," etc.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the place where the amendment should be is in line 25, following the word "reclamation." I will say to the committee that what this amendment proposes to do is to provide that the examination or investigation may be made in all States, regardless of whether they are included in the States enumerated in the reclamation act or not. The purpose, as I understand it, is to inquire into the regions where there is a possibility of reclamation by drainage.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman know that such was the purpose of the item on the preceding page of $100,000?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think that is for drainage except drainage in connection with an irrigation project.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The object the gentleman wishes to accomplish is accomplished by that appropriation.

Mr. FRENCH. I am satisfied the gentleman is in error, and that the only drainage that could be accomplished under that item on page 106 is in connection with an irrigation system. In the hearings before the committee Mr. Davis, the Director of Reclamation, said that it would not be possible to use the reclamation funds for drainage, as I understand it, in substance, except in connection with the reclamation project. Now, what I have in mind is this, namely, broadening the language of the paragraph at the bottom of page 107 so that if a drainage project shall be found to exist in a State to which the reclamation act applies an investigation may be made. For instance, in the northern part of my State we have several rivers that overflow. There are lands along them that should be drained, and the same is true in the State of California, and the same is true in the State of Oregon. And it would seem that while the Government is making this investigation it ought to extend the scope of its work so as to include areas that exist in States whether they are in reclamation regions or not. Now, that should be the purpose of the inquiry.

Then, I have used the words "or other methods" so that if advisable the department might inquire into the reclamation of lands that have been covered with timbers and from which the timbers have been removed—cut-over land. I am in perfect sympathy with the paragraph and believe it ought to go into the bill.

At the close of the late Civil War the West was largely unsettled. It was a vast empire inviting settlement, and we were able to take care of all the people who were returning from the war at that time and who had rather gotten out of touch with their previous occupation, and we enabled them to lay the foundations for splendid homes through the homestead law. Now, we have got to do a little more than was done at that time. As a Government we have got to take the initiative of providing opportunity for these men who will return from the war and who will find conditions so changed, some of them at least, that they will want to engage in other lines of work. This is merely one of the ways of providing opportunity. I approve generally of the proposition whether my amendment shall prevail or not, but I think the amendment I propose should prevail, in order that the examination may be made in all the States and not in just some of them.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman has in mind no drainage proposition there except in connection with an irrigation proposition?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. There are drainage propositions in my State far removed from irrigation. For instance, the northern part of my State is 500 miles from the southern part. One hundred miles north of me will be found several rivers whose valleys ought to be reclaimed by drainage and not by irrigation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Which would really be a flood-control proposition.

Mr. FRENCH. Well, it would be that in part; yes. And I think the examination ought to be big enough to include all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not willing to have that amendment accepted. The result of it would be to destroy the very purpose of the provision that has been put in here. The only way to make an investigation by the Reclamation Service of lands outside of the public-land States is to provide that they shall be made in States other than the public-land States, because under the existing law that service is restricted now to the public-land States.

There is a provision carried in this bill for $100,000 for cooperative and other miscellaneous investigations in connection with public-land States. If the gentleman wanted to enlarge the scope of such investigations, that was the place to do it. The effect of the gentleman's amendment now would be to confine this $100,000 to public-land States, and the very purpose of putting in the language we did was to take it away from the public-land States.

Mr. FRENCH. If there is any question about it——

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. FRENCH. If there is any question as to the meaning of my amendment, I certainly would be glad to have it worded so that it would be broad enough to comprehend all the States. I thought by omitting the words I have omitted it would be broad enough to reach all the States.

Mr. SHERLEY. It would be, except under the existing law the Reclamation Service is confined to public-land States. Now, if you eliminate the words that we have put in there, words that extend their activities, then they come right back to their present status, which limits them to the public-land States.

Mr. FRENCH. Would the amendment in these words, "in those States," following the words "public lands," cure the amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it would be possible to change the language, perhaps, by making it read, "for an investigation to be made by the Reclamation Service of the reclamation by drainage of lands situated in any of the States of the United States" or "by drainage of land situated anywhere in the United States"; but it would have to be language clearly indicating that you are broadening their present power.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to amend the amendment that I have offered by inserting after the word "lands"——

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman what reason there is for the amendment at all? I do not understand that the public-land States are having any difficulty as to investigations of any projects. What the gentlemen from the public-land States usually are complaining about is that they do not get money enough. They get more than anybody else, but they do not get enough for them.

Mr. FRENCH. There is no question but that under the reclamation law incidental investigations may be made looking to the drainage of lands incident to reclamation projects as a part of the projects.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and I am not certain whether investigations may be made looking to the reclamation of lands that are not within existing reclamation projects.

Mr. FRENCH. Not by drainage.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the situation: Under the item of $100,000 within reclamation States no investigation could be made looking to reclamation distinctly by drainage as separated from reclamation by irrigation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Idaho that if he desires he could ask unanimous consent to return to page 106, lines 15 and 16, to amend that paragraph by adding, "including drainage apart from irrigation." I shall not personally object. That will enable him, out of funds from public lands, to enlarge it for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Should not the language in line 25 be modified so that "cut-over" lands will be embraced in the provisions of this section? There is a great deal of cut-over land, not only in the Northwestern but in the Southern States, that ought to be examined in connection with the plan to reclaim unoccupied swamp lands. The words "by other methods" should be inserted after the word "drainage."

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no objection to the words being added here in regard to drainage, although I am perfectly frank to say that gentlemen in their eagerness to embrace all creation may destroy the whole purpose of these appropriations. They are not big enough to undertake to examine into detailed projects, and they do not undertake it. I am not standing here to advocate the execution of any particular project anywhere, but I want a broad survey made of this country in a manner so that when we do come to undertake it we can go into it intelligently with the purpose of really serving the returning soldiers and not merely to serve localities and to carry out pet propositions.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I suggest, particularly to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], that we are just beginning this work. Why not begin it along the lines that the committee has outlined? I agree with the gentleman that ultimately the investigations, with a view to drainage, should be in the irrigation States as well as elsewhere, but for the time being I am rather inclined to the opinion that it would be just as well to leave the provisions just as they now stand in the bill. When we undertake reclamation by drainage it will undoubtedly be undertaken in all parts of the country. California needs drainage. California is one of the irrigation States. Idaho needs drainage. Idaho is one of the irrigation States. But I think we might confuse the matter now, and at least at the beginning of these investigations why not leave them for the present as they are?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment; Page 108, line 6, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Page 108, line 6, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$1,000,000."

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, 16 years ago Congress passed, and the President approved, a law for the reclamation of arid lands and authorized the appropriation of receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands, in certain States and Territories, in the administration of the law. The matter had been under consideration for many years, engaging the attention of publicists and economists, as well as the Senators and Representatives in Congress, especially from the Western States. Preliminary investigations had been made by the Director of the Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and he was able to submit, the day after the bill was approved by the President, a comprehensive plan for beginning work under the new law. The plan was approved by the Secretary of the Interior on July 8, 1902, and steps were immediately taken to commence operations in the construction of six projects in as many different States.

It is rather interesting to review the accomplishments of the Reclamation Service during the intervening years, and the wonderful progress which has been made toward transforming the desert into a garden.

Thirty distinct projects are under way or completed in 15 States, embracing over 3,000,000 acres of land, or 60,000 farms. Nearly 2,000,000 acres of land are now under water furnished by the Reclamation Service, and over 1,000,000 additional acres will be reclaimed as soon as the necessary works now under construction can be completed. There has been expended on these projects nearly $120,000,000, about $8,000,000 of which has been paid by the settlers under their contract for water, and all of which must be repaid within 20 years.

The value of the 1917 crop on lands within Government reclamation projects amounted to over $50,000,000, nearly five times the value of farm products for one year in the State of Maine, and greater by $7,000,000 than the combined annual crops of New Hampshire and Vermont, and nearly as much as the total value of crops for one year in Massachusetts and Connecticut. On some projects the value of the crops harvested last year equaled the entire cost of the project.

The demand for irrigated land is in excess of the supply, and as soon as it is open to entry settlers flock upon it. The rapidly increasing values of farm land and the high price that is being received for farm products are attracting thousands of people to agricultural pursuits, and there is no question but what the land will continue to be entered as rapidly as water can be made available for irrigation purposes.

The work of constructing the various projects proceeds comparatively slowly on account of the inadequacy of the reclamation fund. In view of the scarcity and high price of food products and the desire of the people to enter upon the land, as well as the importance of making some provision for the employment and homes for the returning soldiers and sailors, it would appear that it is incumbent upon the Government to make some provision toward more rapidly reclaiming the arid lands of the West. The same argument will apply to the reclamation of the swamp lands, which can be made available for agriculture at a comparatively small price per acre. The Reclamation Service, through its splendid organization of engineers and with its experience covering a period of nearly two decades, would be able to extend its activities so as to reclaim millions of acres of land each year, if funds were available.

The Secretary of the Interior, in a recent communication to the President and Members of Congress, urged the importance of reclaiming the arid and swamp lands with the least possible delay, from which I quote:

> This is an immediate duty. It will be too late to plan for these things when the war is over. Our thought now should be given to the problem. And I therefore desire to bring to your mind the wisdom of immediately supplying the Interior Department with a sufficient fund with which to make the necessary surveys and studies. We should know by the time the war ends not merely how much arid land can be irrigated, nor how much swamp land reclaimed, nor where the grazing land is and how many cattle it will support, nor how much cut-over land can be cleared, but we should know with definiteness where it is practicable to begin new irrigation projects, what the character of the land is, what the nature of the improvements needed will be, and what the cost will be. We should know also, not in a general way but with particularity, what definite areas of swamp land may be reclaimed, how they can be drained, what the cost of drainage will be, and what crops they will raise. We should have in mind specific areas of grazing lands, with a knowledge of the cattle which are best adapted to them, and the practicability of supporting a family upon them. So, too, with our cut-over lands. We should know what it would cost to pull or "blow out" stumps and to put the land into condition for a farm home.
> And all this should be done upon a definite planning basis. We should think as carefully of each one of these projects as George Washington thought of the planning of the city of Washington. We should know what it will cost to buy these lands if they are in private hands. In short, at the conclusion of the war the United States should be able to say to its returned soldiers: "If you wish to go upon a farm, here are a variety of farms of which you may take your pick, which the Government has prepared against the time of your returning."

Secretary Lane estimates that more than 3,000,000 acres of arid land could be reclaimed by the completion of the upper and lower Colorado Basin projects, and that there are 15,000,000 acres of irrigable land now remaining in the public domain for which water would be available for irrigation by the construction of dams and reservoirs. Also that there are 60,000,000 acres of swamp land in the Southern States, in the Mississippi Delta, and in Missouri, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and California which by drainage could be made available for cultivation. Statistics show that over 15,000,000 acres have already been reclaimed by drainage in the Mississippi Valley.

On account of the large appropriations necessary to be made in conducting the war, it may be necessary to devise a plan which would be attractive to private capital to undertake and carry on the reclamation of these millions of acres of land throughout the country after the initial investigations may be made. The latter part of last Congress I introduced a bill which provides a comprehensive plan of reclaiming the arid and swamp lands, which I reintroduced early in the present Congress, and which is now pending in the Committee on Arid Lands, and to which I desire to invite the attention of the Members of the House. A supplementary bill which I introduced gives preference in employment on the Government reclamation projects and preference right of entry upon the lands to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors.

In view of the high rate of interest being paid by the Government for loans, it will, of course, be necessary to increase the rate of interest mentioned in the bill by at least 1 per cent. The enactment of the proposed law guaranteeing the payment of principal and interest on irrigation district bonds would be as attractive to capitalists as any industrial bonds. It is believed that many of those of a philanthropic turn of mind will be interested in having their name identified with some individual project which would make homes for thousands of people and convert what is now worthless land into productive farms and prosperous communities, and that if this law is enacted all of the bonds on some of the smaller projects would be taken by a single individual.

The merits of the proposed legislation are well set forth in an article contributed by Hon. Will R. King, chief counsel of the United States Reclamation Service, to the Irrigation Age, in the March number:

All agree that it is the present paramount duty of the United States to wage war upon the Teutonic powers until victory may be assured. Second only to this duty is the work essential to the preparation for conditions to be confronted after the peace shall be declared.

All great wars have produced changes in the fundamental circumstances and in the character of nations engaged. Of this, the greatest of all wars recorded in history, the same will be still more fundamentally true.

It is well known that Great Britain, France, and Germany, notwithstanding their exhaustive efforts as manifested in the making of war, are looking far enough ahead to appreciate the duty of devoting much time to preparations of meeting the inevitable condition to accrue in the after-the-war period. Various commissions are appointed and the best ability is being devoted to the period which sooner or later will come for rejuvenation and the hoped-for peaceful developments. The United States will doubtless take similar precautions.

Historians have universally recognized the fact that the wounds created by the American Civil War were healed far more quickly than would otherwise have been possible had it not been for the availability of the vast areas of public land, which at the close of that great conflict were immediately opened for settlement.

It is well recognized that the attitude of mind of returning war veterans in all wars, but particularly in the case of members of the Anglo-Saxon race, has been found to have been deeply changed during the period of their long and strenuous camp life. Exceedingly difficult was it in the majority of cases for the soldier returning from our Civil War—no matter how glad he may have been to return to his old home—thereafter fully to adjust himself to his former life and surroundings. Soldiers, both of the North and of the South, on returning from war, in a vast number of cases soon became dissatisfied; and, to a large extent, it was they who peopled the West during the sixties and seventies following that conflict.

Except those of Alaska, free lands are now practically exhausted. If the American Nation is not to lose to Canada, Australia, and South Africa many of its most enterprising returned soldiers, provision should at once be made for giving to them in our own country, with the change of scene which they desire, the opportunities to which they are entitled of building homes for themselves.

It would seem there is but one way by which the United States may provide the much-needed remedy. That must be by extension and development of the idea embodied in the Federal reclamation act of June 17, 1902, so as to increase the development of the arid lands of the West by the diversion and use of the mountain streams in irrigation, and simultaneously by the reclamation of the swamp and overflow lands existing in large areas in more than half of the States of the Union.

The remaining lands in the arid and semiarid States susceptible of profitable reclamation have been estimated by the Census Bureau as 17,372,657 acres, while the swamp lands susceptible of reclamation at reasonable cost are estimated by the Geological Survey as 82,000,000 acres.

It is to be hoped that Congress will see the necessity of the immediate provision, as a loan if not otherwise, of sufficient funds to begin at once as many new projects, at least, as are now constructed. This would at once furnish employment and homes to thousands who will be seeking work on their return from Europe.

But to provide for continued meeting of these demands and increase the conversion of idle lands into productive homes, some bill should be enacted to meet the conditions. This is thought by practically all who have examined the subject to be embodied in what is known as the Chamberlain-Smith bill (S. 758, H. R. 2772, 65th Cong., 1st sess.), now before Congress.

This bill provides for the construction by the United States of irrigation and drainage projects after adequate investigation and contract with the irrigation or drainage district, as the case may be, such districts to be organized under the various State laws. Under its provisions whenever the people of a locality desire to have an irrigation project constructed (and the same applies with reference to draining swamp and overflowed lands), a petition is filed with the Secretary of the Interior asking that the necessary investigation be made to determine the feasibility thereof. Should the Secretary of the Interior conclude such project is feasible, it will be so reported and petitioners informed that upon the proper formation of an irrigation or drainage district, as the case may be, and the issuance of bonds sufficient in amount to cover the estimated cost, to be followed by subsequent bond issues in case the cost should exceed the first cost estimates, etc., and the depositing of the same with the Secretary of the Interior as security, the department will proceed with the construction of such project in the same manner and under like circumstances as that of the irrigation projects constructed under the present reclamation act.

The district will then issue bonds, to be validated by the State law courts in accordance with confirmation acts of the various States, after which deposit, as security, will be made with the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary is then authorized to issue certificates of indebtedness of the United States (in multiples to be decided upon) in an amount not to exceed the face value of the district bonds, both bonds and certificates to run for such period as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed 50 years, with interest at a maximum rate of 4 per cent per annum, thereby enabling the Secretary to provide for the reimbursement of the fund in full under what is known as the amortization plan of depositing a part of the moneys paid for interest annually until the full principal is paid.

From the proceeds of the sales of the Federal certificates of indebtedness the moneys will be forthcoming for the construction of such project undertaken.

The certificates of indebtedness are exempt from taxes or duties of the United States and from taxes under State or municipal authority.

To protect the Government against occasional and unavoidable losses, a special fund is created by drawing from the reclamation fund annually $350,000 until the special fund shall reach the sum of $10,000,000.

A plan is provided for the sale at public auction of public lands proposed to be reclaimed after division into farm units of suitable size. The Secretary may also provide for payment by purchasers upon an installment basis, and the land sold is required to be placed under progressive reclamation during a period of years. The proceeds from the sales are turned into the reclamation fund to be used for the construction of projects, either under the Chamberlain-Smith or the present reclamation act.

The bill also provides for sales of excess private lands to the United States upon appraisal to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and a resale of the land to settlers, the funds to be credited as partial payments upon the bonds of the district.

When the bonds and certificates issued from time to time by the Government for construction of projects are fully paid, the bonds issued by the district will be returned for cancellation.

The plan contemplated by this bill will enable each meritorious project to build itself, as it were, through the assistance of the Government, without calling on Congress from time to time for appropriations therefor.

The certificates to be issued in the construction of the projects will only be issued in quantities as needed, thereby obviating the necessity of interest accumulating upon the bonds or any part thereof before the money is actually invested in the construction of the project.

This bill will permit not only the reclamation of arid but swamp lands as well, and provide employment and homes for the thousands of returning soldiers after the war who may be seeking such homes and employment.

This measure should receive the careful attention and support of the public, and it is hoped that any improvements therein that may occur to students of the question will be suggested to Members of Congress as an aid in procuring the best possible bill upon the subject. When it is remembered that under this bill about 100,000,000 acres of land may be reclaimed, in addition to the area already reclaimed under the reclamation law, its great importance must be appreciated by everyone interested in the future welfare of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Engineering Commission: For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 12, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 305), entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," including expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations in Alaska, to continue available until expended, $5,250,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 108, line 22, strike out the figures "$5,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SULZER offers the following amendment: Page 108, line 22, strike out "$5,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,250,000."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I know that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee which had charge of this particular item in this bill devoted a great deal of consideration to this project. They held extensive hearings and had the members of the Alaska Engineering Commission before them, and I feel that they did not desire in any way to handicap this great project in the Territory of Alaska, which is now well on the way toward completion.

During the past few months there have been placed before Members of Congress criticisms of the manner in which this enterprise has been conducted. I am satisfied these protests were entirely of a personal character and not made with any degree of good faith, but rather to serve personal ends. I am happy to find that the Appropriations Committee paid no attention to this propaganda, and for the information of Congress and the country I wish to read a letter I have received from the President on this subject, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 1, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: I am very sorry to learn from your letter of yesterday that serious misinformation concerning the construction of the Government railway in Alaska is finding its way to Members of Congress. There is, of course, no secret about anything connected with the construction of the railway, and the reports of the Secretary of the Interior are full and frank. I have followed the matter myself as closely as it was possible for me to do so amidst so many matters that demanded my attention, and have upon each inquiry been satisfied that matters were going as well as could have been expected. If there is any particular way in which I can help clear up misunderstandings, I will be very much obliged if you would suggest it.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

I am grateful that the committee have placed in this bill the amount of $5,250,000; that they did not see fit to let this work stop; and when I offer this amendment to increase this item I do not wish to be understood as criticizing the committee in any manner. I feel that they have done what they thought was wise, and that they believed that in reducing the estimate to the extent of $2,100,000 they would not seriously handicap the work which is going on toward completion of the Alaskan Railway.

Mr. Chairman, I regret that I can not agree with the committee in that respect. I have devoted a great deal of thought and study to this work and this project. I have talked the matter over very carefully with members of the commission and with officials of the Interior Department who are responsible for the work. They all advise me that this reduction will have a very serious effect upon their organization. The amount of the original estimate which was prepared last fall by the officials of the Interior Department after very careful consideration was a minimum figure, every possible item being reduced or eliminated by the Secretary of the Interior in seeking to cut out every expense that could be avoided under the circumstances and conditions existing at this time. If the departmental estimate is reduced we all feel that it will handicap this work to a great extent at this time, and that it will be a serious detriment, financially and otherwise, to the completion of the railroad.

Last year the Alaskan Engineering Commission obtained $14,000,000 for this work. We all realize that we are in a great war, and that not a dollar should be spent by the Government unless it is a matter of absolute necessity; and the Secretary of the Interior has reduced the estimates 50 per cent—cut them in half—so that this year the Alaskan Engineering Commission request only $7,350,000. In reducing the estimates to this amount it is believed they have been cut down to the very limit consistent with economical prosecution of the project, and that a less amount would not enable the commission to hold together through the coming fiscal year its organization, which has been built up through the course of several years, and is now at its perfection. To break up and scatter this splendid organization will bring about irreparable injury and greatly delay completion of the project.

The reduction made by the committee cuts out two items which were in the estimates; one extending from the Susitna River to Hurricane Gulch, or, in other words, the extension proposed on the north end of the Anchorage division; the other item that has been cut out of the estimates is the extension from Lignite to Riley Creek, or the south extension of the interior division. In other words, the committee have seen fit to allow the work to continue on both ends, but not to extend it toward completion from both ends in order to close the gap and connect the great interior mineral and agricultural lands with the coast, as you see here on the map which I have had placed before you. I know the committee feel no harm is being done by delaying work on these extensions, but I can not see the logic of cutting down the appropriation at this time and thus delaying the connection of the coast and interior divisions, when it is of such vital necessity that this connection be made at the earliest time. If the increase asked for is not allowed it is most probable that next fall the commission will be out of funds, and while it has been suggested they may then ask for a deficiency appropriation it would be far wiser to grant the money now in order that they may perfect their plans and hold their organization together throughout the year. I have a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior and a telegram from the Governor of Alaska which show the existing situation clearly, and which read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 13, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: In reply to your letter of the 11th June, concerning the decrease of about $2,300,000 in the estimates submitted for construction of the Alaska Railroad, as shown by the sundry civil bill, I beg to say that in the opinion of the department such decrease is a serious hardship, which the enterprise should not now suffer. By careful attention and watchfulness we have been able to retain upon our rolls a majority of the workmen, and are now employing a force of over 2,500 men. If the figures now carried in the bill be maintained we fear that dispersal of our working force may result. This would be very unfortunate, since most of these men would leave the Territory for the outside, and for some years to come it would probably be impossible to again assemble a similar force. In our judgment the work should proceed to completion as speedily as possible without breaking the present organization.

It is true that we suffer in common with all other builders from increase of cost of labor and supplies, but we feel that the loss to the Government by disruption of this organized force and delayed completion, involving inevitable deterioration of already completed work, would be infinitely greater. We sincerely hope that the Appropriations Committee may assent to a restoration of the appropriation to the original figures submitted by us.

Cordially and sincerely, ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

JUNEAU, ALASKA, June 12, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Since estimates were made August last for railroad cost of supplies and freight have increased 30 to 80 per cent, so estimates will not cover work contemplated thereunder. This is especially true of work interior of Alaska where completion coal fields to Fairbanks are most essential. Most shortsighted policy not to allow commission to work at Peak always and push construction to finish as unconnected line is source of double overhead expense with heavy freight rates on material which could be handled over completed railroad. Ultimate cost would be increased. Endeavor to have full estimate replaced.

RIGGS, Governor.

Mr. LONDON. What does the yellow line on this map indicate?

Mr. SULZER. The yellow line indicates the completed work. You will see a small crossline inside of the yellow line, which indicates the line that is now in operation with the rails laid and all work completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. That includes the line from Seward, the Pacific coast terminus, up to the Susitna River here [indicating on the map], and also that shown as completed on the interior division.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Can the gentleman state approximately the number of miles of line completed?

Mr. SULZER. There are 288.4 miles of main line, 26 miles of siding, spurs, and tracks, and 49.2 miles of narrow-gauge line.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are they operating cars on the main line now?

Mr. SULZER. Oh, yes. The operating receipts during 1917 were over $60,000. At the present time 65 per cent of this entire project of 553 miles is completed, according to actual mileage, but there is a great deal more of the project completed, as a matter of fact, because the commission in undertaking this great work up in Alaska had to start at the grass roots and had to establish a base from which to work, and they have built very extensive bases at Seward, at Anchorage, and Nenana, and partly so at Fairbanks. They have built roundhouses, machine shops, hospitals, and various works and equipment of all kinds necessary to start this work and to keep it going in first-class manner in all respects. That has all been done. It will not be necessary to extend any such work as that from now on, but it simply remains to complete the line between these two points [indicating on map].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How far is it between these two points?

Mr. SULZER. If the $7,250,000 for which the estimate was submitted, and which amount is contained in the amendment which I have offered, is agreed to by the House, this entire project can be completed this year, except 100 miles through the Broad Pass country. That is a very easy piece of work; there is a broad pass going through, little rockwork, and no serious difficulties whatever in connection with it. So that if this allowance is made it should complete the entire project with the exception of that 100 miles, which, I think, can be done next year probably, or early in 1920.

Mr. LONDON. Can this project be completed within the fiscal year for which this bill provides?

Mr. SULZER. No; I do not think so. The estimates contemplate completing everything except that 100 miles, which can be completed next year or early in 1920.

Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in listening to the remarks that have been made by various gentlemen within the past hour in regard to what is going to be done for our soldiers who are fighting our battles in France at this time, and who will continue to do so.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, there is no place upon the continent where better opportunities can be granted to our soldiers when they return than there is in Alaska. There is a great territory of 600,000 square miles, with millions of acres of virgin land, still in the public domain, and there is where the Government can do a great deal for those who are fighting our battles now. The completion of this railroad project will enable that to be done. The railroad will open up this vast interior territory where the best agricultural lands are, and it will not only open up the agricultural land but it will open up the mineral lands. It will afford opportunities for our soldiers that can be found in no other section of our country, and we should now speedily prepare this great area of virgin country so that it will be ready for our returning heroes when they have won the great victory.

Mr. Chairman, I want to ask to have read at this time a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the great necessity for the production of gold at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: I beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 1, in relation to the present conditions surrounding the production of gold in Alaska. I fully appreciate that, with the rising cost of raw material and labor and with a fixed value for their output, the gold miners of the world are facing difficult conditions. I should be sorry, however, if for this reason there were any relaxation in the effort to produce gold. At no time has this country so much required the largest possible production of gold as at present. Next to food and ammunition, gold is one of the most needed war essentials. In order to place the enormous amount of Government bonds required to finance our war expenditures a large credit structure will inevitably be erected on our gold reserves, and it is necessary that those reserves, which are the foundation of the structure, shall be maintained on the broadest possible basis.

The United States and its associates in the war are heavy purchasers of raw materials and other commodities for the war in many neutral countries, and our war requirements make it impossible for us to pay our bills in those neutral countries as we have been in the habit of paying them in times of peace, viz, through the shipment of manufactured goods and commodities which those countries are eager to buy from us. This means that a certain amount of debt to those countries must be paid for in credits or in gold.

This brief statement will, I hope, make clear to your constituents the great necessity that exists for the maintenance of gold production at the maximum point. The man or the community that maintains or increases its production of gold in the face of difficulties and discouragement is performing a patriotic service which deserves recognition no less than the more obvious but not less useful services that are more in the public eye.

I remain, with best wishes,
Very sincerely, yours,
W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The 600,000 square miles the gentleman spoke about, which can be made available for the soldiers when they return, is it suitable for agriculture?

Mr. SULZER. Not all of it is suitable for agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What could the soldiers do with it?

Mr. SULZER. Two hundred and fifty thousand square miles is excellent agricultural land. This has been demonstrated by actual developments and by experiments that have been carried on by the Government showing this area to contain some of the finest agricultural land there is in the world. Equally satisfactory results are obtained in Alaska as in Norway, Sweden, Finland, or Denmark, which are largely agricultural countries.

Now, in regard to the production of gold, the Territory of Alaska up to this time has produced $300,000,000 in gold; $750,000,000 worth of products most vital and essential to the Government have been produced by Alaska since its purchase by the United States, and about $100,000,000, or nearly one-seventh of that production, was obtained during the year 1917.

The truth about the gold fields of Alaska is that thus far the miners have only been able to work the bonanza ground, the very rich ground, on account of the very high cost of operation, and that high cost is due to lack of transportation. It is impossible to get labor at a reasonable cost or get supplies in there until we have adequate transportation. The people know that it is impossible to open up the low-grade placer and the quartz gold fields in the interior of Alaska until they are provided with adequate transportation, and if they could be provided with transportation that would be all that is necessary to multiply the output. Many people feel that all this railroad will do is the opening of the Alaska coal fields, but there are other and equally important things to be accomplished by the building of this railroad. It will open the heart of the country and will permit the building of feeder railroads, wagon roads, and trails until the country is made economically accessible, and it will enable the miners to get their machinery and supplies at a reasonable cost and will greatly increase the gold supply and the supply of all the various metals so abundantly distributed throughout Alaska.

The money recommended by the Appropriations Committee for this railroad work will, we hope, be sufficient to construct the railroad from the Matanuska coal fields to tidewater and to connect the Nenana coal fields with Fairbanks, the center of the great mining district of the Tanana Valley. Thus will the Nation be enabled to obtain the benefit for its Navy of the fuel from the Matanuska fields; and the miners of the interior, who are using thousands of cords of wood annually, will be able to reduce their expenses materially by the use of coal.

But that is not all that was intended or expected of this railroad. This line of steel, it was planned, would be the means of not only supplying fuel for the Navy and for the miners but was also expected to be the means of reducing freight rates to the interior of Alaska to such an extent that it would be possible to operate thousands of acres of low-grade placer ground that are now lying idle; to develop a country which would furnish a market for the farmers who are making such wonderful strides, and to open the way to many industries that always follow railroads into pioneer countries.

At the present time the people of interior Alaska pay freight rates ranging from $90 to $150 per ton on their supplies, so that this, added to the original purchase price, makes it prohibitive to operate any but the bonanzas.

There may be some who do not know of conditions in the interior, and for their benefit I would like to consume a very short time in explaining the situation.

Fairbanks, in the Tanana Valley, was a wilderness in the spring of 1902. During that year gold was first struck on one of the creeks adjacent to what is now the town of Fairbanks. As the news of the strike spread, miners and prospectors, principally from Dawson and the upper Yukon River, stampeded to the Tanana Valley during the years 1903 and 1904, but the big inrush was at its height in 1905, I believe. As a placer camp it developed that the strike was second only to that of the great Klondike. The claims were rich, there was plenty of timber for fuel in the immediate vicinity of the mining properties, and during the years ever since 1903 the camp has been yielding its millions, which, in the aggregate reach almost the hundred million dollar mark; almost three times the amount the Government was authorized to spend in the building of this railroad.

And now, after all this gold has been extracted from the ground, according to estimates made by the United States Geological Survey, there is almost an equal amount of gold yet to be taken from that district. And that does not take into account the many promising quartz prospects, antimony, tin, tungsten, or the other rare metals.

But while there are yet millions of dollars to be extracted, the timber for fuel has been exhausted almost entirely. While the miners of some years ago could land wood on their properties for seven, eight, and nine dollars a cord, they are now compelled to pay as high as $16 per cord. Think of it! The enormous cost of operation. And in addition to that they must pay freight charges on their machinery, tools, and other supplies that are almost prohibitive.

The connecting of the coal fields of the Nenana with Fairbanks will reduce the cost of mining operations greatly, for, in all probability, coal will be delivered there per ton for about one-third what some of the miners are now paying per cord for wood. And one ton of coal will replace practically two cords of wood.

To work the mines of the interior to the maximum this railroad must be completed to land the fuel at the mines and to deliver the supplies to the people of the Tanana Valley at prices far below what is being paid now.

And that is not the only question to be considered. To develop the tonnage for the railroad which must be developed if it is to become self-sustaining, the railroad must be built over the territory, at least, which it was originally planned to cover.

NENANA-BROAD PASS.

And, Mr. Chairman, in addition to the Fairbanks district, we have that great country to the south of Nenana, which is known as the Broad Pass country. Prospectors have located in that section great areas of copper property that will be available and workable as soon as the railroad is completed, and throughout a large surrounding country there are miles of low-grade placer gold properties which are lying dormant waiting for transportation facilities.

All of these will add inestimable wealth to the Nation and will supply many of the so-called war metals which are badly needed at the present time.

I am reliably informed that there are one or two properties alone in Kantishna country, adjacent to the railroad, which alone would supply thousands of tons of rich antimony ore if it was possible to ship it to tidewater.

And over the railroad would go a heavy tonnage for points on the lower Tanana River and central Alaska Yukon River points which now goes hundreds of miles around through Canadian and northern Alaska points to reach its destination. This railroad when completed will make it possible, at the points just mentioned, for the miners and others to receive their supplies much earlier in the spring and at less cost than at the present time.

Many of you realize what beneficent effect the production from the gold fields of California had on the credit of the Nation during and after the Civil War. The same thing will be true of Alaska during the present war. It is not only of great importance to stimulate and increase the gold supply, but it is also important to stimulate the supply of rarer metals vital to the interests of the Nation in carrying on the war, such as tungsten, tin, antimony, chrome, and other rare metals.

I have a letter from Dr. Van. H. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, which shows the great urgency of increasing the production and providing transportation facilities, which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, June 11, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: As you know, there is a very grave deficiency in the supplies of various minerals, such as tungsten, chrome, manganese, antimony, quicksilver, and others that have come to be known as war minerals. The Government is making efforts to stimulate their production with the particular purpose of meeting war needs and also of developing local supplies to cover those formerly imported, but which can now no longer be had because of the shortage of shipping. From letters and documents already supplied you by this bureau and the Geological Survey, you are aware that Alaska contains very promising deposits of many of these minerals. It happens that the balance of trade is such that the shipping problem does not enter into the matter of bringing such products down from Alaska. One of the difficulties met in developing the deposits has been the lack of roads, trails, and railways; in fact, the inland transportation is one of the most serious matters to be considered in this case. I hope it may be possible for you to do something to assure improved facilities to the Alaska mines, and I can assure you that any money spent in this direction will be of real service to the country.

Trusting that you may find a way to bring this about, I am,
Very cordially, yours,

VAN. H. MANNING, Director.

Mr. Chairman, some months ago I received this splendid letter from the Anchorage Chamber of Commerce, which reads as follows:

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA, December 20, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES A. SULZER,
Delegate from Alaska, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SULZER: At a recent meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Anchorage, Alaska, it was unanimously decided that a letter should be written you and copies thereof sent to Senator PITTMAN, chairman of the Committee on Territories of the Senate, and Congressman HOUSTON, chairman of the Committee on the Territories of the House of Representatives; to Secretary Lane, and to Mr. Edes, chairman of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, urging the necessity of the completion of the construction of the Government railroad between Seward and Fairbanks.

Some time ago a statement appeared in the local papers to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior had stated before the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives that the question of the advisability of completing the road, in view of the increased cost of labor and material, was under consideration.

We are now informed that a committee was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of reporting to him upon this matter, and that said committee urged the completion of the road at the earliest date practicable, and, as a consequence, the Secretary has asked for an appropriation of $7,500,000 for next year's work. This request was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and, we are informed, included in the Book of Estimates for 1919.

It may be that there will be no opposition to the appropriation of the $7,500,000 for this purpose; we are satisfied that you will do all within your power to see that it is authorized by Congress, but inasmuch as we, the people of Anchorage, as well as all of the people along the line of the railroad, are most vitally interested, we beg to submit for your consideration what we consider good reasons for the continuation of the work, and we trust that you will be able to make beneficial use of it.

NUMBER OF MILES WHICH WILL BE COMPLETED WITH PRESENT APPROPRIATION.

At the present time approximately 256½ miles of rail has been laid. It is expected by next June or July connection will be made between Anchorage and Seward, thus making a completed roadbed between Seward and Talkeetna, a distance of approximately 227 miles. In addition thereto there are 38 miles of steel on the Matanuska coal branch, and by next June or July it is expected that rail will be laid from Nenana 50 miles south to the Nenana coal fields. By July or August, 1918, it is expected that with the present appropriation there will be approximately 315 miles of track laid.

It is planned to construct approximately 508 miles of railroad, being 470 miles from Seward to Fairbanks and 38 miles into the Matanuska coal fields. It will thus be seen that there will be approximately 195 miles of track to be laid after July or August, 1918. This consists of 145 miles from Talkeetna to the Nenana coal fields and 50 miles from Nenana to Fairbanks. A portion of the 195 miles has already been cleared and some of it graded and ready for steel, and it would be unfortunate, to say the least, if the grading should be left for several years without steel and without being kept in repair.

RESOURCES AFFECTED BY NOT COMPLETING THE RAILROAD.

The declared purpose of Congress in authorizing the construction of the railroad in Alaska was to aid in the development of the resources of the Territory. At present the railroad has reached the principal coal field in Alaska, and by next year shipping facilities will have been established, mines will have been opened, and coal can then be shipped; the railroad will also have reached the vicinity of some of the principal gold-mining camps in the Susitna River watershed, but the greatest benefit to the Territory will not accrue until the completion of the railroad into the interior.

Many of the gold mines in the interior, including both placer and quartz, were compelled to close during the past season because of the high cost of labor, material, and supplies. They are all awaiting the completion of the Government railroad so as to bring the interior into closer touch with the labor market of the States and enable them to secure their machinery and other material and supplies cheaper.

Many people have come into the territory; have invested their capital and made plans on the assumption that the railroad would be completed. If there should be a cessation of construction and the road left uncompleted, it would compel many of these people to abandon their plans, lose their investment, and return to the States. This would not only be detrimental to the Territory as a whole but would seriously affect any future work on the railroad and development of the resources tributary to it. To stop construction now would not only make the railroad cost a great deal more but it would result in irreparable losses to many people who have made plans as above stated. This applies as well to those who have purchased lots and made investments in the town sites laid out, developed, and offered for sale by the Government through the Alaskan Engineering Commission. At these sales the plans for the building of the railroad and the development of the country have been explained, and upon these showings there have been sold by the Government 1,892 lots in the town sites of Anchorage, Matanuska, Nenana, and Seward at sale prices aggregating over $410,000. The assessed valuation of the town of Anchorage in August, 1917, showed a total of $2,000,000. Other towns along the line of railroad will doubtless show proportionate valuations. Any stoppage or even curtailment of the work on the Government railroad as originally planned would certainly work great injustice and large monetary losses on those who have made their investments under the impression that the work would be completed, and the development of the mining and agricultural districts of the Territory would be retarded at least 5 and possibly 10 or more years.

ADDITIONAL COST OF RAILROAD IN THE EVENT OF CESSATION OF CONSTRUCTION.

To decline to furnish money for the completion of the railroad at this time would naturally result in disorganization of the Alaskan Engineering Commission; it would mean the loss of many valuable men who are now familiar with the work and who could carry it to completion in a much better and more effective manner than a new organization. Furthermore, many of these people would leave the Territory, and it would be impossible in many cases to again secure their services.

Particular attention should also be given to the fact that the Alaskan Engineering Commission now has a very large amount of material, equipment, and supplies, which necessarily would deteriorate and much of it become spoiled and worthless if construction should not proceed. The plans and preparations which the commission have made for the continuance and completion of the work would go for naught, and the money already expended therefor be practically a loss.

The work which has been accomplished by the Alaskan Engineering Commission is deserving of commendation. Unforeseen and unexpected difficulties have arisen through the greatly increased cost of labor, material, and supplies, and the difficulty and delays in securing the two latter items occasioned by the abnormal conditions now prevailing throughout the world. In spite of these conditions, before the end of the coming summer, with the present appropriation, the project will be more than three-fifths completed.

WAR MEASURE.

Another compelling and very important reason for completing the road at this time is that it will greatly aid in increasing the supply of food, minerals, and other items needed in the prosecution of the war. The completion of the road would result in additional homesteads being located and consequently larger food production; it would mean the opening of new gold and copper mines and great production in this industry, and this would be the means of encouraging capital to invest in and develop the coal deposits. All these industries are now of vital importance to the Nation and our allies.

The foregoing are some of the reasons which occur to us at this time for the necessity of the completion of the Government railroad, and we trust that there will be no hesitation on the part of Congress to grant the authority.

Yours, very truly,

ANCHORAGE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
By SIDNEY ANDERSON, First Vice President.

This letter states the case very concisely, and it does seem to me that from every standpoint of national interest every effort should be put forth to complete the Alaska Government railroad at the earliest practicable time. The present organization should by all means be kept intact, and the money asked for should be granted to insure the continuation of the work during the next fiscal year.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, in asking this appropriation we are only asking for part of what Congress originally authorized to be made—$35,000,000 to complete the project—and it seems to me wise to give the Interior Department the amount of money that they ask for. It would have been much better and more economical if Congress had at the beginning made this entire sum available as needed and required. This would have enabled the perfecting and carrying out of plans to better advantage.

I might say, also, in this connection that this expenditure is simply in the nature of loaning this money to the people of Alaska, because the law which originally authorized the expenditure provided it should be repaid out of the receipts from the sale of the public lands of Alaska and from the royalties to be derived from those lands. That money will be returned manyfold and is being returned partially to-day and put in the Treasury.

I am not urging that consideration at this time, for I believe, with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that not a dollar should be expended at this time unless absolutely necessary. I am urging that the increase be made because I know that the people who have the work in hand absolutely need it in order to maintain and hold their organization together so that they will not lose their splendid force when next fall arrives, so that they can complete their work at the earliest possible time and make it of that great value that I am sure we all want to see it made. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered the Alaskan Railway matter very carefully. We believed it our duty to provide every dollar that would be needed to keep the present organization together and the Alaskan Railway progressing.

There are about 2,400 men in that organization now, and at $5 a day, 300 days in the year, that would make a pay roll of three and one-half million dollars. The committee gave something over $5,000,000 for the work. We believe that is a reasonable sum, sufficient to keep the organization intact and to go on steadily and constantly with the work. We did not feel justified in granting sums that would necessitate the bringing of labor from other parts of the country into Alaska at this time. There is no thought of stopping the continuous progress of the Alaskan Railroad.

We are of the opinion that the money that we give will do approximately this. First, it will afford all of the funds asked for and that can be expended for the Seward division, extending from Seward to the Turnagain Arm. The territory between the Turnagain Arm and Anchorage will be completed with funds now available. It will provide all of the moneys necessary for general expenses on the Anchorage division, and all the moneys asked for the completion of the Anchorage division through to the Susitna River. We gave sufficient money to enable them to lay the foundations of the Susitna Bridge.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. I think that has been cut out. I am sure it has. I studied it very carefully, and I would say to the gentleman that that was one of the objects the commission wished to accomplish.

Mr. MONDELL. If they are not going to build the foundations of the Susitna Bridge, then they have $205,000 to the good, for that was included in our estimate of what was needed.

Mr. SULZER. But they want to build them, but that is in one of the items stricken out by the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is not. I am telling the gentleman what we had in mind as necessary, and one of the things was the foundations of the Susitna Bridge, and the $205,000 was specifically included in the sums we estimated.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. He is undoubtedly correct. I thought the item allowed by the committee was for the purchase of rails that had been contracted for.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a lump sum. The Alaska Commission may use it as they see fit; but I am giving the gentleman the benefit of the thought of the committee in fixing what we believed to be a liberal amount, and we included in that the $205,000 needed for the foundations of the Susitna Bridge.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman knows that in a country like that and in work of this kind it is almost impossible to confine oneself absolutely to estimates made the year before.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand, and the whole matter is a lump-sum item; but we had an opinion as to what ought to be done and what could be left undone, and I am endeavoring to give the House the benefit, if it be a benefit, of that opinion. In addition to that, we granted the sums believed to be necessary for the improvement of the harbor at Anchorage. We granted a sum sufficient to provide for the hospitals and other incidental miscellaneous expenditures in connection with the project generally. We granted a sum sufficient to complete the coal spur from the present line to the lignite coal fields. We granted sufficient to complete the line from the Tanana to the lignite coal fields. We granted a sum which we believe will be sufficient to build the line from the Tanana to Fairbanks. We granted a sum which will be sufficient to rehabilitate the Fairbanks narrow-gauge line. The only sums that we had in mind that might be properly eliminated, and which constituted approximately the amount by which we reduced the estimate, was the sum asked or suggested for the construction of 22 miles from the Susitna River north to Hurricane Gulch and the estimate for work between Riley and Lignite Creeks. Those two items, eliminating $205,000 for the foundations of the Susitna Bridge, amount to a little less than $2,000,000.

The sums we granted are, with funds now on hand, sufficient to complete the railroad and put it in good condition, including the harbor at Anchorage, from Seward clear through to the Susitna River; enough to complete the railroad from the lignite coal fields through to Fairbanks, and to put into good condition the narrow-gauge road in the vicinity of Fairbanks.

The only items we thought were of doubtful propriety at this time were the items from the Susitna River to Hurricane Gulch and from Reilly Creek to Lignite Creek. As to those items, the chairman of the commission said he had some doubt whether or not he could secure the labor for the construction of those two sections of the road. He did say that as to the Reilly-Lignite Creek section, he did desire to maintain some station men, keep them at work in the canyon in order to have that work sufficiently along so that it would not retard the progress when they began on those sections with the full force. While the sum by which we have reduced the estimate approximates the sum estimated for these interior sections, the least needed, the most difficult to construct at this time, we believe that the estimates for the other work are sufficiently liberal, that from them sufficient sums can be saved and utilized to keep a certain reasonable force, at work on certain sections as may be deemed advisable between Lignite Creek and the Susitna River. We believe it would be wise to do that, and we believe there are abundant funds with which that can be done. In other words, we have given enough for the entire program, except the interior section, with regard to which the commission itself was somewhat doubtful as to the advisability of pressing at this time. We have granted a sum sufficient to keep every man now in Alaska and in the organization busy for the next year.

Mr. SULZER. If I thought that was the case, I would not ask for this amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I assure the gentleman, from the best of my knowledge and belief, that it is, and I have some information in regard to this general situation other than I received at this hearing, and I have some practical knowledge of railway construction work in that sort of a region. My belief is that we have granted a sufficient amount of money with that now on hand to keep every man that is there at work steadily, to keep this work going without a let up from now to the close of the year for which the appropriations are made. If we have not, Congress will be in session again in December and another bill will pass by March 1.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman how the items allowed by the committee which he spoke about a moment ago compare with the estimates submitted?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that it is a lump sum?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore we did not allot by items, but we allowed the full estimated sum of those items that I have mentioned. The reduction is approximately, not exactly, but approximately, the amount estimated for the work in the interior.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. But we did not assume that work is to be entirely suspended in the interior, because we believed these other estimates are full enough to give considerable leeway to keep these small parties—these station parties—at work in the interior.

Mr. SULZER. If the commission can not use this money there will be no harm done in appropriating it.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, whenever the Congress gets to appropriating the public money on the theory that if it is not needed it will not be used, then we may just as well dispense with committees. Why spend time examining a thing like this and then guess at it on the basis that if they do not need it it will not be used? The fact is that from certain very reasonable viewpoints it might be urged with force and logic that the committee had recommended two much for this work under present conditions. It might well be urged that it is not wise or advisable to spend over a million dollars on the Seward division. Personally, I believe that expenditure should be made, but good arguments may be made against spending that much the coming fiscal year. Then, there is the line from the Tanana to Fairbanks. There is an enormous estimated expenditure to furnish 56 miles of railway right alongside a navigable river now being used. It may well be urged that expenditures of that sort at this time are of exceedingly doubtful propriety, and yet we have granted funds enough to do these pieces of work or to get them well toward completion, and use considerable sums in the central section between the Susitna and Lignite Creek.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee again divided.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The withdrawal comes too late. The committee has divided.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 2, noes 18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo. For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not to exceed $7,500 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary, not to exceed $7,500 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the south boundary, not to exceed $7,600 for the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and including feed for buffalo and other animals and salaries of buffalo keepers, $244,520, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That not exceeding $2,000 may be expended for the removal of snow from any of the roads for the purpose of opening them in advance of the tourist season.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the committee has modified the plan for the management and improvement of Yellowstone National Park so radically that I think the item should not be passed without some reference being made to it. Heretofore the Department of the Interior has had charge of the management of the park with a small appropriation. The building of roads in the park has been under the control and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and the park has been patrolled by the Army, generally a company or two companies of Cavalry. For some years the Secretary of War has desired to withdraw troops from the park; in fact, they were withdrawn something over a year ago for a short time and then returned. At one time and another the Chief of Engineers has suggested that they would be just as happy if they were not in charge of the park road construction. The matter of placing the park completely under the control of one Government agency has been under consideration for a number of years, particularly since the establishment of the National Park Service, and in making up the appropriation bill this year the committee thought the time had arrived for making the change that has been proposed and suggested at various times for years past. The park now goes under the complete control and jurisdiction of the National Park Service. They will manage and control the park and build the roads, and they will also patrol it. The Cavalry will be removed, and civilian rangers will take their places. The Army has done a splendid work in the Yellowstone National Park, and under peace conditions it might have been well to have continued the plan under which we have been operating in years past. Taking everything into consideration—the need of troops elsewhere, the need by the Chief of Engineers of all of his engineers on war service—the committee believed that it was wise to transfer the park entirely to civilian control, and that has been done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement, construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads; including, not exceeding $1,000 for purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of two motorcycles, not exceeding $800 for maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, not exceeding $15,000 for a bridge at the old Sentinel Bridge site, and not exceeding $75,000 for grading in width not exceeding 20 feet El Portal-Yosemite Road, $255,000.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask permission that the following telegram, which has to do with an item in this bill which was acted on last Wednesday, shall be read in my time. The telegram is from Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, who is now attending the convention of that organization in St. Paul, Minn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the telegram indicated be read in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. PAUL, MINN., June 12, 1918.

Hon. EDWARD KEATING,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Am informed by wire that estimates for increased pay for women employees of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing have been cut. In justice to the women employed in this branch of Government service, the original estimates should be enacted into law. The minimum wage in this department, as well as in every other department, should constitute a living wage. May I ask your cooperation and assistance in an effort to secure adoption by House of original estimates?

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief statement prepared by the representative of the Federal Employees' Organization with reference to the estimates referred to by Mr. Gompers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. The following very convincing plea for better wages for the women in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was prepared by a member of the employees' organization: One thousand three hundred and fifty-three printers' assistants now receiving $1.92 per day have been promoted from $1.75 a day within the last month. These printers' assistants are skilled, and a month's training is required before they are regularly placed on duty. They stand all day by the hand presses handing the paper to the plate printers. They must draw this paper in the morning, count it, and be responsible for each sheet of it, turning it in at night either as printed or unprinted sheets. The work is constant, dirty, and very trying. It requires these women to remain upon their feet for 8 hours at least in each day. They are provided with no seats except on the power presses, as the District law requires for women employed in shops.

The increase allowed by the Appropriations Committee is not sufficient to grant these 1,353 printers' assistants an increase to $2.24 per day. They now receive $1.92. The difference between $1.92 and $2.24 is 32 cents; 1,353 multiplied by 32 and by 312, the number of working days in a year, amounts to $135,083.52.

There are 200 operatives at $1.92, 307 at $2, 1,341 at $2.24, and 240 at $2.31 or more up to $2.69.

These operatives are employed in the numbering, trimming, surface, examining, wetting, stamp perforating and gumming divisions, and stamp-book room. The duties of these operatives consist in counting, checking, handling, gumming, perforating, and examining the paper on which is printed the money, liberty bonds, and stamps, and also wetting this paper, feeding it into the presses and gumming the stamps after it is printed. They are on 8-hour shifts, and the duty is constant throughout the day.

Every sheet of paper must be carefully watched, counted, and checked each time it is handled. Any loss is charged against the employee responsible, and they are held absolutely responsible for this valuable paper.

Most of these divisions work day and night shifts of 8 hours each, some of them three shifts of 8 hours. The women are required to start work at 8 o'clock in the morning, 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and at midnight. They are constantly watched and checked to prevent any possible dishonesty. This work and responsibility is hardly comparable to that of any other work under the Government except the money counters in the Treasury, whose minimum is now $840, and after a short period of service they are advanced to $900.

The girls in the bureau first presented their claim for increased pay to the director several months ago. He then, acting under a misunderstanding, stated that there was no authority for him to increase wages, but on a reference by him of the matter to the Comptroller of the Treasury, he was advised that the Secretary of the Treasury had authority under the law to fix these wages. The director in his hearing before the Appropriations Committee on March 26, 1918, stated the foregoing facts and that a substantial increase should be granted. He found, though, that he did not have sufficient money to make an increase for the great number of employees concerned.

A few days ago at a hearing before the Appropriations Committee, Mr. SHERLEY, the chairman, stated as follows:

Manifestly the administrative officer of a concern like this is the man who ought to know who is entitled to compensation, and what compensation, and if he is fit for his job he ought to be in a position to make the recommendation and to make the payments to the people according to the value of their services. Then the Congress would appropriate, as it always has appropriated, the money with which to properly run the various establishments. I think you ought to know exactly where the responsibility rests. The Secretary of the Treasury has the power under the law to fix your compensation, and he ought to fix it.

The director and the Secretary of the Treasury have now estimated for an amount sufficient to materially increase the pay of these employees. The estimate is published as House Document No. 1148, and I have here a letter signed by the Secretary of the Treasury approving this estimate. The matter is thus placed before Congress with favorable recommendations from the director of the bureau and the Secretary of the Treasury, whom the chairman of the committee says have the responsibility, and should determine the rate of pay. Congress must now say whether they will furnish the money to carry out the recommendation of these administrative officers. The Appropriations Committee has refused to do so and we are now appealing to the whole House.

The amount allowed by the Appropriations Committee of $100,000 will provide increases only for 1,353 of the 4,000 women employed in the bureau, leaving nothing at all for the others. The chairman stated on the floor of the House that if anyone could mathematically show that the $100,000 was not sufficient to bring the minimum pay up to $2.24 a day he would accept an amendment to increase the amount sufficient to make the minimum $2.24 a day. As stated above, it will require $135,083.52 to increase the 1,353 printers' assistants from $1.92 to $2.24 a day.

There are 307 operatives at $2 a day, and it will require $22,978.16 to increase them to $2.24 per day. There are 300 operatives at $1.92 a day, and it will require $29,952 to bring them up to a minimum of $2.24 a day.

This would make the total necessary to bring the minimum up to $2.24 a day $188,013.68, or nearly $200,000.

The director and the Secretary of the Treasury have recommended that $2.56 a day be made the minimum, and that other employees working alongside the operatives and printers' assistants, none of whom receive more than $2.82 a day, be given small promotions in order to preserve the present ratio. The amount necessary to increase the 1,353 printers' assistants from $1.92 to $2.56 is $270,600. The amount necessary to increase the operatives to a minimum of $2.56 and not more than $2.88 is $329,198. This amounts to a total of $599,798, or nearly $600,000 recommended by the director of the bureau and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Appropriations Committee allows only $100,000.

This provides absolutely no increase for those who are now receiving $2.24 a day, of which there are 1,581 between $2.24 and $2.69.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee stated at the hearing:

> The question of pay is a question of administration, and the administrative officer should know what ought to be paid. It does not follow that $1.75 a day would be a right figure this year and a right one next year, or that it would have been a right one the year before, because wages ought to be adjusted both up and down in accordance with the conditions that surround the people in the way of living and all other factors.

The chairman advised the committee from the bureau to secure a supplemental estimate from the director and Secretary of the Treasury after he had made the foregoing statements.

This committee immediately went to the director, who readily agreed to prepare and submit the supplemental estimate. This estimate was first called to the attention of the director on the afternoon of June 3, and on June 5 the Treasury Department, through Acting Secretary Moyle, and with the approval of Secretary McAdoo, placed before the Appropriations Committee the desired supplemental estimate. After stating at the hearing that the matter was one of administration and that it was the duty of the administrative officers to assume responsibility for the rates of wages paid, the chairman stated that he was "impressed with the fact that even assuming that they—the plate printers—needed it—an increase in pay—apparently they did not need it as much as some of these other groups," and "if Mr. Wilmeth feels that there should be an increase in the pay of these women employees, and if he was unable to make that increase under the estimates that have been submitted, and do the work for which these estimates were submitted, he and the Secretary of the Treasury should take the responsibility of submitting additional estimates for this purpose." Notwithstanding these statements, the Appropriations Committee, upon receipt of the desired supplemental estimate, allowed only one-sixth of the amount estimated for.

What we are now asking is merely that the money estimated for by the administrative officers, with the written approval of Secretary McAdoo, be granted so that the wages of these women will in no case be less than $2.56 a day, with the maximum of $2.88. Adding to these rates of pay the total minimum amount received by these employees, including the $120 bonus, will be $2.94 a day, and the maximum $3.26. The $120 bonus amounts to only 38 cents a day, instead of 45 cents a day as was previously stated on the floor of the House.

Further, it has been stated that all these employees are allowed 30 days' annual leave and Saturday afternoon holidays. Due to the enormous pressure of work it has been very difficult during the last two years for the girls to secure the leave to which they are entitled. The Saturday afternoon holidays have also been abolished during the rush periods.

The plate printers' assistants are less skilled than the operatives and it requires less training to perform their duties. Many of the operatives have been in the bureau for a number of years and are highly skilled in the technical performance of their work. The amount allowed by the Appropriations Committee will give absolutely no increase to the latter employees.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.: For labor, material, supervision, clearing site, and all other necessary expenses incident to the construction of a new administration and Government free bathhouse building, to cost not to exceed $150,000, there is appropriated $100,000, and in addition thereto $50,000 is authorized to be expended therefor from the revenues received from the said reservation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 5, page 116, for the purpose of offering an amendment to correct a typographical mistake; that is, to strike out the words "of the direction" in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to line 5, page 116, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 116, line 5, strike out the words "of the direction."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 13 for the purpose of offering an amendment to correct a typographical mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the word "drawn" and insert the word "driven," so it will read "motor driven" instead of "motor drawn."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 116, line 13, strike out the word "drawn" and insert the word "driven."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands for removal of restrictions, allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes: For necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $23,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. HASTINGS offers the following amendment: At the end of line 21, page 123, strike out the period and insert a colon, and add:
> "Provided, That the Department of Justice is directed to expedite the final determination of all of said suits."

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment to the chairman of the committee, and he states he has no objection to it, and I do not care to further discuss the matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the purpose of the proviso offered by the gentleman is simply to call attention to the fact that these suits have been pending for a considerable time.

Mr. HASTINGS. For 10 years.

Mr. SHERLEY. And to ask that matters be expedited.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I see no reason why we should not expedite these or any other suits, if we properly can.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question about a paragraph that has been passed?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On page 121, beginning on line 11, it reads:

> Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees—

And so forth.

There, in line 14, it says "accounts of marshals, attorneys," and so forth. Does that refer to the attorneys of the Government or does it refer to attorneys generally as officers of the court under the law? Is there anything new about that?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not new. These are attorneys of the courts, the prosecuting attorneys and other officers of the Government, and not merely attorneys generally who are officers of the court in a technical sense but not in any direct sense.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It does not refer to that?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. It is the usual language under which they investigate the conduct of the courts and the accounts of the prosecuting attorneys and their assistants, the marshals and clerks, and so forth.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sand Island Light Station, Ala.: For improvements, $37,000.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, making the amount $45,000 instead of $37,000. This item is contained in the lighthouse bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 136, line 9, strike out "$37,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$45,000."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, the amount, $45,000, is contained in the lighthouse bill which passed the House about 10 days ago. The matter was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and detailed estimates were given us as to the item.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, that was deliberate and intentional. We gave them money for the light and cut out the dwelling. We did not think it a good time to build houses for keepers, when it costs 40 to 50 per cent more than in normal times. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. ESCH. The testimony as presented to our committee, as I understood it, was to the effect that there is no lighthouse keeper's dwelling at the light. It was washed away in a storm some years ago. The lighthouse keepers are occupying the tower and a small wooden structure built against the tower, and they are occupying those quarters for the summer months. The balance of the time the family live ashore. The $8,000 for the lighthouse keeper's dwelling is not very much in excess of what we have been allowing heretofore.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but it would cost about two-thirds more now than the $8,000 would later on.

Mr. ESCH. How much later on?

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope in the course of another year or so. But there was not any special urgency about this. These keepers have been living there and doing pretty well. We thought by giving this additional money for the light, which was an important emergency matter, we could postpone the keeper's dwelling. And that was what actuated the committee.

Mr. ESCH. I did not know whether you eliminated the $8,000 for the light or for the lighthouse keeper's dwelling. Either one must have been omitted.

Mr. SHERLEY. The dwelling was what we had in mind. The statement was made by Mr. Putnam that the keepers had been living in the lighthouse. Their families can not be there now. They have a shack back of the lighthouse where they live in the summer months. Incidentally I might say in passing that we found no place was quite satisfactory to the service. The places that have served people for several years past suddenly became unsuitable.

Mr. ESCH. I know; but the gentleman has not found a case just like this, because the dwelling has been washed away and the keepers have been occupying the tower and this temporary structure.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have been living in the lighthouse. A lighthouse is not the worst place in the world to live in. If the Committee of the Whole wants to vote $8,000 for this purpose we do not care; but we do try to keep up the Lighthouse Service in the belief that their extravagance of language is not always going to be met by extravagance of appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes have it.

Mr. ESCH. I shall ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 10.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tupelo (Miss.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; 3 apprentice fish-culturists, at $600 each; in all, $4,200.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi: Page 153, line 4, strike out the words "Tupelo (Miss.) Station" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Private John Allen Station, Tupelo, Miss."

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, Private John M. Allen was my immediate predecessor in Congress. He represented the first congressional district of Mississippi for 16 years and voluntarily retired. Just before his retirement from Congress, on February 20, 1901, he offered, by unanimous consent, on the floor of the House the following amendment:

"For the establishment of a fish hatchery and fish-cultural station at the town of Tupelo, State of Mississippi, $20,000."

He then asked unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes in support of his amendment, a request which the House cheerfully granted, because he was always heard with delight. He then delivered his famous "Tupelo fish-hatchery" speech in advocacy of that amendment, which secured its adoption and the establishment of the fish hatchery at Tupelo, Miss., which was his home town, much beloved by him, and by him made famous. This remarkable speech appears on pages 2702 and 2703 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, of date October 20, 1901.

That speech is most entertaining reading even yet. Read it and you will enjoy it. On October 30, 1917, at 6 o'clock a. m., his great soul took its flight to the "great beyond." The people of the whole State of Mississippi were in sadness when reading the announcement of his death in the Commercial Appeal of Wednesday morning, October 31, 1917, which, in a dispatch printed in that paper, is as follows:

PRIVATE JOHN ALLEN ENDS LIFE'S JOURNEY—BELOVED MISSISSIPPIAN DIES WITH SMILE ON HIS FACE—READY WIT WON HIM FAME—SPEECHES DELIVERED IN CONGRESS REGARDED AS CLASSICS—FOUGHT BRAVELY IN SIXTIES—LAST YEARS AS CONFEDERATE SOLDIER WERE SPENT AS SCOUT UNDER GEN. FORREST—RETIRED TO PRIVATE LIFE AFTER DEFEAT FOR UNITED STATES SENATE—FUNERAL AT TUPELO TO-DAY.

TUPELO, MISS., October 30.

Another of Mississippi's great men passed quietly to the great beyond when Private John Mills Allen died at his home here this morning at 6 o'clock

The end was peaceful and upon his face was a smile of relief. His death was so quiet that no one knew at what minute it happened.

Last night he sat up until about 11 o'clock talking and chatting with his friends and loved ones. He seemed to feel that the end was near, requesting his son-in-law, S. J. High, not to go to Jackson, as he had planned, saying that he felt that the time of his departure was near.

Private Allen awoke at 5 o'clock this morning and arose to read the paper, but in a few minutes went back to bed, apparently going to the sleep from which he never awoke. The State and the town that he so greatly loved are to-day sad. Everyone feels the loss of this great friend. Many and beautiful flowers and messages of condolence are arriving continuously, attesting the great esteem in which he was held.

Just one year ago he suffered first from the illness which finally claimed him after making a grand and gallant fight. He was a man who loved life and the things that life stands for. He had never gone to bed during the past year because of his illness, although he was advised by his physicians to do so. He loved to drive over his farm and meet with his friends down town, keeping in touch with every interest that meant the betterment of Tupelo and this section.

SPOKE LAST FOR LIBERTY LOAN.

His last public appearance was at the liberty loan rally on the 24th, when he took great interest in the talks that were being made.

John Mills Allen was born in Tishomingo County, Miss., July 8, 1846. The great controversies between Webster and Hayne and Calhoun had aroused the public mind, Texas had been annexed, and Gen. Scott was progressing in his triumphal march upon Mexico City. His father was an old-line Whig and an enthusiast in politics, and this son attended the political meetings with him. At the outbreak of the Civil War his father, true to his Whig policies, remained with the Union, but within five months after the war broke out five of his sons had enlisted in the Confederate Army. John was the youngest, being about 14 years of age. However, he left his home and went off to the Army of Northern Virginia to join his brothers.

He remained with this army until Beauregard assembled around Corinth, Miss., and then Mr. Allen joined forces in his native State. This was in the spring of 1862. For several months he was enlisted in the secret service of Gen. Beauregard.

IN MANY BATTLES.

He participated in a number of battles, including Shiloh, Second Manassas, Antietam, and Franklin, and escaped without injury until the last year of the war, when he was wounded in the leg. One brother was killed, one lost a leg, and two were seriously wounded.

It was during one of his campaigns that he was given the title of "Private John Allen," by which title he will always be remembered. It was in his race against Gen. Tucker. During one of their debates the general told of his hardships while in service for his Southland; how often he had laid awake at night in his tent, planning the battles for to-morrow, while outside the wind blew, the rain and sleet fell, and it was bitter cold.

In his rejoinder Mr. Allen stated that what the general had said was true, but that while he was lying awake under nice warm blankets planning the battles he was standing on the outside barefooted and with few clothes on in the cold, rain, and sleet guarding the general while he slept. He requested all the generals, colonels, and officers to cast their ballots for Gen. Tucker, but that as for him the ballots of the privates would satisfy him.

It was while in Congress that he came so much before the eyes of the Nation by his ever-ready wit and humor and his power in debates. He never spoke to empty benches, and the "applause and laughter" was not written on the record as a matter of form, but because of genuineness. There were few that cared to meet him in debate, and the speeches he delivered in Congress are among the few that will live forever and will be long read and enjoyed.

But it was not because he was so witty, nor because his genial good humor made of every acquaintance a friend, but more than all it was because there was in his composition a substratum of common sense, a strain of wholesome philosophy and honest motive, that gave his words and acts and advice a force that made them effective and of permanent value.

FOUGHT EXTRAVAGANCE.

Among some of his famous speeches are the "Fish hatchery at Tupelo," his protest against extravagance in congressional funerals, his criticism and ridicule of Perry Belmont's Consular and Diplomatic appropriation bill, his debate with S. S. Cox on the proposition to increase the pay of the letter carriers, his tariff speeches on both the Mills and McKinley tariff bills, review of the Chilean War, and his several contributions to the silver debates.

His first debate in Congress was on the Tombigbee River, and it was only by his quick wit that he was allowed to deliver it. It seems that in the haste to bring up the rivers and harbors bill, and in the hurry to get through with it, the chairman overlooked the request of Mr. Allen that he be allowed to speak. And it was closed before he could get the attention of the House. It was requested that he be allowed to speak anyway, but there was some objection; however, Mr. Allen brought the House down and won their consent when he said in his most pathetic tone, "Well, I would at least like to have permission to print some remarks in the RECORD and insert 'laughter and applause' at appropriate places."

During the last years of his service in Congress he made the race for the Senate against McLaurin, but was defeated, and retired to private life.

He was appointed one of the commissioners of the St. Louis World's Fair by President McKinley in 1903. He was a man who loved his country, his State, and his community. He has made the name of "Tupelo" famous all over the United States.

In the same issue of the Commercial-Appeal appeared this editorial, a deserving tribute from that great paper:

PRIVATE JOHN.

A beautiful, white, mellow light has burned into the socket and is no more.

The fine, genial, world-loving, man-loving, Lord-loving soul has winged away.

John Allen is dead.

Death had no terrors for John Allen.

Death was to him no more than a gate which he saw in the distance, through which he knew he would soon pass and beyond which he felt there would be other pleasant scenes.

John Allen early in life hoped not too much of men. He saw their weaknesses and their frailties.

He saw that most of them were grown-up children. He saw that some of their bounding ambitions were childish and that some things which they regarded as of profound importance were but as a fleeting shadow.

He loved men for the goodness that was in them; he loved life for the sweetness that it held; and he loved humanity because he saw that it was struggling toward happier conditions and better things.

John Allen was no cynic.

From his quiver he occasionally threw a sarcastic arrow, but its point was not tinged with bitterness.

He went up and down the world scattering hope and good cheer and optimism.

He was famous the country over.

Those who did not know him well measured him merely a humorist, but John Allen had in him rugged strength and seriousness of purpose.

He was a wise man.

In his wisdom he saw many undertakings doomed to failure.

He saw many things end in disappointment.

These things did not surprise him, and when things did not turn out as he wished he did not permit himself to be cast down. He did not retire to a wailing wall and rail against the world for its folly or rail at mankind because of their selfishness and ingratitude.

Mr. Allen had a successful career in Congress.

His fame chiefly rests upon certain stories, but as a Congressman he did substantial work.

He accomplished results in the old days of party bitterness and sectional hatred which others more serious and sometimes fanatical could not accomplish.

He was a soldier in the Confederate Army, but he spoke no harsh word of the foe.

As a Congressman he did not retort in kind when some mad man waved the bloody shirt.

In the great contest between Patterson and Carmack in Congress it was John Allen's speech that won Carmack the disputed seat.

Before the speech there was little hope for Carmack. When the speech was ended there was a vote and Carmack won.

John Allen was a good lawyer.

Many years ago he did some legal work for this paper and in consultation and court he manifested a high order of legal ability.

And thus the procession of passing Confederate soldiers increases.

One who was a mere boy in the struggle is now gathered to his fathers.

Peace to his ashes. May the Lord rest his genial soul.

I now read to you the resolutions of the bar of Tupelo, published in the Tupelo Journal November 30, 1917—a splendid expression by his brethren of the bar with whom he was so long and intimately associated:

LOCAL BAR EULOGIZES MR. ALLEN.

On Saturday morning of the first week of court the court resolved itself into a committee to consider the resolutions which had been prepared by a committee of the bar touching on the life and character of the late lamented John M. Allen, who for more than 40 years had been an honored member of the bar.

Judge Clayton called Col. W. L. Clayton to the chair, and with deep feeling the colonel paid a high tribute to his departed friend, whom he had known and admired since the early days of the county. He classed Mr. Allen as one of the leading lawyers of the country and said that in all phases of his practice and intercourse with his brethren of the bar he was the soul of honor and an adversary who never struck below the belt.

The committee offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

"Resolved by the bar of Tupelo, That it is with great pleasure we can testify as follows with reference to the life and character of the late Hon. John M. Allen, who was for over 40 years a member of this bar:

"Mr. Allen was one of the ablest trial lawyers of the State at any period of its history; he was not a great student of books, but he had a genius for the law; almost at a glance of the mind he could see the right and reason out what the law ought to be. He had a most logical mind in dealing with both the law and the facts of a case and a very comprehensive view of the questions involved; in addition to this, he had a wide knowledge of human nature. He was absolutely honorable and upright in all his dealings; he had a keen sense to detect fraud and dishonesty; he abominated a liar; he had decision of character and persistent determination when he thought he was right. He always dealt fairly and frankly with courts and juries. All these qualities combined to make him a great lawyer. It was generally conceded that he was one of the ablest district attorneys the State ever had.

"We feel that his ability and services to this State and Nation as a statesman are so well known that no word of commendation from the members of this bar is called for. Besides his service to the State as district attorney, for many years he was a Member of Congress; there he made a nation-wide reputation, not alone because he was the greatest wit and humorist in the country, which was readily conceded by everyone, but for the further reason of his great ability, his uprightness of character, his integrity of mind, his knowledge of the needs of the country, and his dominating power and influence over his fellow Members of Congress. He hated a demagogue with an intense hatred. He was as honest in politics as he was in his private dealings. There was not an office great enough to tempt him to deceive the people in order to attain it. While in Congress, among the Members of both the House and the Senate, as well as of the public generally in Washington, he was one of the most popular and influential Members of the House. Both the great and the humble recognized his abilities and paid him homage. He was on intimate social terms with many of the greatest men of the Nation, who sought his companionship for the benefit of his wit and humor and his wisdom. He had friendly and close social intercourse with every President of the United States for the last 25 years. One of the members of this committee met Mr. Roosevelt in the White House while he was President, and on being informed that his home was in Tupelo, the President at once said:

"'Yes; John Allen's town. He has made Tupelo famous all over the country. When you see him again, give him my regards and tell him to come to see me. He is great!'

"Mr. Allen was intensely and unselfishly patriotic; no man loved his country and its institutions more than he. He was a soldier of the Confederacy when a mere boy of 15, and rendered distinguished service.

"As a citizen, a neighbor, and friend he was unexcelled. He was public spirited and enterprising, taking a leading part in every scheme to build up his town and county in a material, moral, and educational way. He was faithful and true to his friends; he helped many who needed help; his charities were many and varied. But it was as a son, husband, father, and friend that Mr. Allen's virtues shone brightest. At a crucial period when he should have been in the campaign during his race for the United States Senate he spent weeks at the bedside of his sick mother during her last illness.

"W. D. ANDERSON, Chairman.
"W. A. BLAIR.
"C. P. LONG."

On motion, the above resolution was ordered spread on the minutes of the circuit court and given to the press.

This beautiful and touching eulogy was written by Judge James H. Neville, Mr. Allen's long-time and true friend, and one of Mississippi's noblest sons:

HON. JOHN M. ALLEN.

When information was conveyed to me that Hon. John M. Allen had departed this life I was overwhelmed with gloom and sorrow, and I can not realize even now that I will never again see his bright and cheerful face nor listen to his words of wisdom and cheer; but I take some comfort and solace in the thought that he is far better off and that I was blessed for a long number of years with his intimate friendship and close association, a pleasure and a joy which I can never forget as long as life lasts. Mr. Allen was indeed a remarkable character. He was a great man, great in every phase of life which he touched. My acquaintance with him began in 1874 while he was district attorney in one of the northern districts of the State, and I was impressed with the fact that he was a great lawyer, and his career as a lawyer demonstrated that my judgment of him was correct. He was a great lawyer. He was a great trial lawyer, and before he left the bar and entered the arena of politics no man in north or northeast Mississippi could stand before him successfully in any cause into which he threw his great ability and his soul. I have oftentimes thought that, while he achieved great fame as a statesman, it would have been far better for him and far better for his career if he had remained at the bar actively. He was engaged in some of the most important cases, criminal and civil, that were ever tried in north Mississippi, and his success in the criminal law was as great after he left the district attorney's office as it was while he was representing the State. He was a great counsellor; his judgment of the law was accurate, and his magnificent common sense always led him to the right conclusion as to the course to be pursued in all matters; he was the confidential advisor of great business interests when he entered Congress and was enjoying rewards for his practice which no man in the State at that time approached; but he concluded that he could serve his people better in the Halls of Congress, and for years represented the first congressional district of Mississippi in that great body, the House of Representatives of the United States.

I have heard some of the greatest men in the United States, and I say, with all sincerity that, in my opinion, on the hustings he was the greatest debater that Mississippi ever saw. I have seen him on many occasions wrest victory from defeat, and have seen him sweep audiences off their feet when all kinds of appeals by others had failed.

He rendered extraordinary service to Mississippi during the period of reconstruction, but in my judgment the greatest service he ever rendered the State and the Democratic Party was in the fight waged by him against what was known as the "Subtreasury" idea, which some of the Democrats in Mississippi undertook to fasten upon the party in Mississippi. Senators George and Walthall were before the people for reelection, and just as surely as I now write, John M. Allen saved the State of Mississippi to Democracy and secured the reelection of those two Senators. His voice was heard all over the State, his magnificent reasoning, his great information, and his splendid humor brought the people back to their senses. He was the leader in that contest; he dominated the State convention at Jackson and had a platform adopted by the party denouncing the Subtreasury, and on that he went to the people and secured one of the greatest victories, in my judgment, that has ever been won in the State of Mississippi. His career in Congress was brilliant. He was barely in Congress before he became a prominent figure, and was listened to as no man before him had ever been listened to from the South, unless perhaps it was Mr. Lamar. I have often thought that to Mr. Lamar and John M. Allen was due more than any two men from the South the reconciliation between the two sections of this great country. Mr. Allen's humor, always carrying with it good feeling and disclosing some strong point which he could have never made otherwise, was pleasing and never objectionable to anyone.

He was never offensive, always considerate, but at the same time ever strong in maintaining what he thought was the rightfulness of proposition which he undertook to discuss. I have at times been in the gallery of the House of Representatives and have seen him defeat most iniquitous legislation by some characteristic speech in which an anecdote well told by him illustrated the point and showed the utter fallacy and folly of the legislation. I know that in my time there never lived a man in Mississippi that was as widely and favorably known throughout the country as John M. Allen. "Private John," as he was affectionately called, was known from one end of the country to the other, and the affectionate regard in which he was held by his associates in Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, was truly wonderful. He was always welcome in all the departments in Washington. I have gone with him to visit the President and Cabinet officers, and at the mere announcement that he was present and desired an audience the door was opened at once and he was always admitted, and his visits seemed to be most pleasant to those in authority. Even after he had left Congress for years and held no public position, John Allen could go to the President's office or to any of the departments in Washington and obtain an audience. All, from the President down, seemed to have absolute confidence in him, trusted him fully, and generally followed his advice and suggestions. So great was the confidence of the public men in Washington in him that he rarely if ever failed to accomplish the thing he advocated or desired.

In the private walks of life to be permitted to know him as I knew him was, indeed, a blessed benediction. He was the sweetest man in his disposition I ever knew. I do not remember to have ever heard him say a harsh word about anyone, however unjust others may have been to him. He was just and gentle in his dealings and speech at all times. While he was gentle and sweet in disposition, yet he was one of the most courageous men I ever knew. I do not believe that anything had any terror for John M. Allen. I have often said of him that I did not believe that he knew what fear was, for he never stopped to count the consequences; if he thought he was right he pursued his course without hesitancy and without faltering. He was true in his friendship; nothing could ever shake him except the most convincing evidence that a man who once enjoyed his friendship was unworthy of it afterwards. He was faithful to every trust reposed in him, and in the private affairs of life he was the safest counselor in whom I ever confided. I never followed his advice that I made a mistake and never departed from it that I did not find that I had committed an error. He loved his friends and was willing to die for them if it were necessary. Mississippi was his idol, and it and around it clustered all his aspirations and ambitions. He trusted her people and believed in them, and he was ready at all times to make any sacrifice for the glory and honor of his native State. He was devoted to his family and their comfort and their happiness was his greatest consideration.

A great man and an eminent son of Mississippi has fallen, but his life and his example will live long after we of this day have been forgotten, and his career will inspire many, many young men to deeds of honor or to lives of usefulness. He lived and accomplished a great purpose in life. Let us whom he has left behind cherish his memory and emulate his virtues and rejoice in the fact that we shall meet again.

JAS. H. NEVILLE.

This is an obituary written by Rev. Luther R. Burress, now of Jonesboro, Ark., formerly of Mississippi, one of the most lovable and devoted Christian men and preachers I ever knew. He is a Baptist preacher and for many years was my beloved pastor. It appeared in the Commercial Appeal, Sunday, December 23, 1917.

"PRIVATE" JOHN M. ALLEN.

"Rejoicing that Nature made one such man, We're hoping she'll duplicate when she can."

Having known "Private" John from his early youth, I desire to add a word to his memory. We were schoolmates in the Asbury School, 2 miles north of Carolville, the home of the Allen family. This country village was succeeded by the splendid town of Baldwyn, Miss., where "John" entered public life as an attorney. He was noted for his genial, friendly, witty turn of mind from boyhood.

Early in 1861 a military company was formed in Baldwyn called the Jake Thompson Guards. Hon. W. H. H. Tison was made captain and R. H. Allen a lieutenant, a brother of John. Dee Allen, another brother, enlisted in this company and was the first of the company to fall in battle. He fell in the forefront on the field of Williamsburg, Va.

The company was ordered soon after organization to Virginia and was regimented with the Nineteenth Mississippi Regiment of Infantry, Col. C. H. Mott, commander. John was too young to enlist, but visited the company and was the guest and enjoyed the friendship of the regiment.

He remained with us through several battles. After the Battle of Antietam Creek he returned to Mississippi and enlisted with Capt. J. B. Gambrell, who had been commissioned by President Davis as commander of a special scouting company. In this company John enjoyed the confidence of his captain, the friendship of his comrades, and by his peculiar witticisms kept monotony and lonesomeness from the camps.

He was once wounded, and after the war, when jeered because of defeat, replied, "Well, I killed as many of you as you did of me."

As a lawyer he soon won renown. He was elected district attorney. In this office he exhibited ability for promotion, to which his fellow citizens quickly responded by electing him to Congress. In this office he was retained for 16 years. This was the meed bestowed to his ability and friendliness by his fellow citizens.

He combined the logic of wit and argument in Congress and on the stump. Those who were his foes in the field became his friends in the forum. By his wit he converted the "bloody shirt" into a garment of peace. He laughed animosity out of the old-time haters of the South.

It was my pleasure to visit him in his home in Tupelo, the town made famous by his speech, a few weeks before his death. I found him weak in body but clear in mind, cheerful and as humorous as ever. "Funshine" had not given way to gloom. Mrs. Allen, to add to the brightness of the morning, had renewed the vase with beautiful flowers. John's admiration for flowers and his love for the hand that placed them were in evidence as by look and word he expressed appreciation. He told to me a story "invented" by his friend Turner Clark. This friend was a Confederate soldier and was placed as guard over a wagon load of loose powder. His orders from Gen. Stephen D. Lee were emphatic to keep the powder at any risk. While guarding the powder a thoughtless soldier passing threw a lighted cigarette on the powder, which at once ignited. Quicker than thought Turner jumped into the wagon and declares that 2 or 3 bushels of the powder burnt up before he could stomp out the fire. By this Private John showed the absurdity of Germany whipping the world.

In this visit we reviewed the past, calling to memory many friends of bygone days, a few remaining with friendship for all, then turning our attention to the future, mindful that only a few more days would be allotted to us, the question arose, "What is your hope?"

He testified that through the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ he had hope of a "home over there," where all is well.

In this hope I bade good-by to schoolmate, comrade, Congressman, and friend. This thought is the possession of the soul, and may it live forever.

"It is not sad to turn the face toward home, Even though it shows the journey nearly done."

L. R. BURRESS.

JONESBORO, ARK.

Mr. Chairman. I consider it a great honor as well as privilege to make these beautiful testimonials on the life and character of my distinguished predecessor matter of record and preserve them in permanent and lasting form in the proceedings of this, the House of Representatives, in which Mr. Allen served so long with such conspicuous ability. He served with great credit and honor not only to the first congressional district of Mississippi but to the whole State at large, and I might say not only with credit and honor to his State but with credit and honor to the United States of America.

Coming to Congress without previous experience in legislative bodies, he at once attracted attention, and from the time of his entrance into this body as a Member of it his reputation continued to grow, until throughout this great country, from one end of it to the other, the name of "Private" John Allen became almost a household word.

He enjoyed the confidence and esteem of every Member on the floor of this House with whom he served, on both sides of the center aisle, Democrats and Republicans. I had suggested to some of the membership who served with him that I intended to offer this amendment at this point, among the number ex-Speaker JOSEPH G. CANNON, and he told me that he heartily favored the amendment and that if present at the time he would be glad to submit some remarks. I also spoke to our distinguished Speaker, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, who served with him, and he said it was a very deserving and proper thing to do, and he would be glad himself to say something if he should be on the floor of the House at the time.

It is so late this afternoon, however, I regret that neither of these distinguished gentlemen are in the Chamber just at the present. If they were, I know they would join with me in the advocacy of this amendment which is intended to do honor to Mr. Allen. Mr. Allen was my friend from my boyhood days to the time of his death, and I shall ever cherish his memory. I attended his funeral and burial with sad heart in his beloved town of Tupelo and many there were present from all over Mississippi and other States to do him honor and evidence their affection and admiration for him. Telegrams of sympathy and beautiful floral offerings came from devoted friends and loving relatives and genial associates from all over the Southland and from distant points in the United States. Tupelo was in mourning, and her citizenship were present and all solemnly and sadly gathered around his last resting place, and with tears in many eyes, and all with sad hearts, saw him laid to rest in a grave covered with beautiful flowers, and then turned away realizing as they returned to their homes that a great man was gone, their neighbor, citizen, and friend was no more in life, but peacefully asleep in death to await the final great day when all who love God and trust His Son, our Savior, shall be gathered to the home eternal in the beautiful city above.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment to strike out the words "Tupelo (Miss.) Station" and insert in lieu thereof "Private John Allen Station, Tupelo, Miss.," will be unanimously adopted. If it is adopted it will forever hereafter honor my distinguished predecessor by naming the fish hatchery "The John Allen Station," and preserve also the name of his beautiful little city, Tupelo," which he so much loved and did so much for, because the amendment reads "Private John Allen Station, Tupelo, Miss."

The amendment was unanimously adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I served in the House for many years with John Allen, one of the kindliest souls that ever lived, a man of sound judgment, coupled with an exceedingly keen sense of kindly humor. I remember very well indeed his Tupelo speech, in which he referred in stirring words to the millions of unborn fish sighing for the opportunity to be hatched in the fish hatchery he desired to have established. It was in its way as interesting an appeal as I have ever heard in this House. It was characteristic of the man, and its reception and the adoption of the amendment providing for an appropriation evidenced the high regard the Members of the House had for him. We regret exceedingly to hear of the passing of this kindly soul, this good citizen, this sterling character. I hope the amendment just offered to honor him as has been suggested will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, the committee rose; and Mr. GARNER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 12441) and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISPENSING WITH UNANIMOUS-CONSENT DAY ON MONDAY.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that unanimous-consent day on Monday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that unanimous-consent day on Monday be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the importance of hastening the completion of this bill, and so I will not object; but I simply wish to suggest that I think the Unanimous-Consent Calendar ought to have an opportunity to be cleared before there is any adjournment or recess of the House. So I hope as soon as these appropriation bills are out of the way a day may be given to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it is possible that there may be a day between the completion of the sundry civil appropriation bill and the taking up of the fortification bill; or if not, then immediately following the fortification bill. The gentleman appreciates that so near the end of the fiscal year it is important that these appropriation bills go through.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not object to the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT submitted the conference report and statement of the House conferees on the bill H. R. 10854 for printing under the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I shall ask recognition to call up this conference report immediately following the conclusion of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Such deposit shall bear interest at the same rate as United States bonds bear for the same period, and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to the person or persons who, under the laws of the State of his residence, would be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy.'

"SEC. 18. That section 313 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 313. (1) That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a resonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed to the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made.

"'If a beneficiary or conditional beneficiary shall have recovered, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other persons, such money or other property so recovered shall be credited upon any compensation payable, or which may become payable, to such beneficiary, or conditional beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person, other than the United States or the enemy, to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid to such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(3) The bureau shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the purposes of this section. For the purposes of computation only under this section the total amount of compensation due any beneficiary shall be deemed to be equivalent to a lump sum equal to the present value of all future payments of compensation computed as of the date of the award of compensation at 4 per cent, true discount, compounded annually. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the American Experience Table of Mortality.

"'A conditional beneficiary is any person who may become entitled to compensation under this article on or after the death of the injured person.

"'Nothing in this section shall be construed to impose any administrative duties upon the War or Navy Departments.'

"'SEC. 401. That such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after the enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation, except that those persons who are in the active war service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of such contract of insurance may apply at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled, or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his widow from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or if there is no widow surviving him, then to his child or children, or if there is no child surviving him, then to his mother, or if there is no mother surviving him, then to his father, if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total and permanent disability, shall be so paid. The amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between children as may be provided by regulations.'

"SEC. 20. That section 19 of this act amending section 401 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the payment of monthly installments, authorized to be made under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted, for the months up to and including June, 1918: Provided further, That all awards of automatic insurance under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted shall be revised as of the 1st day of July, 1918, in accordance with the provisions of said section 401 as amended by section 19 of this act.

"'SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them. The insurance shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value, if any, of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½ per cent interest in full of all obligations under the contract of insurance.'"

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The Senate concurs in amendment to section 1 by accepting the House provision as to paragraph 4 of section 22 with the amendment striking out the following words: "For the purpose of articles 2 and 4 only, the term 'parent' shall include also a person who has stood in loco parentis to the enlisted person for a period of not less than five years preceding October 6, 1917, or the person's enlistment or entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces."

The Senate concurs in section 2, which adds four new sections to the bill, which are sections 27, 28, 29, and 30.

The Senate concurs in section 3 of the act amending section 200 with an amendment striking out the words, "This section shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917."

The Senate concurs in section 6 of the act amending section 204 with the following amendments:

Adding to class A, in the case of a man, the following: "to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children."

(These words restore the language of the original act, but were stricken out in the bill as it passed the House.)

Adding to class B, in case of a man or woman, the words, "to a grandchild, a parent, brother, or sister."

(This restores the language of the original act, but the words were stricken out of the act as it passed the House.)

The Senate concurs in section 10, amending section 300 of said act with an amendment inserting the words "in line of duty" and the words "active service" in said section, which restores the language in the original act. And the Senate further concurs in the proviso of the House, which was as follows: "Provided, That for the purposes of this section said officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service; Provided, That this section as amended shall be deemed to become effective as of October 6, 1917."

The Senate concurs in section 11 amending section 301 of said act, which amendment of the House to the original act strikes out the word "widowed" wherever it occurs before the word "mother," and also adds the father to those who may receive compensation under this section; and the House receded from its amendment, striking out the words, "but no compensation shall be possible if a dependency arises more than five years after the death of the person."

The Senate concurs in section 12, amending section 302 of said act, with the following amendments:

Inserting after the word "bedridden," the words "from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States."

Striking out the word "amount" where it occurs in paragraph (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "rate."

The Senate concurs in amendment in section 13, amending subdivision 4 of section 302 of said act with an amendment inserting the word "family" before the word "conditions," so that it will read: "(4) The amount of each monthly payment shall be determined according to the family conditions existing on the first day of the month."

The Senate concurs in section 14, which adds two new subdivisions to section 302 of said act, and concurs therein.

The Senate concurs in section 15, with an amendment striking out that part of section 14 which makes it retroactive as to section 302 of said act.

The Senate concurs in section 16, which repeals section 311 of said act.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to section 17 and concurs in the following amendment, which occurs in the Senate bill, making section 312 read as follows:

"SEC. 312. That compensation under this article shall not be paid while the person is in receipt of service or retirement pay. The laws providing for gratuities or payments in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to any person in the active military or naval service on the 6th day of October, 1917, or who thereafter entered the active military or naval service, or to their widows, children, or their dependents, except in so far as rights under any such law have heretofore accrued.

"Compensation because of disability or death of members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) shall be in lieu of any compensation for such disability or death under the act entitled, 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 7, 1916."

The Senate concurs in section 18, which amends section 313 of said act with an amendment, making section 313 read as follows:

"SEC. 313. (1) That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed to the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made.

"If a beneficiary or conditional beneficiary shall have recovered, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other person, such money or other property so recovered shall be credited upon any compensation payable or which may become payable to such beneficiary or conditional beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid to such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"(3) The bureau shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the purpose of this section. For the purposes of computation only under this section, the total amount of compensation due any beneficiary shall be deemed to be equivalent to a lump sum equal to the present value of all future payments of compensation computed as of the date of the award of compensation at 4 per cent true discount compounded annually. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the American Experience Table of Mortality.

"A conditional beneficiary is any person who may become entitled to compensation under this article on or after the death of the injured person.

"Nothing in this section to be construed to impose any administrative duties upon the War or Navy Departments."

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to section 19, which amends section 401 of said act.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to section 20, and concurs with the House.

The Senate recedes from its amendment to section 21, which amends section 402 of said act.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 4631) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, be, and it is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 107. The State of Tennessee is divided into three districts, to be known as the eastern, middle, and western districts of Tennessee. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bledsoe, Bradley, Hamilton, James, McMinn, Meigs, Polk, Rhea and Sequatchie, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Anderson, Blount, Campbell, Claiborne, Grainger, Jefferson, Knox, Loudon, Monroe, Morgan, Roane, Sevier, Scott, and Union, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Carter, Cocke, Greene, Hamblen, Hancock, Hawkins, Johnson, Sullivan, Unicoi, and Washington, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bedford, Cannon, Cheatham, Davidson, Dickson, Giles, Hickman, Humphreys, Houston, Lawrence, Lewis, Marshall, Maury, Montgomery, Robertson, Rutherford, Stewart, Sumner, Trousdale, Wayne, Williamson, and Wilson, which shall constitute the Nashville division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Franklin, Warren, Grundy, Marion, Coffee, Moore, and Lincoln, which shall constitute the Winchester division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clay, Cumberland, Dekalb, Fentress, Jackson, Macon, Overton, Pickett, Putnam, Smith, Van Buren, and White, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the Nashville division of said district shall be held at Nashville on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; for the Winchester division, at Winchester, on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in November; and for the northeastern division at Cookeville on the third Monday in April and the first Monday in November: Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding the courts at Winchester and Cookeville shall be provided by the local authorities without expense to the United States. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. I will give an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to state that the only amendment proposed by the bill to the existing statute is the provision that the court be held at Winchester for certain counties therein named in the middle division. The amendment contains an express provision that all additional expense shall be borne by the State authorities.

The change proposed by the bill is for the convenience of the citizens of six counties, I believe, all adjacent to the town of Winchester. It is really for the benefit of the Government, as the witnesses will then not have to travel so far. At present they go to Nashville, some hundred miles distant, while under this proposed amendment the court will be held at Winchester, and witnesses will have a very short distance to travel.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I understand there are three judicial districts now in Tennessee?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And this will not increase the number of districts?

Mr. SHIELDS. It will not increase the number of districts.

Mr. SMOOT. And it will not require an additional judge?

Mr. SHIELDS. It will not. It only provides that the present judge shall hold court in another place in the middle district, and without any increased expense whatever to the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NONCOMBATANT OFFICERS.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on the 18th of April the Senate passed a resolution directing the Secretary of War to furnish to the Senate as soon as practicable a list of the men to whom commissions in the Army have been issued, and who are not now and who have not heretofore been placed in command or had charge of any troops in the service of the United States, either here or abroad, indicating the branch of the service in which such men have been commissioned.

Two months have elapsed to-day since this resolution was passed by the Senate, and yet there has been no response. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the following resolution to the end that some response may be received.

The resolution (S. Res. 265) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate at the earliest possible day the information called for in Senate resolution 220, agreed to on April 18, 1918, and transmitted to him on the following day, and which resolution is in the following words:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate as soon as practicable a list of the men to whom commissions in the Army have been issued, and who are not now and who have not heretofore been placed in command or had charge of any troops in the service of the United States, either here or abroad, indicating the branch of the service in which such men have been commissioned.

MINING FOR MINERALS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish, Mr. President, nor do I intend to interfere with the predetermined program of the Senate; but in this connection it will be remembered that within the past 10 days I have made three separate attempts to secure consideration for the bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations. I see the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] in his seat. I do not wish to interfere with any plans he may have, but I gave notice about 10 days ago that so soon as the proposed amendment to the Senate rules was disposed of I would urge—in fact, I would move—the consideration of Senate bill 385. I shall try to make the motion at a later time in the day, and again, with all emphasis, I call the attention of Senators to the fact that no bill now pending is more urgent and no legislation could be of more benefit to our country at this particular time than is this. I see some Senators are absent who wish to oppose the bill and some Senators are absent who are in favor it. However, at the hour of 2 o'clock, if I should be so fortunate as to secure the recognition of the Chair, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill so that it will become the unfinished business.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

STATUE OF JAMES BUCHANAN.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I think there was an understanding that House joint resolution No. 70, authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a statue of James Buchanan, was to be taken up to-day. It was postponed on account of the desire of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to extend his remarks. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 70) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we are all desirous of doing everything in our power to close up the necessary business connected with appropriation bills and secure a moderate recess before we are compelled to return here in the middle of summer to deal with the revenue bill. Senators I know are very tired, I am sure I am, and I can also say that I do not believe there is any Senator so reluctant to hear me as I am reluctant to speak. But I feel so strongly about the proposition to erect a statue to James Buchanan in Washington that I can not allow it to pass without at least entering my protest against the action and giving my reasons for my opposition.

I had cherished the hope that the impropriety of erecting this statue might prevent action upon it. I think there is an impropriety in erecting a statue which arouses keen opposition in many minds, especially among the people who are familiar with the history of our country, and I think there is a peculiar impropriety in erecting it at this moment, when we are engaged in a great war, in which the first demand on all men in all parts of the United States is unswerving loyalty to the country and its cause, and the strict fulfillment of the duty which each one is called upon by his position or by law to fulfill.

I think it is an unfortunate time also, when the committee on new issues of capital are refusing to approve money even for such purposes as the building of hospitals, when they are refusing to permit the issue of new capital stock necessary to the conduct of businesses which in ordinary times are in every way laudable and useful, to take this large sum away from the possibility of saving or of investment in Government bonds for the purpose of erecting a statue.

It is, I know, under the will set aside for that special purpose, but it would be a better memorial, better for Mr. Buchanan's memory, if that money could be devoted to the purchase of liberty bonds or to a fund, which could be called by his name, if necessary, for the promotion of the purposes of the war. It is, however, determined apparently to put this statue through, to spend the money and use the labor at all hazards, in order that it may ornament or disfigure a park in the city of Washington, whence it will look out, like the statue of Gen. Scott at the Soldiers' Home, over the city and the surrounding country.

Mr. President, I do not propose to go into any details of Mr. Buchanan's long life, occupied as it was practically entirely by public service in important offices. He was of Scotch Presbyterian ancestry on both sides. He was born in 1791 at Cove Gap, in Pennsylvania, was educated at school in Mercersburg and in Dickinson College. He studied law at Lancaster. He was a volunteer in the War of 1812. He was elected a member of the legislature in 1814 and was reelected in 1815; was elected to Congress in 1820; served there until he was appointed by President Jackson minister to Russia in 1831; returned in 1833 and was elected to the Senate in 1834, where he served until he was made Secretary of State in 1845 in Mr. Polk's Cabinet. After the defeat of the Democrats at the ensuing election he was out of office for but a short interval, and then was sent as minister to England in 1854 under Franklin Pierce.

In all these varied offices his services were well rendered. He was industrious; he was a good lawyer; he was well informed, and though he filled a very respectable place both in the Senate and House, he never rose to high distinction in either body. I have no doubt he was equally serviceable as minister to Russia.

The only thing that distinguishes his service as minister to Great Britain was that he was one of the signers of the Ostend manifesto. That is the only act of that period which illustrates his name. The Ostend manifesto made a great deal of sensation at the time. It was widely condemned. It has been universally condemned since. It was a proposition to take Cuba. If we were unable to buy we were to go to war in order to seize it. That is not a doctrine, I may say—for it was a proposition of naked conquest of territory—that is not a proposition which has been acceptable in the later years of our history. When we went to war with Spain under her provocation Congress especially provided that we should not annex Cuba but should leave it to the people of the island. Nothing could be in more flagrant contradiction to the doctrine of the present administration in regard to Mexico, and still more so with the attitude which we take in this great war, than the doctrine which Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Soulé sent forth from Ostend. One of the purposes of this war, which is generally accepted, is that we are fighting to secure independence for all nations, and I think I have heard something of the phrase "self-determination" to be allowed to all smaller States and peoples. Nothing could more flagrantly contradict it than the Ostend manifesto, the only memorial we have of Mr. Buchanan's service in England from 1854 to 1856. I think if we are to have the monument I might be permitted to suggest that among his titles to honor it perhaps would not be wise to put on the pedestal, "He signed the Ostend manifesto."

When he returned from England in 1856 he was nominated and elected to the Presidency. I am not going to review the early years of the history of his Presidency; I have no desire to revive those old controversies, but his most conspicuous act perhaps was his advocacy of the Lecompton constitution of Kansas, which I select to call attention to, as it is illustrative of many things.

One of his first experiences was a personal quarrel with Buchanan.

That refers to Douglas after he came back to the Thirty-fifth Congress, in 1857.

When he reached Washington, three days before the session, he went to the President to protest against his adopting the Lecompton constitution and sending it to Congress for acceptance. Buchanan insisted that he must recommend it in his annual message. Douglas replied that he would denounce it as soon as it was read. The President, excited, told him "to remember that no Democrat ever yet differed from an administration of his own choice without being crushed. Beware of the fate of Tallmadge and Rives."

"Mr. President," retorted Douglas, "I wish you to remember that Gen. Jackson is dead."

This is an illustrative example of what Stephen A. Douglas thought of Buchanan and of the way he talked to him.

The authority is undoubted, because Mr. Douglas stated it in his speech at Milwaukee on the 13th of October, 1860.

In the election of Mr. Buchanan as President—

I am reading from Nicolay and Hay's Life of Lincoln—the South had secured a most important ally for the work of pro-slavery reaction. Trained in the belief that the South had hitherto been wronged, he was ready on every occasion to appear as her champion for redress, and the southern politicians were now eager to use his leadership to make their views of public policy and constitutional duty acceptable to the North. Respectable in capacity but feeble in will, he easily submitted to control and guidance from a few southern leaders of superior intellectual force. In his inaugural he sought to prepare public opinion for obedience to the Dred Scott decision, and since its publication he had undertaken to interpret its scope and effect. Replying to a memorial from certain citizens of New England, he declared in a public letter "slavery existed at that period and still exists in Kansas under the Constitution of the United States. This point has at last been finally decided by the highest tribunal known to our laws. How it could ever have been seriously doubted is a mystery." In the same letter he affirmed the legality of the Lecompton convention, though he yet clearly expressed his expectation that the constitution to be framed by it would be submitted to the popular vote for "approbation or rejection."

But the supreme test time came after the election of Mr. Lincoln, in November, 1860. For two months Mr. Buchanan, although not a traitor, did, through sheer weakness and helplessness, the things that a traitor would have done. He was then rescued from that position by his own Cabinet. I want to put into the RECORD a few little statements in regard to it. I read first from the Political History of Secession, by Daniel Wait Howe, president of the Indiana Historical Society. I read this chiefly because of what it quotes, not having had time to look at the other books:

With the close of the Thirty-sixth Congress came also the close of Buchanan's administration. The last part of it, like that of a tedious discourse, was the end of it. Estimates of Mr. Buchanan himself varied in his lifetime and will probably continue to vary. The bitterest criticism of him has come from his former political friends in the South, to whose cause he had devoted his life. A Confederate historian—

thus speaks of him:

"The policy of Mr. Buchanan was unfortunately weak and hesitating—an attempt at ambidexterity, in which he equally failed to conciliate the secessionists and pacify their designs or to make any resolute effort to save the Union. He had, in his message to Congress, denounced secession as revolutionary; and although he was clear on the constitutional proposition that there was no right of coercion on the part of the Federal Government, yet he did but little and that irresolutely, to put that Government in a state of defense in the event of violence on the part of the seceded States. This timid old man—a cautious, secretive politician, who never felt the warmth of an emotion, and had been bred in the harsh school of political selfishness—attempted to stand between two parties, and the result was embarrassment, double-dealing, weak and despicable querulousness, and, finally, the condemnation and contempt of each of the parties between whom he attempted to distribute his favors."

That is the verdict of the historian of The Lost Cause. I now read the opinion of Gen. Crawford, who was at Fort Sumter during the siege and was conversant with the operations of its attack and defense. In his History of Sumter he—shows very fully the earnest and persistent efforts of Black, Stanton, and Holt to persuade the President to adopt measures for the protection and preservation of the United States forts and military supplies * * *. In conclusion—

I am quoting here an Army officer, not a partisan—

he expresses, as accurately and fairly as it can be put in a single sentence, his own opinion and probably that of posterity: "When history shall come to pen the record of the close of his career, it will judge him not from what he did but from what, from his great opportunities and grave responsibilities, he utterly failed to do."

That sentence sums up the case as well as anything I have stumbled on in my brief inquiry, and indicates why I strongly object to erecting here a statue to a man for what he failed to do.

I now turn to Mr. Blaine's Twenty Years of Congress. Mr. Blaine was a young man at the time, but he became one of the most distinguished leaders of the Republican Party; and yet his judgment on Buchanan is much less severe than that of the historian of the Lost Cause, who represented the other side. I think it is a good condensation of the character of the man to whom we are invited now to erect a statue. In summing up, Mr. Blaine says:

It was Mr. Buchanan's misfortune to be called to act in an emergency which demanded will, fortitude, and moral courage. In these qualities he was deficient. He did not possess the executive faculty. His life had been principally devoted to the practice of law in the most peaceful of communities and to service in legislative bodies, where he was borne along by the force of association. He had not been trained to prompt decision, had not been accustomed to exercise command. He was cautious and conservative to the point of timidity. He possessed ability of a high order, and, though he thought slowly, he could master the most difficult subjects with comprehensive power. His service of 10 years in the House and an equal period in the Senate was marked by conscientious devotion to duty. He did not rank with the ablest Members of either body, but always bore a prominent part in important discussions and maintained himself with credit.

It was said of Mr. Buchanan that he instinctively dreaded to assume responsibility of any kind. His keenest critic remarked that in the tentative period of political issues assumed by his party Mr. Buchanan could always be found two paces to the rear, but in the hour of triumph he marched proudly in the front rank. He was not gifted with independence or self-assertion. His bearing toward southern statesmen was derogatory to him as a man of spirit. His tone toward administrations of his own party was so deferential as almost to imply a lack of self-respect. He was not a leader among men. He was always led. He was led by Mason and Soule into the imprudence of signing the Ostend manifesto; he was led by the southern members of his Cabinet into the inexplicable folly and blunder of indorsing the Lecompton iniquity; he was led by disunion Senators into the deplorable mistake contained in his last annual message. Fortunately for him, he was led a month later by Black and Holt and Stanton to a radical change of his compromising position.

If Mr. Buchanan had possessed the unconquerable will of Jackson or the stubborn courage of Taylor he could have changed the history of the revolt against the Union. A great opportunity came to him, but he was not equal to it. Always an admirable adviser where prudence and caution were the virtues required, he was fatally wanting in a situation which demanded prompt action and strong nerve. As Representative in Congress, as Senator, as minister abroad, as Secretary of State, his career was honorable and successful. His life was singularly free from personal fault or shortcoming. He was honest and pure minded. His fame would have been more enviable if he had never been elevated to the Presidency.

Immediately after the election and before the assembling of Congress differences broke out at once in the Cabinet.

Gen. Cass—

Who had been a Democratic candidate for the Presidency—was the first of the Cabinet to feel the pressure of loyalty to the North. The venerable Secretary of State, whose whole life had been one of patriotic devotion to his country, suddenly realized that he was in a false position. When it became known that the President would not insist upon the collection of the national revenue in South Carolina or upon the strengthening of the United States forts in the harbor of Charleston, Gen. Cass concluded that justice to his own reputation required him to separate from the administration. He resigned on the 12th of December—nine days after Mr. Buchanan had sent his fatal message to Congress.

Judge Black, who had from the beginning of the administration been Mr. Buchanan's chief adviser, now became so by rank as the successor of Gen. Cass in the State Department. He was a man of remarkable character. He was endowed by nature with a strong understanding and a strong will. In the profession of the law he had attained great eminence.

The debt of the country to Judge Black in those months is very great indeed. If it had not been for him it is difficult to conceive how much worse the situation might have been. He entered upon his duties on the 17th of December, and he took a strong stand from that day on for the enforcement of the laws of the United States. It was not a question of coercing a State—in fact, he spoke of the unfortunate confusion which had arisen from Mr. Buchanan's message—but he insisted that their business was solely to enforce the national laws and protect the national property. With the retirement of the secessionist members from the Cabinet he and Judge Holt and Mr. Stanton came practically into control.

There is an additional passage which I wish to quote, as follows:

Judge Black's change, however important to his own fame, would prove comparatively fruitless unless he could influence Mr. Buchanan to break with the men who had been artfully using the power of his administration to destroy the Union. The opportunity and the test came promptly. The new "sovereign, free, and independent" government of South Carolina sent commissioners to Washington to negotiate for the surrender of the national forts and the transfer of the national property within her limits. Mr. Buchanan prepared an answer to their request which was compromising to the honor of the Executive and perilous to the integrity of the Union. Judge Black took a decided and irrevocable stand against the President's position. He advised Mr. Buchanan that upon the basis of that fatal concession to the disunion leaders he could not remain in his Cabinet. It was a sharp issue but was soon adjusted. Mr. Buchanan gave way and permitted Judge Black and his associates, Holt and Stanton, to frame a reply for the administration.

The clause in which Mr. Blaine says, "Mr. Buchanan prepared an answer to their request which was compromising to the honor of the Executive and perilous to the integrity of the Union" seemed to demand some defense from Mr. J. Buchanan Henry, who published the messages of President Buchanan. That defense is on page 288 of the appendix and was written by Judge Holt, who was also a member of the Cabinet. I should be sorry to have such a defense written about me.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should make an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. KNOX. Is the Senator aware of the fact that Judge Black subsequently wrote a letter referring to the incident of which the Senator has just read from Mr. Blaine's book, saying that it was a wholly preposterous falsehood that he had ever threatened to resign from the President's Cabinet?

Mr. LODGE. He denied saying that, but he never denied the letter.

Mr. KNOX. He denied the only material part of the letter, and that is that he threatened to resign because he did not agree with Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. LODGE. He certainly caused Mr. Buchanan's attitude to be changed. But there is Judge Holt's defense, in the other letters to which I have referred, and they can be read; but at every point we come to it is necessary to defend, to excuse, to explain.

In this connection, speaking of the view from the South, Mr. Blaine says:

The secession leaders in Congress turned upon the President with angry reproaches. In their rage they lost all sense of the respect due to the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, and assaulted Mr. Buchanan with coarseness as well as violence. Senator Benjamin spoke of him as "a senile Executive under the sinister influence of insane counsels."

That was after Black and Holt and Stanton had secured control of the Cabinet.

Now, I come to the message. The analysis of the message in Nicolay and Hay is a long one. I do not think it is necessary to read it. It contains extracts from Floyd's diary, which are quoted in "The Life and Times of Robert E. Lee," but I am not perfectly sure that they are genuine. Describing the manner in which he made the message, the authors say:

Jefferson Davis, the future chief of the rebellion, came on the one hand at the urgent call of his fellow conspirators—

Floyd speaks of calling them in, but that he consulted Mr. Davis about the message has never, I think, been questioned—

Edwin M. Stanton, afterwards Buchanan's Attorney General and Lincoln's Secretary of War, was on the other hand called in by Mr. Buchanan himself to help him through the intricate maze of his perplexed opinions and inclinations. How many others may have come voluntarily or by summons it is impossible to guess. Many brains and hands, however, must have joined in the work since the document is such a heterogeneous medley of conflicting theories, irreconcilable doctrines, impracticable and irrelevant suggestions. For at length the hesitating and bewildered President, unable to decide and impotent to construct, seems to have made his message a patchwork from the contributions of his advisers, regular and irregular, with the inevitable effect, not to combine and strengthen but to weaken and confuse the warring thoughts and alien systems.

Aside from the mere recapitulation of department reports, the message of President Buchanan delivered to Congress on the 4th of December occupied itself mainly with two subjects—slavery and disunion. On the question of slavery it repeated the assertions and arguments of the Buchanan faction of the Democratic Party during the late presidential campaign, charging the present peril entirely upon the North. As a remedy it recommended an amendment to the Federal Constitution expressly recognizing slavery in States which had adopted or might adopt it, and also expressly giving it existence and protection in the Federal Territories. The proposal was simply childish. Precisely this issue had been decided at the presidential election; to do this would be to reverse the final verdict of the ballot box.

* * * * * * *

On the question of disunion or secession the message raised a vague and unwarrantable distinction between the infractions of law and allegiance by individuals and the infractions of law and allegiance by the Commonwealth or body politic denominated a State. Under the first head it held that the Union was designed to be perpetual; that the Federal Government is invested with sovereign powers on special subjects which can only be opposed or abrogated by revolution; that secession is unconstitutional and is therefore neither more nor less than revolution; that the Executive has no right to recognize the secession of a State; that the Constitution has established a perfect Government in all its forms, legislative, executive, and judicial, and this Government, to the extent of its powers, acts directly upon the individual citizen of every State and executes its own decrees by the agency of its own officers; and, finally, that the Executive can not be absolved from his duty to execute the laws.

* * * * * * *

It will be seen from the above summary that the whole of the President's rambling discussion of the first head of the disunion question resulted logically in three ultimate conclusions: (1) That South Carolina was in revolt; (2) that the Constitution, the laws, and moral obligation, all united, gave the Government the right to suppress this revolt by executing the laws upon and against the citizens of that State; (3) that certain defects in the laws paralyzed their practical enforcement.

* * * * * * *

The President proceeds, therefore, to discuss the second head of the disunion question by an attempt to formulate and define the powers and duties of Congress with reference to the threatened rebellion. He would not only roll the burden from his own shoulders upon the National Legislature but he would by volunteer advice instruct that body how it must be borne and disposed of. Addressing Congress, he says, in substance: "You may be called upon to decide the momentous question whether you possess the power by force of arms to compel a State to remain in the Union.

And he decided against coercion; he decided that they had no power. No State had yet seceded, and the issue and arguments were false and irrelevant. The thing is well summed up in this paragraph by Mr. Seward:

The central dogma of the message, that while a State has no right to secede, the Union has no right to coerce, has been universally condemned as a paradox. The popular estimate of Mr. Buchanan's proposition and arguments was forcibly presented at the time by a jesting criticism attributed to Mr. Seward. "I think," said the New York Senator, "the President has conclusively proved two things: (1) That no State has the right to secede unless it wishes to, and (2) that it is the President's duty to enforce the laws unless somebody opposes him."

That was the message, with the country trembling on the verge of civil war, which he sent out to the country.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to give my opinion, but I am going to read the opinion of one of our really great historians, a man who was certainly a Democrat in all his younger years before he began to write history, who has belonged to no party, I think, since, and whose great ability and impartiality are universally recognized, both at home and abroad. I mean the history of that period by Mr. James Ford Rhodes.

Mr. Rhodes says:

The presidential election took place November 6; the South Carolina Legislature passed the act calling a convention November 10. No man of judgment and public experience could now longer doubt that South Carolina would secede soon after December 17, the day fixed for the assembling of the convention. November 8 the War Department received a letter from Col. Gardner, then in command at Fort Moultrie, advising that the garrison be strengthened in Moultrie, and that a company of soldiers be sent to Fort Sumter and another to Castle Pinckney. November 9, if Floyd's diary is genuine and correct, Attorney General Black, in Cabinet meeting, earnestly urged "sending at once a strong force into the forts in Charleston Harbor"; and Secretary Cass substantially agreed with him. Never in our history in a trying time has the course which the Executive should pursue been less open to doubt than in the situation which now confronted President Buchanan. In addition to the actual facts clearly indicating the correct policy, a precedent of the highest value existed. In every step which he ought to have taken, he had before him the example of President Jackson, the great hero of his own party, whose action had been supported by all but four States of the country. Moreover, Jackson had been Buchanan's trusted political leader, and had written him while he was in Russia a confidential letter, giving him some account of the trouble of 1832-33, and saying, "I met nullification at its threshold." Before the South Carolina convention of 1832, which passed the ordinance of nullification, met, Jackson sent for Gen. Scott and asked his advice as to what should be done to carry out his determination that "The Union must and shall be preserved." The counsel of Scott was: "Garrison strongly Fort Moultrie and Castle Pinckney (Sumter was not quite above ground); have a sloop of war and some revenue cutters in Charleston to enforce the collection of duties." "Proceed at once," was the prompt reply of President Jackson, "and execute these views. You have my carte blanche in respect to troops; the vessels shall be there."

Jackson was a Democrat of the Democrats, one of the great chiefs and leaders and traditions of the party; but he was President of the United States, and when the danger came he recognized that his first duty and his only duty was to enforce the laws and maintain the Government, which he had sworn to do.

Mr. Rhodes continues:

It was gross dereliction of duty on the part of President Buchanan that he did not at once send for Gen. Scott, and discuss with him in detail the action of Jackson, and then decide to carry out a similar policy. For—in spite of the verbose reasoning with which Buchanan and his defenders have confused the question, by insisting that what was involved was really the coercion of a State, and then proceeding to discuss the right and the expediency of such action and his lack of authority—the course that the Executive should have pursued is as clear as day. Buchanan denied the right of secession, and acknowledged that it was his duty to enforce the laws in South Carolina in so far as he was able. November 17 he asked for an opinion of his Attorney General. This move was proper but, like most of his proper actions in this crisis, tardy. Yet when the opinion came, giving him warrant for the Jacksonian policy, it was not too late to follow it. Attorney General Black, as sound a jurist as ever advised a President, replied in three days to his request. "You can now," he wrote Buchanan, "if necessary, order the duties to be collected on board a vessel inside of any established port of entry. Your right to take such measures as may seem to be necessary for the protection of the public property is very clear." When we brush away all extraneous considerations, when we isolate the question of executive duty from party disputes and constitutional theories, it is surprising what unanimity existed at the North in regard to the matter of the greatest practical moment. Not a lawyer in the North would have denied the powers of the President as thus laid down by Black. Had Buchanan decided promptly to act with energy on that line of duty, every northern man who had voted for Lincoln, Douglas, or Bell, and nearly every northern man who had voted for Breckinridge would have sustained him with enthusiastic zeal. No more scathing criticism on the President can be pronounced than that of Black himself, who, 40 days later, spoke of "the fatal error which the administration had committed in not sending down troops enough to hold all the forts" in Charleston Harbor.

For the satisfaction of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I will say that that is a memorandum for the President on the subject of the paper drawn up by him in reply to the commissioners of South Carolina, included in the essays and speeches of J. S. Black. I will not read all that Mr. Rhodes says, although it is all worth reading, but only a few passages which I have marked.

Comparing the period of the winter of 1860-61 with the time of Jackson, he says:

Yet, if the crisis was greater, greater would have been the glory to him who met it in the way unerringly pointed out by precedent, law, and devotion to the Union. It was a pregnant opportunity for an executive gifted with singleness of purpose, a dauntless temper of mind, and a wisdom to guide his valor to act in safety. But on such a man as Buchanan fortune lavishes her favors in vain. Vacillating and obstinate by turns, yet lacking firmness when the occasion demanded firmness, he floundered about in a sea of perplexity, throwing away chance after chance, and, though not wanting in good intentions and sincere patriotism, he laid himself open to the undisguised contempt of all sections and all parties. In but one respect has the later differed from the contemporary judgment of him. From an oft-repeated Northern charge that he was actuated by treachery to his own section, he has been fully absolved. When, however, we compare what he did with what he ought to have done, we may affirm with reason that of all of our Presidents, with perhaps a single exception, Buchanan made the most miserable failure. He had been so long under Southern domination that he could not now throw it off. Common prudence required that he should keep in his Cabinet none but stanch Union men; this test would have resulted in the retirement of Cobb and Thompson, and probably a reconstruction of the whole Cabinet in the middle of November, such as took place in December and in January. According to Floyd's diary, a difference developed itself in Cabinet meeting as early as November 10, on the question of the South's submission to Lincoln's election and the right of secession, in which dispute Cobb, Thompson, and Floyd ranged themselves on one side, and Cass, Toucey, Black, Holt, and the President on the other.

At a time when a plan of resolute action should have been the daily and nightly thought of Buchanan, he sat himself down to write an essay on constitutional law, which he sent to Congress as his annual message. While engaged in this work, the War Department received a letter from Maj. Robert Anderson, who, on account of his high reputation, had been selected to command Fort Moultrie. The recommendations in this letter, in addition to previous advice and entreaties, should have come to the President with such a cumulative force that even he could no longer fail to appreciate that which nearly every Union man in the country saw as an imperative necessity. November 23 Anderson suggested that Moultrie be reinforced. He added: "Fort Sumter and Castle Pinckney must be garrisoned immediately, if the Government determines to keep command of this harbor." This native of Kentucky, who had taken a wife from Georgia, then went on: "I need not say how anxious I am—indeed, determined, so far as honor will permit—to avoid collision with the citizens of South Carolina. Nothing, however, will be better calculated to prevent bloodshed than our being found in such an attitude that it would be madness and folly to attack us. There is not so much of feverish excitement as there was last week, but that there is a settled determination to leave the Union, and to obtain possession of this work, is apparent to all."

Before the President's message went to Congress, Anderson iterated these suggestions, and in this last letter he showed that the administration could depend on him to act with moderation as well as firmness. Making a requisition for howitzers, heavy revolvers, and muskets, he added: "God forbid, though, that I should have to use them."

But the President, instead of accepting the advice of Maj. Anderson, was taking counsel with Jefferson Davis in regard to the message and modifying it in deference to his suggestions.

Mr. Rhodes then repeats the analysis of the message, which is substantially the same as that which I have read from Nicolay and Hay, and he concludes:

That Buchanan deserves historical censure for not having pursued the Jacksonian policy seems to me beyond question, for the path of duty was so plain that he should have walked in it and accepted whatever consequences came from right doing.

* * * * * * *

That Buchanan feared a conflict is evident; the mainspring of his wavering course was his feverish desire that the war should not begin under a Democratic administration nor while he was in the presidential chair. His policy was guided by the thought, After me the deluge, and must be classed among the wrecks with which the vacillation of irresolute men have strewn the coasts of time.

And now we are invited to raise a monument to him as one of the "wrecks which strew the coast of time."

But Buchanan could not forget his party interests when he should have sunk all else in the feeling that he was an American and a disciple of Jackson and of Webster. Had he risen to that height the war might have begun under his Presidency, but he would have had a united North at his back, and when he retired to private life with the approval of a grateful people, he might have handed over to his successor, with the advantage of a continuity of administration, a well-defined policy.

On that clear, calm, strong statement—strong by its very force of understatement—I am content to rest the case against the erection of a statue to James Buchanan. The book will remain; all who love and know the history of their country will read it and will wonder by what methods and what feelings it was made possible to erect a statue to a President so described in the Capital of the United States.

It is not without interest to note what James Russell Lowell wrote in the Atlantic Monthly, speaking of Buchanan as one—

Who knows no art to conjure the spirit of anarchy he has evoked by the shifts and evasions of a second-rate attorney, and who has contrived to involve his country in the confusion of principle and vacillation of judgment which have left him without a party and without a friend.

During those two months Mr. Cobb, of Georgia, went from the Cabinet, and then after a month Mr. Jacob Thompson, and finally Floyd. Floyd had been very busy. It is worth recalling what he did as a member of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet:

He sold the Virginia board of army commissioners 5,000 muskets; delivered 10,000 others from the Watervliet Arsenal, N. Y., to an agent of South Carolina; and still 5,000 others from the Baton Rouge Arsenal to the governor of Alabama. He ordered advanced quotas of arms to a number of Southern States. He sent a Government inspector to inspect a purchase of arms for the governor of Mississippi. He allowed Virginia to have a model musket made at the Springfield Armory; to use and take copies of Government patterns, drawings, machines, tools, etc., at Springfield and Harpers Ferry; and arranged to have the Washington Navy Yard manufacture a battery of howitzers and a lot of fuses for the same State. He furnished Senator Yulee a list of Army appointees from Florida. He sent Col. Hardee to drill and review a camp of instruction for Gov. Letcher, of Virginia, and a little later gave him leave of absence practically to go into the service of the rebellion under the State of Georgia. He acquiesced in the acceptance of a militia volunteer guard to surround and ostensibly protect the Charleston Arsenal, which guard, acting, doubtless, upon the original design, soon seized and held it for South Carolina. On the day of the Charleston secession ordinance (December 20), without the knowledge of the President, he ordered the transfer from the Pittsburgh Arsenal to the southern coast, where they might be readily seized, of 123 cannon—this on the pretense of arming the fort at Ship Island, not yet completed, and the fort at Galveston, not yet begun. In this latter enterprise, however, he overshot his mark. Columbiads and 32-pounders can not be secretly moved, and before the order was many days old the President received emphatic telegraphic protests against it from prominent Pittsburgh citizens, a warning from his own State he did not feel at liberty to disregard.

This work by the Secretary of War had been going on in the Cabinet, and Hay and Nicolay differentiate in only one thing, the transfer from the Pittsburgh Arsenal of cannon. Mr. Floyd stayed to the last, and Secretary Stanton said subsequently:

The last I saw of Floyd was in this room, lying on the sofa which then stood between the windows yonder. I remember it well—it was on the night of the 28th of December, 1860. We had had high words, and had almost come to blows, in our discussion over Fort Sumter. Thompson was here—Thompson was a plausible talker—and as a last resort, having been driven from every other argument, advocated the evacuation of the fort on the plea of generosity. South Carolina, he said, was but a small State, with a sparse white population; we were a great and powerful people, and a strong, vigorous Government. We could afford to say to South Carolina, "See, we will withdraw our garrison as an evidence that we mean you no harm." Stanton replied to him, "Mr. President, the proposal to be generous implies that the Government is strong, and that we, as the public servants, have the confidence of the people. I think that is a mistake. No administration has ever suffered the loss of public confidence and support as this has done. Only the other day it was announced that a million of dollars had been stolen from Mr. Thompson's department. The bonds were found to have been taken from the vault where they should have been kept, and the notes of Mr. Floyd were substituted for them. Now, it is proposed to give up Sumter. All I have to say is that no administration, much less this one, can afford to lose a million of money and a fort in the same week. Floyd remained silent and did not reappear in that chamber."

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator predicate any of the charges which he makes against Mr. Buchanan upon any statements made by Mr. Floyd?

Mr. LODGE. I do not, because I do not think the genuineness of his diary is thoroughly proved. I am only showing what Mr. Floyd did, which is unquestioned of course. He was afterwards sued for defalcation here in the District.

Mr. KING. Mr. Floyd, as the Senator will recall, did promulgate a great many fulminations against Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. LODGE. I have quoted nothing from Mr. Floyd.

Mr. KING. And he made certain charges, charges with respect to the withdrawal of munitions, and so forth.

Mr. LODGE. Those are matters of public record. Those do not rest on his statement at all.

Mr. KING. But I am referring to the charges of Mr. Floyd against Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. LODGE. I have not quoted from Mr. Floyd's charges. His diary is printed in all these books, and I have not quoted it because I do not think its genuineness has been fully proved, although it was given by Mr. Pollard as authentic in his life of Gen. Lee.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will just pardon me once more, Gen. Scott seemed to rely very largely upon Mr. Floyd in the controversy in which he indulged and which obtained great currency, and Gen. Scott——

Mr. LODGE. What has that got to do with me? I am not relying on Mr. Floyd for a single charge.

Mr. KING. But the Senator is quoting from Gen. Scott——

Mr. LODGE. I did not quote from Gen. Scott. Mr. Rhodes did and gives his authorities. I refer to Scott's talk with Jackson.

Mr. KING. Then I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. I have not quoted from him once.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to quote from Gen. Scott and Mr. Floyd.

Mr. LODGE. I quoted from neither of them.

Mr. KING. The Senator spoke so low I could hardly hear what he gave as the sources of his authority.

Mr. LODGE. Now I come to the new men Mr. Buchanan put into his Cabinet. He made Judge Holt Secretary of War. He made Gen. John A. Dix Secretary of the Treasury. Dix had been a reactionary Democrat and had publicly justified the discontent of the South as late as December 15. The Charleston secession ordinance and the firing on the Star of the West had awakened him to a truer perception of the crisis. Henceforth, as the world knows, he knew but one duty, to oppose the rebellion, and as Secretary of the Treasury he lent his earnest zeal to the service of the Union. A few weeks later he gave utterance to the most stirring battle cry of this exciting period, telegraphing to one of the revenue officials, "If anyone dares to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot." That was the spirit of Andrew Jackson. He was going to defend the flag and enforce the laws and protect the property. But I am not speaking to eulogize Gen. Dix. I want to read here Dix's own account in a letter to Mrs. Blodgett of March 31, 1865, which appears in his life by Morgan Dix. Gen. Dix said:

I decided when I wrote the order to say nothing to the President about it. I was satisfied that if he was consulted he would not permit it to be sent. Though indignant at the course of the Southern States and the men about him who had betrayed his confidence—Cobb, Floyd, and others—one leading idea had taken possession of his mind, that in the civil contest which threatened to break out the North must not shed the first drop of blood. This idea is the key to his submission to much which should have been met with prompt and vigorous resistance. I said nothing to the President in regard to it, though he was with me every evening until Friday, when the members of the Cabinet were all assembled, and the President was about to call our attention to the business of the day. I said to him, "Mr. President, I fear we have lost some more of our revenue cutters." "Ah!" said he, "how is that?" I then told him what had occurred down to the receipt of the dispatch from Mr. Jones informing me that Capt. Breshwood refused to obey my order. "Well," said he, "what did you do?" I then repeated to him, slowly and distinctly, the order I had sent. When I came to the words "shoot him on the spot" he started suddenly and said, with a good deal of emotion, "Did you write that?" "No, sir," I said, "I did not write it, but I telegraphed it." He made no answer, nor do I remember that he ever referred to it afterwards. It was manifest, as I had presupposed, that the order would never have been given if I had consulted him.

What a picture of a hero, a great man, to whom we are about to erect a statue for after ages to admire!

I am bringing this forward to throw light on the character of the President they are about to honor, and for no other purpose than to show that the opinions I hold are shared, I think, by every historian, North and South, who has written about him.

It was intended to have a parade on Washington's Birthday in 1861, a not unusual thing, and the House of Representatives had made provision for it. The District Militia were to parade and the United States troops, as usual, were to march in the parade. Secretary Holt had ordered the troops to appear on that day, thinking that on Washington's Birthday it was a desirable thing, and especially at that particular period when there was great agitation. Ex-President Tyler was at the time in Washington in attendance upon the Peace Convention, and he hurried to the Executive Mansion to protest against this parade of United States troops on Washington's Birthday in the Capital City.

About 8 o'clock that night Secretary Holt was surprised to receive a visit from President Buchanan, who, after some casual talk, formally requested his Secretary of War to revoke the orders to the Federal troops to join in the following day's celebration.

Holt objected to the order being revoked, but was overruled. The revocation made so much excitement, there were such crowds to see the parade, that the President at the last moment again changed his mind.

"Mr. Secretary, can't you get up this parade?" Mr. Holt promised to try, and hurried to Gen. Scott with the new direction, who was, as might have been expected, also indignant. "What can we do at this late hour?" asked he. "The officers have gone home, and the men are probably scattered." "Well," said Holt, "do the very best you can, and let us make all the display possible."

In the afternoon the parade took place, though much diminished, and thereupon Mr. Buchanan, having twice shifted his mind, wrote a letter of explanation and apology to Mr. Tyler, an apology for allowing troops of the United States to parade in the city. The letter is taken from Curtis's Life of Buchanan. I am reading it from the 152d page of Abraham Lincoln, A History, Volume III:

[The President to Mr. Tyler.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 22, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR: I find it impossible to prevent two or three companies of the Federal troops here from joining in the procession to-day with the volunteers of the District without giving serious offense to the tens of thousands of the people who have assembled to witness the parade. The day is the anniversary of Washington's birth—a festive occasion throughout the land—and it has been particularly marked by the House of Representatives. The troops everywhere else join such processions, in honor of the birthday of the Father of his Country, and it would be hard to assign a good reason why they should be excluded from this privilege in the Capital founded by himself. They are here simply as a posse comitatus to aid the civil authority in case of need. Besides, the program was published in the National Intelligencer of this morning without my knowledge.

From your friend.

Very respectfully. JAMES BUCHANAN.

This letter needs no comment.

He revoked the order for troops. He then got disturbed by the excitement caused and at the last moment asked them to send some. They sent some and then he apologized to Mr. Tyler for our own troops. That was on the 22d of February, not very far from the 4th of March.

Mr. President, I have only read these extracts, and I might go on for hours, simply to show what dispassionate historians think and what some of the facts were which slip out of people's minds.

As far as I can judge from the argument of the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the chief reason for putting up a statue to President Buchanan is that he was the fifteenth President of the United States. We might as well say that we ought to put up a statue to Aaron Burr because he was Vice President of the United States. I suppose his bust is here in the series which adorn these niches, though I confess I have never distinguished it. I have never taken the trouble to look for it, but I have no doubt it is there in the regular order of the Vice Presidents where they all are, just as Mr. Buchanan's portrait is in the White House. Characteristically enough it is not a real portrait painted at the time. The real portrait painted at the time, which was not a good one, a fact which did not make it conspicuous at the White House, was taken away, and Mrs. Johnston, who desired to do everything for Mr. Buchanan's memory, had another portrait painted by Mr. Chase, an excellent artist, who was too young ever to have seen Buchanan, and who painted it from instructions and photographs. That is all very well. I am not in favor of doing as they did in Venice in drawing a veil over the portrait of Marino Faliero, but leaving the frame standing among the rest of the pictures of the doges. Mr. Buchanan is, of course, rightfully in the catalogue of Presidents. But this resolution is to give him a statue in the Capital of the United States.

Mr. President, we have been far too careless in regard to statues in the Capital. Whatever may be done locally in cities and States is a local affair, but this is the Capital of the Nation and we have been very heedless in our grants.

We have had statues of men placed here from personal affection, and the only fact we know about the men now is that they have statues. We have, I am afraid, one or two statues here to some distinguished failures. There ought to be no statues out of doors in this Capital but to men who have greatly served their country. I think altogether too great latitude has been allowed and too little care has been exercised.

Another argument that was made, apparently, was that Mr. Buchanan had the devoted affection of his niece. That is highly to his credit; but that is not a reason for a statue. The other day, in speaking hastily, under the ardent pressure of my good friend from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], I said if that argument was pressed it would justify a statue to Benedict Arnold, and it was stated in some of the newspapers that I had compared Buchanan to Benedict Arnold. I did nothing of the kind. They were wholly different. Arnold was a soldier—a good one and a brave one. He was also a traitor, from the most sordid motives of the blackest and completest kind. Buchanan was neither. He was not a soldier; he was not a traitor from sordid motives, nor was he a traitor by intention at all. After the war broke he remained loyal to the cause of the Union in the short time of life that was left. He never did betray the Union; but his weakness was such that he did the things and permitted the acts—I should say permitted acts, because, as Mr. Rhodes says, I think, he was always led—he was led into doing things that were just what a traitor would have done; but he was not a traitor; and I in no sense compared him with Arnold. The argument I was trying to make was that the fact that a man, like millions of others, I believe and hope, in this country was beloved by his family is not in itself a reason for setting up a statue to him. The point I have been trying to make has been made by Macaulay in a way which most of the Senators will remember, and which I wish to recall, as showing the futility of that sort of argument. Macaulay's statement, of course, is made in regard to Charles I. He wrote:

The advocates of Charles, like the advocates of other malefactors against whom overwhelming evidence is produced, generally decline all controversy about the facts and content themselves with calling testimony to character. He had so many private virtues. And had James II no private virtues? Was Oliver Cromwell, his bitterest enemies themselves being judges, destitute of private virtues? And what, after all, are the virtues ascribed to Charles? A religious zeal, not more sincere than that of his son, and fully as weak and narrowminded, and a few of the ordinary household decencies which half the tombstones in England claim for those who lie beneath them. A good father! A good husband! Ample apologies, indeed, for 15 years of persecution, tyranny, and falsehood.

We charge him with having broken his coronation oath; and we are told that he kept his marriage vow! We accuse him of having given up his people to the merciless inflictions of the most hot headed and hard-hearted of prelates; and the defense is that he took his little son on his knees and kissed him! We censure him for having violated the articles of the Petition of Right after having for good and valuable consideration, promised to observe them; and we are informed that he was accustomed to hear prayers at 6 o'clock in the morning! It is to such considerations as these, together with his Van Dyke dress, his handsome face, and his peaked beard that he owed, we verily believe, most of his popularity with the present generation.

For ourselves we own that we do not understand the common phrase, a good man, but a bad king. We can as easily conceive of a good man and an unnatural father or a good man and a treacherous friend. We can not, in estimating the character of an individual, leave out of our consideration his conduct in the most important human relation; and if in that relation we find him to have been selfish, cruel, and deceitful, we shall take the liberty to call him a bad man, in spite of all his temperance at table and all his regularity at chapel.

No doubt it was an admirable quality, that of exciting and commanding the devoted affection of his niece, but I do not think it is a reason for a statue or in the least defends Mr. Buchanan against the charge made against him.

It is true, he stands in the catalogue; it is true, he was the fifteenth President; but public office, Mr. President, when we come to a question of statues, is but an opportunity. The mere holding of the office is nothing. The question is, What did the man do with it? Did he render great service to his country while he held it? If he did not, if he failed in his duty, we can not erase him from the catalogue; but we need not honor him beyond all others.

We are asked to set up his statue, as I said the other day, in a Capital which has yet failed in the open air, under the dome of heaven, to raise a statue to John Adams, the signer of the Declaration, second President; to Thomas Jefferson, writer of the Declaration, third President, or to his great rival, Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, the men who founded this Government; to Madison, one of the framers of the Constitution; to Monroe, the author of the Monroe doctrine, which has spread throughout the civilized world; to John Quincy Adams, his successor in the Presidency, who formulated the Monroe doctrine, and whose great contest for the right of petition in the House of Representatives will ever remain memorable. To none of these men have we found place or opportunity to erect statues.

It is no answer to say that money was not offered to build them statues. Is a place in the great Valhalla of Washington for sale? There ought to be statues of nobody here who has not greatly served his country and whose monument is not erected and paid for by the United States. I have already said there are some here who seem to me to be too obscure to have found a place in this Capital City; some who are remembered by failures; but there is not one, great or small, on whom the shadow of disloyalty ever rested for a moment. That shadow rested on Buchanan at the time; it has rested on him ever since. It is no answer to say that his intentions were good. The place where good intentions are used for pavements is familiar.

Mr. President, in thinking about this there was one thing that came into my mind which seemed to me to depict it better than anything else. In the third canto of the "Inferno" Dante describes the entrance to hell and the outer circle.

It is what is popularly known as the limbo, sometimes called the babies' limbo, where are detained souls that can go neither to heaven nor to hell. I came across, in looking at the notes to Dante, a curious little line from an old Scotch ballad that may be familiar to others here, which describes limbo with true Scotch force and wit. It is a ballad about an old woman, and one line runs—

"She's nae fit for heaven an' she'll ruin a' hell."

In this place of spirits Dante detects a form he knows, that of Pope Celestine V, who abdicated the Papacy, and the one thing Dante says of him is that "he made the great refusal." That blasting phrase consigned that unfortunate and insignificant Pope to a dreadful immortality. If ever a man in modern times made the "great refusal" it was James Buchanan. The crisis came to him, the greatest crisis that an American President had ever met. There was no room for doubt; he had before him the example of his own chosen leader; he had nothing to do but to follow in his footsteps; it was not a question of coercing a State; it was not a question of the right of secession; it was the question whether he would be true to the oath he had sworn to the American people to enforce the laws of the United States. That was the whole question. It mattered not whether the South was right or wrong, or whether the North was right or wrong, or who was to blame; there was one man in this country who had but one duty, and that was the President of the United States. However others might differ, he had but one duty—to sustain the Government and enforce the laws as he had sworn to do. He shrank away; he made "the great refusal." For two months he allowed us to drift hopelessly on the rocks, and then he was rescued by the loyal men in his Cabinet, who forced in other loyal men, and complete wreck was averted. I do not say that if he had done his duty as Jackson did he could have averted the Civil War; probably that awful convulsion was inevitable; but he at least could have vindicated the rights and the honor of the Government with which he was charged. Instead of turning the Government over to his successor a penniless wreck, he could at least have turned it over in a strong condition, with a strong policy already mapped out, and in such a way as to have united force behind it. He failed to do so.

His biographer, a very able man, Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, abounding in sympathy for Buchanan, wrote his life in two large volumes, which I read when it appeared and have looked over within a few days. He does the best he can, but his references to the critical time of Mr. Buchanan's administration are one long-drawn apology, defense, and explanation. We may accept the apology; we may accept the defense; we may accept all the pleas of character in mitigation; but the great fact remains that Buchanan failed, that everything that is said for him is in defense and explanation, and, however we may severally determine as to his character, it seems to me that is not the kind of public man to whom we should erect a statue.

Statues remain; we pass. They ought to be, of course, works of art, although sometimes that seems to be impossible; too frequently they are poor things artistically; but they all certainly ought to represent a man worth representing not only because of his achievements but also because of his character. Remember how statues last. Most of the sculpture that has come down to us, buried in the earth from the days of ancient Greece and Rome, is portrait sculpture; and the same thing is true of Egypt, with the great sculptures of Egyptian kings.

But, Mr. President, the most important quality of all in portrait sculpture is the character of the man it represents. It is designed to teach a lesson to coming generations. Our children and our grandchildren will look upon it, and many others after them. We seek the lesson it teaches, and that lesson at least should be fundamentally sound and true.

My feeling about Mr. Buchanan is not due in the least to the fact that I differed from him. I can go to Arlington, Mr. President, and see there the little stones that mark the graves of Confederate and Union soldiers and the monument to the unknown Confederate dead; and, utterly as I differ from their belief, I can read for myself in the monuments to those Confederate dead and have my children read the same great lesson of loyalty to a cause and to a faith; but I can not find that lesson in the life of James Buchanan. It was not that he was a Democrat, or that he was in favor of slavery, or that he had been the cheerful packhorse of the southern leaders—it is not that; it was that in the great moment, at the great crisis in the country's fate he failed; he made the "great refusal"; and that is not such a lesson as should be taught to coming generations by a statue to last for all time.

Are you going to say to the men in France, "Yes; we honor you; we will do everything for you;" but 50 years hence some Government, some Congress, which has forgotten about this war and has not lived through it, may accept a statue of the Kaiser as a statue was once accepted of Frederick the Great? You ought not to hold out any such possibility or any such expectation to the men who now wear your uniform and give their lives. If the leaders who have failed, whether by intention or through weakness, are to be honored equally with those who have dared and sacrificed and succeeded; if Buchanan is to be honored by statues, like Lincoln and Washington, principle and values perish in a hopeless confusion of thought. To my thinking there never was a time, and never will be a time, when it is fitting and best to raise a statue to Buchanan in the Capital City of Washington; but of all times, now, when loyalty is the first and greatest virtue, when readiness to meet the great crisis is the finest quality, when courage is the noblest of attributes—this, of all times, is the last in which to erect a statue of our fifteenth President.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I was greatly surprised at the opening made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] this morning, to the effect that this was no time for money to be diverted for the purpose of erecting a statue, when a great war was going on, and it could be much better invested in liberty bonds. I can not understand the motive of that declaration in connection with the matter we are now considering, because every Senator knows that not one penny is sought to be appropriated, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of erecting this proposed statue; and as to the further suggestion that the money might be used as a fund to be called the Buchanan memorial fund and invested in liberty bonds, I wish to know by what process you can remake the will of Harriet Lane Johnston, who died many years ago, and create a new trust, no matter how desirable that trust might be.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I knew the money was not to be appropriated, and I think I said so. I also knew that it was provided by the will—and I think I said so—that if it was not used for the statue it was to lapse at a certain date. Where was it then to go?

Mr. KNOX. I suppose it would go to the residuary legatees under the will. That is the usual course.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know the terms of the will; but if it was not spent on a statue it might be very easily put by those residuary legatees in liberty bonds. I do not think it would; but it is possible.

Mr. KNOX. I do not know how many residuary legatees there may be or what their disposition in that particular might be. It would be a matter, of course, for them to decide.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, of course.

Mr. KNOX. But, Mr. President, this is not a proposition originating in either branch of Congress to appropriate the public moneys to erect a statue on public lands. If it were it would be proper to postpone its consideration to a more appropriate time, and in its consideration to determine the relative claims of other public men to precedence in post mortem honors. The matter is not presented to the Senate in that way. It comes, as has been detailed by the senior Senator from Maryland, as a proffer from Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston through her last will and testament to erect at the expense of her estate a statue to her uncle, James Buchanan, the fifteenth President of the United States, with whom she shared many of the responsibilities of the White House during his administration.

It comes in a way that should not arouse jealousy in the hearts of other just claimants for posthumous honors, and I feel safe in saying that a similar request from friends of any one of the great men who have held the highest executive place in our Government would be granted without question. Why not this one? Because, Mr. President, as the senior Senator from Massachusetts has put it, Mr. Buchanan was disloyal to his country. This is the simple issue we are called upon to decide. No other reason has been assigned.

Mr. President, I was gratified to note that in all the authorities that were quoted this morning by the Senator from Massachusetts, there was not one of them that suggested disloyalty upon the part of Mr. Buchanan. There were those that spoke of Mr. Buchanan's hesitation, of his misapprehension of the situation, of his weakness, but there were none who charged him with disloyalty. The language of the Senator from Massachusetts is specific in this particular—not so specific this morning as it was on Friday last. I overlook the comparison with Benedict Arnold. I quote from the RECORD:

> This joint resolution proposes at this moment, in the midst of this war, to erect a statue to the only President upon whom rests the shadow of disloyalty in the great office to which he was elected.

Further along he says:

> I repeat that the proposition is to erect for the admiration of our children in coming generations a statue of the one President upon whom the dark shadow of disloyalty rests.

And again:

> He was elected President of the United States, and was sworn to defend the great charge put into his hands. He did not defend it; he did not protect it.
> The best thing that can ever be said of him is that he was weak; but a very large proportion of those who are familiar with the history of the time believe, as I shall later attempt to show, that he was not only weak but that he was also disloyal.

Mr. President, with the exception of mere dogmatic assertion upon the part of the Senator from Massachusetts, unsupported by a single citation from any of the critics who have abused James Buchanan since his retirement from office, the Senator from Massachusetts has not cited a line to support his allegations, nor instanced a single fact. The Senator speaks poetically of "the great refusal." What was the great refusal. It was a refusal to precipitate a fratricidal war by the coercion of the States, yet that same refusal was persisted in by Abraham Lincoln until the shot came from the South that called the North to arms. It was a refusal predicated upon exactly the same propositions that Abraham Lincoln not only in words adopted for his own, but referring to the language of Buchanan, affirmed it as presenting a sound view of his constitutional duty.

It has been stated here this morning that a great part of the history of James Buchanan consists of efforts to defend him. Why not? When was a man ever so assailed? And who is assailed must be defended. Was ever a man so misrepresented? In the language of Judge Jeremiah Black, to whom I shall refer later, his life was literally lied away.

It has been truly said, Mr. President, that malice and falsehood can always outrun truth in the short but not in the long race. The House of Representatives, by passing the measure, has demonstrated that a generation of men has come to power in that honorable body far enough removed from the passions and prejudices of 60 years ago to render a calm and just judgment upon the events of that remote period. We are now to decide if the Senate has reached that goal and if by its refusal to follow the example of the House this race between truth and error is to be projected into another generation of the Senate.

Mr. Buchanan has been assailed by two classes of critics—those who stood too near the stupendous events of his time to fairly appraise their merits and those who judged Mr. Buchanan, as has been said, "by the course of events subsequently, when the contingent became actual and the problematical certain in many ways, which only the eye of Omniscience could previously foresee. How far this ex post facto judgment (cruel and wrongful in history, fully as much as ex post facto statutes in legislation) has been carried in his case all who care to look into the matter can easily see and know. Every man, every public man especially, has a right to demand that his opinions and actions should be measured by the circumstances and conditions of his own time and not by the circumstances and conditions of another and, it may be, a wholly different time. Any other mode of judgment is at once grossly unhistorical, grossly unphilosophical, and, I will add, grossly un-Christian."

The first and most conspicuous writer up to his time who made the life of James Buchanan a special study was George Ticknor Curtis, a Yankee of the Yankees, the man who defended the slave in the Dred Scott case. He says:

> Mr. Buchanan's administration of the Government during the four years which preceded the commencement of our Civil War is a topic upon which friends and foes have widely differed. But no unprejudiced person who now examines the facts can doubt that in many minds injustice has been done to him. Perhaps this was inevitable, considering that a sectional civil war, of vast magnitude and attended with great bitterness, followed immediately after his retirement from office, when a political party which had been in opposition to his administration came for the first time into full control of the Federal Government. It was in the nature of things—or, rather, I should say, it was in the nature of man—that those who succeeded to the Government should have charged upon the outgoing administration that they had been remiss in their public duty, and that under the example of men in high places there should have grown up a popular belief that Mr. Buchanan favored the secession of the Southern States, either purposely or by lack of the proper energy to meet it in its incipient stages. Charges of this kind found popular credence in a time of unexampled excitement; and since the war was ended there have been, and doubtless there still are, many persons who regard President Buchanan as a man who could have saved the country from a frightful civil war if he had had the wish and the energy to nip secession in the bud.
> Such, at all events, were the reproaches with which many of his countrymen pursued him into retirement and continued to follow him to his grave. Denied, as he was, a hearing while he lived, because the perils and turmoils of the immediate present unfitted men to look dispassionately back into the past, he may well have desired that in some calmer time, when he had gone where there is neither ignorance, nor prejudice, nor rancor, some one should "read his cause aright to the unsatisfied." To that better time he looked forward with an undoubting faith in the ultimate justice of his country. I believe that the time which he anticipated has come, and that nothing more than a proper examination of the facts is now needed to insure for him all the vindication that he could ever have desired.

It is not necessary, Mr. President, for me to comment upon the great ability, the high reputation, the excellent judgment, and the wide and long experience of John Bassett Moore, who, perhaps more than any other living American, has a grasp of national and international affairs. John Bassett Moore published the latest work on James Buchanan in 1911 in two large volumes, one of which I hold in my hand.

Mr. Moore says:

> It was the fate of James Buchanan, in his seventieth year, when, at the close of a long and wearing public career, he was about to lay down the burdens of office, to be confronted with a crisis which would have taxed the energy and decision of an Andrew Jackson at 35, and concerning the wisest treatment of which even the philosophers of hindsight can not agree. There has no doubt existed a general tendency, which was stimulated by the eventual triumph of the Union and the abolition of slavery, to censure him for not having assumed a peremptory and defiant attitude toward secession when it first became aggressively active. But, even if it be admitted that this more heroic course might have been justified by the event, it seems unreasonable and unjust to condemn a statesman of Buchanan's age, political antecedents, and strict constitutionalism for seeking to afford the largest possible opportunity for conciliatory and healing measures. Efforts were repeatedly made, apparently in a spirit of hopefulness, by his successor as President to find a basis of compromise; and when the armed conflict began the first actual shot was not fired by a soldier of the Union.

Mr. Moore continues:

> In the light of a restored national authority, with powers vastly strengthened not only by constitutional amendment, but also by war and construction, it has grown more and more difficult to enter into the spirit of the refinements which found expression in Buchanan's annual message of December, 1860, as to the legal aspects of secession and the powers of the Federal Government in the premises. On these questions, however, the message, contrary to what often seems to be supposed, advanced nothing new. The idea of a double or divided sovereignty, each part supreme within its sphere, was a commonplace of American political and juridical discussions and was accepted as a sort of self-evident truth by the masses till its practical impotence in the face of the attempt of a State to secede suddenly became glaringly manifest. Moreover, this part of the message was substantially but a transcript of an official opinion then lately given to the President by his Attorney General, the Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, who appears to have volunteered the service and himself to have drawn up the questions which the President was to propound to him.

Mr. Moore concludes:

> When we review Buchanan's record as a public man, whether as a Representative in Congress or a Senator, as Secretary of State or minister plenipotentiary, or as President, there is nothing that impresses us more than his laborious industry and his capacity for business. He did not hold himself in reserve for great occasions. He gave his best from day to day, maintaining a uniformly high level of accomplishment. Where tact and diplomacy were requisite he was especially successful. Diplomacy was in reality his special gift. Both at St. Petersburg and at London he cultivated good will and rendered substantial service. He was the first Secretary of State to announce and maintain the doctrine of voluntary expatriation in its full extent.

Perhaps the most careful as well as the most devoted of all the writers who have given their time to this task was Hon. William U. Hensel, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hensel held few public offices; he is now deceased; but everybody familiar with Pennsylvania and Pennsylvaia affairs, without regard to politics or his predilections in respect to any particular doctrine or dogma, knows that no greater mind has shone in that State in the last generation. Mr. Hensel was one of the most powerful orators to whom I have ever listened. He was one of the ablest lawyers, and he was a profound historian. Mr. Hensel's article on James Buchanan is printed in full by John Bassett

Moore in his appendix to the book to which I have just referred, and from that article I desire to take a few quotations which go right to the crux of this situation.

I desire, Mr. President, to show that Mr. Hensel investigated all the facts, all the circumstances, not only those relating to the last year of James Buchanan's administration but the details of the full compliance and full accord that President Lincoln gave to Mr. Buchanan's policies until the attack upon Fort Sumter. Mr. Hensel says:

My proposition is that in the winter of 1860 and 1861 peace was the view of the great majority of the northern people; that Mr. Lincoln reflected and espoused it as fully and sincerely, and expressed it as freely and unmistakably, as Mr. Buchanan; and that it is a shallow, false, and wicked judgment which reprobates the one as cowardly and senile and praises the other as brave and sensible for cherishing the same notions, even though they were erroneous.

I hasten to the support of my second proposition, that they concurred in their views as to what was then discussed as the right and policy of "coercion." The expiring Thirty-sixth Congress met less than a month after Lincoln's election. That House was in full control of the Republicans, and they had elected the next Congress. Within three months they would be in complete power. Mr. Buchanan has been chiefly denounced for the tone of his annual message to that Congress. Not a blow had been struck; no State had passed an ordinance of secession; the North did not believe the South would secede; the South did not believe the North would fight. The discussion was as yet only academic.

Nevertheless—

To this I desire to direct particular attention—

Nevertheless, the New York Tribune, whose editor was the most potential force in nominating and electing Mr. Lincoln, and which newspaper was "the most powerful organ of its party," declared three days after his election: "If the cotton States shall decide that they can do better out of the Union than in it, we insist on letting them go in peace. The right to secede may be a revolutionary one, but it exists nevertheless. * * * We shall resist—

Continues Mr. Greeley—

all coercive measures." These views were reiterated from day to day. They were reechoed by the Albany Evening Journal, edited by Thurlow Weed, the nearest friend of Mr. Seward. Henry Ward Beecher, in his famous Boston speech, declared about the same time, "I hold it will be an advantage for the South to go off." Gen. Scott, who had been a Whig candidate for President, who was the commanding general of the Army, and who later became one of Mr. Buchanan's severest critics, in his famous "Views," of October, 1860, had said, "To save time, the right of secession may be conceded." In March, 1861, when he was most intimate with Secretary Seward, and was discouraging the relief of Sumter, he urged the North to say to the seceding States, "Wayward sisters, go in peace."

If Mr. Lincoln antagonized these notions, he, at least, made no serious sound nor sign. He was the rising sun; Buchanan was an evening star; and any views a retiring President might have had to express would have been cold and feeble rays by contrast with the bursting effulgence of the great orb of day. If the clarion call to battle was to be then sounded, it ought to have emanated from Springfield; if there was a demand for a Jackson, he should have ridden like "Young Lochinvar out of the West."

Nevertheless, while the leaders of Mr. Lincoln's party and the chieftains of his campaign were thus proclaiming the right of disunion and encouraging the South to secede, Mr. Buchanan declared in his message that grave danger threatened the country against which he had long sounded warnings; he prayed God to preserve the Constitution and the Union throughout all generations; with courteous regard for his successor, he proclaimed that he had been fairly and constitutionally elected, and that his success justified no revolution; he recognized guarantees that Mr. Lincoln "would not attempt violation of any clear constitutional right." He stated the doctrine of secession and denounced it as "wholly inconsistent with the history as well as the character of the Constitution," and cited Jackson and Madison, southern statesmen, to contravene it. With fine touches of eloquence he said:

"This Government, therefore, is a great and powerful Government, invested with all the attributes of sovereignty over the special subjects to which its authority extends. Its framers never intended to implant in its bosom the seeds of its own destruction, nor were they at its creation guilty of the absurdity of providing for its own dissolution. It was not intended by its framers to be 'the baseless fabric of a vision,' which, at the touch of the enchanter, would vanish into thin air, but a substantial and mighty fabric, capable of resisting the slow decay of time and of defying the storms of ages." (Works of James Buchanan, by Moore, Vol. XII, pp. 273, 274.)

I read again from Buchanan's Administration, by W. U. Hensel:

"I might quote many like passages throbbing with the loftiest patriotism. Certainly no man can recall them without feeling that the touching and oft-quoted sentiments of Mr. Lincoln's inaugural reached no higher plane of patriotic sentiment and touched no deeper chord of popular feeling. George Ticknor Curtis declares"—

And listen, Senators, to this verdict from George Ticknor Curtis. He declares:

"After a long familiarity with our constitutional literature, I know of no document which, within the same compass, states so clearly and accurately what I regard as the true theory of our Constitution as this message of President Buchanan. Had I the power to change it, I would not alter a word."

"NEITHER TIMID NOR WEAK.

"Meantime, as conditions changed, the situation became more alarming. States seceded, Congressmen withdrew, and Cabinet ministers who sympathized with secession quit or were forced out of his Cabinet, but Mr. Buchanan only persisted and became correspondingly more emphatic in his acts and utterances. There was, however, no reservation nor inconsistency in the Executive position—neither timidity nor show of weakness. In his special message of January 8, 1861, he repeated his conviction that 'no State has a right by its own to secede from the Union or throw off its Federal obligations at pleasure.' While he declared, in almost the same terms that Mr. Lincoln adopted months later and when the Rebellion was far more advanced, that he 'had no right to make aggressive war upon any State,' he declared, on the other hand, in words that his successor, 60 days later, almost identically appropriated, 'the right and duty to use military force defensively against those who resist the Federal officers in the execution of their legal functions, and against those who assail the property of the Federal Government, is clear and undeniable.' Lawyer and statesmen as he was, he knew the limitations upon the Executive and what were the constitutional prerogatives of the legislative branch of the Government. He had taken a solemn oath to regard both these and he was liable to impeachment and subject to disgrace if he did not. He declared Congress, which was in session, to be 'the only tribunal under Providence possessing the power to meet the existing emergency.' He said"—

And this we know because it is a matter to which we have recently given our own attention.

Speaking of Congress—

"To them exclusively belongs the power to declare war or to authorize the employment of military force in all cases contemplated by the Constitution; and they alone possess the power to remove grievances which might lead to war and to secure peace and union to this distracted country. On them, and on them alone, rests the responsibility.

"In his views, and in his manner of expressing them, the President not only had the advice and cordial approval of his Attorney General, Jeremiah S. Black—to whom Rhodes gives unstinted praise for purity, patriotism, statesmanship, and legal learning—but, what is far more to our present purpose, all that Buchanan then said and all he did had the legal, cordial, and unqualified support of three other members of his Cabinet, who subsequently became most illustrious leaders of the Republican Party—Edwin M. Stanton, the great War Secretary, the erection of a statue to whom has just been recommended by Secretary Taft; Joseph Holt, to whom, after eminent service, Lincoln offered the Attorney Generalship; John A. Dix, later a major general, Republican governor of New York, and ambassador to France.

"Judge Holt, to whom Lincoln tendered the office of Attorney General, is on record as testifying that Mr. Buchanan's official labors ought to be crowned by the glory that belongs 'to an enlightened statesmanship and unsullied patriotism.'

"Surely it is not necessary to show that during all this period, and even later, Mr. Lincoln was in full accord with the policy of his predecessor and his own party; that he was alike submissive to and controlled by the manifest popular will of the Union-loving and peace-seeking part of the country. Neither one moved more slowly toward war than the other, and no faster in accelerating the outbreak of hostilities.

"But to clinch a proposition which I earnestly maintain has been nailed fast, let us swiftly follow Mr. Lincoln's tour eastward. He said at one place—and I challenge you to find it more strongly stated in any of Mr. Buchanan's utterances—'the marching of an army into South Carolina, without the consent of her people, and with hostile intent toward them, would be invasion; and it would be coercion also if the South Carolinians were forced to submit.'

"Remembering the declarations of himself and his party's platform against the lawless 'invasion' of any State, what less or more could these words mean to the South than its people inferred from any declaration Mr. Buchanan had made?

"At Columbus Mr. Lincoln expressed much less solicitude about the future than President Buchanan was exhibiting. He said:

"'Nobody is suffering anything * * * all we want is time, patience, and a reliance on that God who has never forsaken His people.'

"At Pittsburgh he declared there was 'no crisis but an artificial one,' and predicted that if people only kept cool the trouble would come to an end. In Philadelphia he assumed a decidedly antiwar tone:

"'There need be no bloodshed or war. There is no necessity for it. I am not in favor of such a course; * * * there will be no bloodshed unless it be forced upon the Government, and then it will be compelled to act in self-defense.

"'The crisis, the panic, the anxiety of the country at this time is artificial.'

"At Harrisburg, when the speaker of welcome tendered him military support from Pennsylvania, Lincoln rebuked him and said:

"'It is not with any pleasure that I contemplate the possibility that a necessity may arise in this country for the use of the military arm.'

"And yet this man who has been safely dead for 50 years, leaving no lineal descendants, can be assailed as a traitor because he refused to do the very things the refusal of which Mr. Lincoln approved.

"In none of these is heard the voice of the 'Son of Thunder'; at no time the iron ring of the 'Rough Rider's' hoofs. It is true, he said, 'the right of a State to secede is not an open or debatable question,' but Mr. Buchanan had said exactly this to Congress and the country two months earlier. The concluding words of the Lincoln inaugural are classic in the literature of eloquence; but in parallel passages with extracts already quoted from Mr. Buchanan's message these latter may challenge comparison for sound law, lofty patriotism, and even for rich rhetoric.

"MR. LINCOLN'S EARLY ATTITUDE.

"The incoming President reiterated the pledge of his platform that each separate State had a right to control its own domestic institutions; he denounced the lawless invasion of the soil of any State or Territory by armed force as the gravest of crimes. He gave his full adherence to the fugitive-slave law and its enforcement, as guaranteed by the Constitution. Strictly in accord with the policy and declarations of Mr. Buchanan, he promised there should be no bloodshed or violence unless forced upon the national authority; that Federal property would be protected and the Federal revenues collected, but, beyond what might be necessary for this, he declared there would be 'no invasion, no using of force against or among the people anywhere.'

"Nicolay and Hay give their subject credit for 'infinite tact' in dealing with Mr. Seward; but is it permissible to find treason, cowardice, and timidity in Mr. Buchanan's dalliance with incipient secession in the closet and yet praise the attitude of Seward and Lincoln in temporizing with full-armed rebellion in the open?

"John Sherman admits that the first 40 days of the Lincoln administration was the darkest hour in the history of the United States. He declares that it was 'a time of humiliation, timidity, and feebleness.' Sumner deprecated Lincoln's 'deplorable hesitancy.' Six weeks after his inauguration Stanton wrote to Buchanan that there was a strong feeling of distrust in the candor and sincerity of Lincoln personally and of his Cabinet. Emerson, with rare literary skill, condones the President's perplexities because 'the new pilot was hurried to the helm in a tornado.'

"It is to the discredit of our political system—no particular reproach to Mr. Lincoln—that for months the chief concern of his administration was the distribution of the offices to clamorous partisans rather than the distribution of troops to suppress the rebellion. The demands upon his time and the solicitation of his supporters were not to avert war, save the Union, or suppress the rebels, but to lavishly ladle out patronage. Not only do Stanton, Schurz, and Seward testify to this, but Mr. Lincoln himself said:

"'I seem like one sitting in a palace assigning apartments to importunate applicants while the structure is on fire and likely soon to perish.'

"With this disaster in prospect we find, as late as March 12 five of his Cabinet ministers voting against provisioning Fort Sumter and only one for it. Mr. Lincoln let them determine his course. And yet Buchanan was 'weak' and his Cabinet a 'nest of traitors' because they had not relieved and supported Maj. Anderson! As late as July 16, 1861, Stanton wrote to Buchanan:

"'Your administration's policy, in reference to both Sumter and Pickens, is fully vindicated by the course of the present administration for 40 days after the inauguration of Lincoln.'"

Now, let me call to the stand one of America's greatest statesmen, also a Pennsylvanian, Jeremiah S. Black. No man has yet risen in any forum and challenged either his ability, his patriotism, or his grasp of public affairs. Judge Black says:

"The proofs of James Buchanan's great ability and his eminent public services are found on every page of his country's history from 1830 to 1861. During all that long period he steadily, faithfully, and powerfully sustained the principles of free constitutional government. This Nation never had a truer friend, nor its laws a defender who would more cheerfully have given his life to save them from violation. No man was ever slandered so brutally. His life was literally lied away. In the last months of his administration he devoted all the energies of his mind and body to the great duty of saving the Union, if possible, from dissolution and civil war. He knew all the dangers to which it was exposed, and it would, therefore, be vain to say that he was not alarmed for his country; but he showed no sign of unmanly fear on his own account. He met all his vast responsibilities as fairly as any Chief Magistrate we ever had. In no case did he shrink from or attempt to evade them. The accusation of timidity and indecision is most preposterous. His faults were all of another kind; his resolutions once formed were generally immovable to a degree that bordered on obstinacy. On every matter of great importance he deliberated cautiously, and sometimes tried the patience of his friends by refusing to act until he had made up an opinion which he could live and die by. These characteristics explain the fact that his whole political life, from the time he entered Congress until he retired from the Presidency—all his acts, speeches, and papers—have a consistency which belongs to those of no other American statesman. He never found it necessary to cross his own path or go back upon his pledges."

After all has been said this remains true. Mr. Buchanan was the son of Pennsylvania, and the people of Pennsylvania have naturally been, more than all others, sensitive and careful in estimating his character and career. His errors have been our regret, his virtues our glory. For a full half century Mr. Buchanan's public career had been weighed, scanned, and inspected by Pennsylvania's ablest jurists, publicists, and historians, and the verdict rendered by the unanimous vote of both houses of the people's representatives in the year of the semicentennial anniversary of his retirement from public life took the form of an act to take over and maintain as a public park his beautiful Wheatland estate adorned with a monument to his memory.

Who now will say, except those who have already said it, that it is a seemly thing to sneer at the verdict of the loyal and rock-ribbed Republican Commonwealth upon the career of its great Democratic son? Who is there to justify, except those who have already sought to justify, the message to the people of Pennsylvania by the Senate of the United States that he whom they so highly esteemed as to make his home a public shrine shall be publicly dishonored by refusing to a loving woman, who herself bore with instinctive and unexcelled grace the important social responsibilities of the Executive Home, the small privilege of a few feet of land whereon may be executed her last and solemn wish?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I propose to discuss this joint resolution from two aspects, the first a minor one, it is true, and yet one that I think ought to have the consideration of the Senate. It was referred to by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] in the opening of his remarks in his reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], where the Senator from Massachusetts suggested that the $100,000 which will be utilized for the erection of this monument at this particular time, if the joint resolution shall pass, might be utilized in the purchase of liberty bonds to help carry on the war. The Senator from Pennsylvania properly called attention to the fact that if the joint resolution did not pass and this condition in the will was not fulfilled the $100,000 would go to the residuary legatees, and they might or might not invest the proceeds in the purchase of liberty bonds.

But, Mr. President, I want to call attention to this fact: We have very recently enacted legislation creating the Finance Corporation and the Capital Issues Committee, where a corporation, municipal or private, desiring to issue bonds in excess of $100,000, must first get the permission of that corporation. The purpose and reason for that is that in this time of war we should mobilize our resources and use our money for the purpose of helping to win the war, and that all nonessential industries to the greatest extent possible should be suspended.

If that was good reasoning at the time Congress adopted that policy it is a very good reason for not passing the joint resolution now, because, among other things, the passage of the resolution operates as a license to expend $100,000 in an absolutely nonessential thing that will require money, that will require labor, that will require material, which if the joint resolution does not pass might be utilized for some purpose in connection with the war.

But, Mr. President, that is only a minor consideration, because the real question, the all-important question, is whether the Senate shall by the passage of this resolution go upon record and say that Mr. Buchanan's services were so valuable and noteworthy that he is entitled to the great mark of distinction that his statue shall be placed in what will be the most prominent park probably in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, to my mind it is absolutely immaterial whether this $100,000 comes out of the Treasury of the United States, except for the reason that it might be better used in this time of war, or whether it comes from private sources, for I have taken the position in the past, and I believe it is a correct position, that we never should, either by direct appropriation or in any other way, authorize or provide for the erection of any monument in the city of Washington except where distinguished services have been rendered that warrant the erection of a monument. The moment that we authorize a monument, the moment that we permit some one to provide a benefaction to erect a monument not based upon that proposition, we cheapen the monument to Lincoln, we cheapen the monuments to Hancock, to Grant, to Garfield, and to all of those other great statesmen and great warriors, monuments of whom adorn the city of Washington.

But aside from that, Mr. President, in spite of all of the apologies that are made—and the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] from beginning to end was an apology for Mr. Buchanan—in spite of all that, no reason has been given by any Senator why a statue should be permitted to be erected to Mr. Buchanan.

I can not vote for this joint resolution, Mr. President, because in voting for it I should vote to honor a man who during his term as President, however conscientious he might have been, invited the destruction of this Republic; a man who, if he had been President during the four years that Lincoln was President, would have permitted the destruction of this Republic. Men may apologize, friends may apologize, but that is the cold fact that can not be gainsaid.

The Senator from Pennsylvania quoted at great length from George Ticknor Curtis, one of the biographers of Mr. Buchanan. The Senator from Pennsylvania, however, did not state, as the fact is, that George Ticknor Curtis was, and had been for years, a very close personal friend of Mr. Buchanan, and a political friend as well. That is so well recognized that in the encyclopedia giving the bibliography with reference to Mr. Buchanan, that fact is stated, so that the reader will not be misled by reading the works of Mr. Curtis upon the life of Buchanan. To illustrate, I have before me the Encyclopædia Britannica, and in the notes I find this:

See George Ticknor Curtis, The Life of James Buchanan (two volumes, New York, 1883), the standard biography; Curtis, however, was a close personal and political friend, and his work too eulogistic.

Mr. President, I have been amazed at some things that have been said upon this floor during this debate, and especially with reference to the attempted comparisons that have been made between Lincoln and Buchanan. The Senator from Pennsylvania, if I understood him correctly, attempted to make an argument to the effect that the views of Buchanan and Lincoln in the late months of 1860 and the early months of 1861 were identical. Why, Mr. President, every schoolboy knows better than that; every schoolboy knows that the election of Mr. Lincoln in November, 1860, gave notice to the South that the views of Mr. Buchanan would not prevail when Mr. Lincoln became President.

It needs no biographer of either Mr. Buchanan or Mr. Lincoln to demonstrate that; we have but to read the history of the times; to read of the journey of Mr. Lincoln from Springfield to Washington—and the Senator from Pennsylvania referred to some of the speeches that Mr. Lincoln then made—and there is no difficulty in determining what the people of this country, North and South, believed as to what the general policy of Mr. Lincoln would be; that they knew it would be contrary to the policy that Mr. Buchanan had followed.

In that connection I want to read very briefly from the last inaugural message of Mr. Buchanan and the first inaugural message of Mr. Lincoln. Let us see if there was in their policies with reference to this great question anything that was identical, except the desire upon the part of all concerned to avoid conflict, if it could be avoided, and still save the Union. I shall read from Buchanan's message of December, 1860, but before I do so I wish to reply to a statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], to the effect that the views of Mr. Buchanan at that time were the views of the majority of the people of this country. I call attention to the fact that the quotation that I am about to read from the message of Mr. Buchanan was after Mr. Lincoln had been elected; was after the people of the United States had spoken; was after it was well understood, North and South, that the views entertained by Mr. Buchanan as an individual were not the views of the people of the United States. Mr. Buchanan was entitled to have his individual views, but he was exercising the office of President of the United States, representing a people, and it can not be said that in his message in December, 1860, he was merely expressing the majority sentiment of that time. He said:

Without descending to particulars, it may be safely asserted that the power to make war against a State is at variance with the whole spirit and intent of the Constitution. Suppose such a war should result in the conquest of a State; how are we to govern it afterwards? Shall we hold it as a Province and govern it by despotic power? In the nature of things, we could not by physical force control the will of the people and compel them to elect Senators and Representatives to Congress and to perform all the other duties depending upon their own volition and required from the free citizens of a free State as a constituent member of the Confederacy. But if we possessed this power, would it be wise to exercise it under existing circumstances? The object would doubtless be to preserve the Union. War would not only present the most effectual means of destroying it, but would banish all hope of its peaceful reconstruction. Besides, in the fraternal conflict a vast amount of blood and treasure would be expended, rendering future reconciliation between the States impossible.

Mr. Buchanan at that time took the position, it is true, that the State had no right, as he believed, to secede; but at the same time he took the view, and he so informed the South, that if they did secede the United States Government had no power to prevent them—an invitation to them upon the part of the President of the United States to secede from the Union.

Mr. President, I do not know what might have been the result had Mr. Lincoln been President during the time that Mr. Buchanan was President; but it is possible that if we had had a Lincoln as President of the United States from 1856 to 1860, that awful war might have been averted; but when the President of the United States said to those who were contemplating rebellion against their flag that the Government of the United States was powerless to prevent them, was it not a direct invitation to bring on the situation that afterwards developed?

Compare the quotation that I have read from Mr. Buchanan, in December, 1860, with Mr. Lincoln's inaugural message, three months later, wherein, speaking to the South, he said:

In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you; you can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to "preserve, protect, and defend it."

Mr. President, in some of the apologies that have been made for Mr. Buchanan it has been said that Mr. Buchanan was willing to use the Army and the Navy to protect Government property; it is said, if I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania correctly, that if the South had fired upon Fort Sumter when Mr. Buchanan was President, he, too, would have defended it; but, Mr. President, Mr. Buchanan, as President of the United States, would not have prevented by force a State seceding from the Union. And if the States had a right to secede, or if we could not prevent them from seceding, how could Federal laws have operated throughout the seceding States?

So, Mr. President, from every standpoint, while Mr. Buchanan may have been conscientious and may not have taken the position that he did in the hope of future political preferment, while he may not have been disloyal, there was nothing in Mr. Buchanan's life as President of the United States which entitles him to any mark of distinction at the hands of the American people.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has very exhaustively discussed Mr. Buchanan's record from the most authoritative sources. I shall only refer to two sources, and I do so because, in passing upon this joint resolution, we ought to represent the views of the American people. Do the American people desire to confer a mark of distinction upon Mr. Buchanan by erecting a monument to him? The American people have formed their opinions of Mr. Buchanan from the histories that have been written, and many of them have formed their opinions from the standard encyclopedias. It so happens that in both of the standard encyclopedias that I have before me—the Encyclopædia Britannica and the International—the writers of both articles are extremely friendly to Mr. Buchanan; nevertheless they have been fair and have given the facts; but to show that there has been no prejudice upon their part against Mr. Buchanan, I wish first to quote the concluding paragraph of the article in the Encyclopædia Britannica, which states:

His mistakes as President have been so emphasized as to obscure the fact that he was a man of unimpeachable honesty, of the highest patriotism, and of considerable ability.

No one will claim, with that conclusion, that the writer of the article was prejudiced against Mr. Buchanan. Now, then, let us very briefly review the body of the article itself. I quote:

His high moral character, the breadth of his legal knowledge, and his experience as Congressman, Cabinet member, and diplomat would have made Buchanan an excellent President in ordinary times; but he lacked the soundness of judgment, the self-reliance, and the moral courage needed to face a crisis.

Yet we are asked to erect a monument to him by the passage of this joint resolution.

At the beginning of his administration he appointed Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, Territorial governor of Kansas, and Frederick P. Stanton, of Tennessee, secretary, and assured them of his determination to adhere to the popular sovereignty principle. He soon began to use his influence, however, to force the admission of Kansas into the Union under the proslavery Lecompton constitution, contrary to the wishes of the majority of the settlers. Stanton was removed from office for opposing the scheme and Walker resigned in disgust. This change of policy was doubtless the result of timidity rather than of a desire to secure reelection by gaining the favor of the southern Democracy. Under the influence of Howell Cobb, of Georgia, Secretary of the Treasury, and Jacob Thompson, of Mississippi, Secretary of the Interior, the President was convinced that it was the only way to avoid civil war. Federal patronage was freely used to advance the Lecompton measure and the compromise English bill and to prevent Douglas's election to the Senate in 1858. Some of these facts were brought out in the famous Covode investigation, conducted by a committee of the House of Representatives in 1860. The investigation, however, was very partisan in character, and there is reason to doubt the constitutional power of the House to make it, except as the basis for an impeachment trial.

The call issued by the South Carolina Legislature just after the election of Lincoln for a State convention to decide upon the advisability of secession brought forward the most serious question of Buchanan's administration. The part of his annual message of the 4th of December, 1860, dealing with it is based upon a report prepared by Attorney General Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania. He argued that a State had no legal right to secede, but denied that the Federal Government had any power forcibly to prevent it. At the same time it was the duty of the President to call out the Army and Navy of the United States to protect Federal property or to enforce Federal laws.

Oh, Mr. President, had Lincoln been a man of the weakness of Buchanan, had Lincoln lacked moral courage, as Buchanan lacked it, where would our country have been to-day? Instead of 48 States, God only knows how many separate sovereignties we might have had in this hour and God only knows what the result might have been upon the world's civilization in this hour of peril to the entire world, whereas, with 48 States and one Union, we are now prepared, with our allies across the sea, to preserve our own liberty and the liberties of the world.

I wish next, Mr. President, to quote from the International Encyclopedia, and that, too, as we all know, is read from one end of this country to the other. I shall merely quote one paragraph——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he can state the authors of the two articles referred to?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not. The encyclopedia merely gives the bibliography, and I have not the names.

Reading from the International Encyclopedia:

In the Executive chair he—

Speaking of Buchanan—

In the Executive chair he was apparently subservient to southern politicians and allowed their threats of secession to influence his actions. After Lincoln's election Buchanan was more than ever anxious to stifle the slavery discussion, and in his last message to Congress pointedly charged the North with having brought about the existing crisis in national affairs by a discussion which had "produced its malign influence on the slaves and inspired them with a vague idea of freedom." While holding that the States had no right to secede, he added that the Nation had no power to prevent it; he said it could not employ force, except upon the demand of the lawful authorities of the State, and in South Carolina no such authority then existed.

That is the opinion of the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States concerning Mr. Buchanan. However men may apologize for him, however conscientious he may have been, that is no answer to the objections which have been raised and no argument why a monument should be erected to him in Meridian Hill Park.

Oh, Mr. President, in this hour of stress of this Republic we have many men who are conscientious, but if to-day they express sentiments against the Union as injurious to our flag as Buchanan's sentiments were injurious to the Union then, we do not erect monuments to them now, but we send them to penitentiaries.

At this point, Mr. President, I am reminded that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and I have had a case recently brought to our attention where an officer of the United States

Army, believing that he had conscientious scruples against fighting his own kin, attempted to resign from the Army. There was no effort upon his part to injure the United States, but he stated that, with his convictions, he did not feel certain that he could perform his duty to his country as he felt an officer of the United States Army ought to perform it. That man, Mr. President, was tried by court-martial. No question was raised as to his conscientiousness, but he was found guilty, and sentenced to 25 years' imprisonment, while now by this joint resolution we propose to erect a monument to a man who, as I said in the beginning, if his policies had been adopted, would have destroyed the Union.

That brings me, Mr. President, to this—and it is the real foundation for the reason, as it seems to me, why no Senator from any section of our country should consider for a moment voting for this joint resolution. All of us have in the past been making patriotic speeches, as all of us will do in the future, speeches urging loyalty to our Government and our flag upon the part of every one of our people. Without attempting to speak for the conscience of others, if I voted for this joint resolution, with Mr. Buchanan's record as it is, I could not in the future make a patriotic speech urging my audience to be loyal in thought and word and deed and act to our Government in this war without feeling that they would have the right to challenge my sincerity and say to me, "If that is your view now, why did you vote to permit the erection of a monument in the city of Washington to a man who believed that this Union could not be kept one and inseparable by the force of arms?"

Mr. President, this is not a question of politics; it is not a question of the North or of the South. It seems to me that men from the South should be just as ready to deny a mark of distinction to Mr. Buchanan as men from the North. As has already been said upon this floor, we can admire and we can honor Robert E. Lee, who because of his views went with his State and faced danger and took the chances of success or of failure; but let me say that, as I have read the life of Robert E. Lee, if Robert E. Lee had been President of the United States from 1856 to 1860, Robert E. Lee never, never would have delivered such a message to the Congress of the United States in December, 1860, after the election of Lincoln, as Buchanan delivered. Robert E. Lee would have resigned the office of President before he would have done that.

So I am opposed to this joint resolution. While I do not think under any circumstances that Mr. Buchanan's record is such as entitles him to a mark of distinction here, I am especially opposed to it at this time because of the effect it will have upon the country for the Congress of the United States to commend actions, if not disloyal in their motive, disloyal in their effect.

Mr. President, if there were a statue of Mr. Buchanan in the city of Washington to-day, and a father and his son came here and gazed upon that statue, and the little boy should say, "Papa, whose statue is that?" and the father should answer, "Why, that is Buchanan, my son." "Well, who was Buchanan?" "Why, Buchanan was a President of the United States." "When was he President, papa?" "Oh, he was President just before Mr. Lincoln was President." "Well, papa, was Buchanan a man like Lincoln?" "No, son; no; if Lincoln had been a man like Buchanan, son, there would not have been any United States of America to-day." "Well, then, father, why do they erect a monument to a man like that?" And the father would be compelled to say: "Son, I do not know. I do know that now we are sending men to prison for things just like Buchanan did."

Mr. President, I do not think this joint resolution should pass.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, during my service in the Senate I have been compelled to witness the erection of statue after statue through the influence of hyphenated Americans, while the truly great Americans, who created this Nation and maintained it through blood and fire sleep unrecognized and unnamed. I have seen erected at the entrance of our War College a statue which represents autocracy in its most hated form—that autocracy which we repudiated in 1776; that autocracy which, coupled with the greatest militarism in the world, to-day is cutting the throats of our soldiers, ravishing the young and the beautiful and the true, and enslaving whole nations.

I have never objected to the sight of monuments to the great generals and leaders of the Confederacy, though, unlike the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] I am unable to square my sense of honor and integrity and fidelity with the honor of one who received his sword from his country and used that blade to destroy his country; but I am aware that in those days, in certain sections of the country, at least, State loyalty was deeper seated, more firmly rooted, than loyalty to the Union, and so I, for one, am inclined to be lenient. And so, Mr. President, have the sons whose fathers were murdered and starved to death at Andersonville seen erected a monument to Mr. Wirz, not an American, but a Hun of the Huns, with cruelty and brutality as great as has ever been manifested in this great world war of to-day. But, Mr. President, I had hoped that while we should harbor no resentment, if we everywhere beheld the statues of those who sought to destroy our Union, we should at least be spared from having forced upon us, in the most imposing and elevated spot in the city of Washington, the statue not of a patriot of the South but of a copperhead of the North. You may honor your southern generals; honor your men who sought to destroy the Union; but you ought not to impose a northern copperhead upon the northern people who saved the Union. We have a right, Mr. President, to have a great degree of sensitiveness upon that subject.

I have listened to the eloquent statements of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I am wondering if any representative of that great State would have dared in 1865 to defend the name of James Buchanan. His sentiments, expressed throughout all his official life prior to the great Civil War, were sentiments of disloyalty, not only to the citizens of the State of Pennsylvania but toward the entire North.

Notwithstanding his disloyalty, we are to erect a monument to his memory. The monument to President Grant, who battled to save the life of the Nation, is hidden away down in the Mall here somewhere. The monument to President Buchanan, whose disloyalty made the Civil War possible, is to be given the most prominent place in the city. We have no monument to the great Alexander Hamilton, whose eloquent utterances through the long months preceding the adoption of the Constitution contributed toward making this great Nation. We have no monument to the hundreds of gallant American soldiers and American statesmen who have contributed toward the preservation of this great country. But when some hyphenated American wishes to create a halo of glory, not to Americanism but around his own racial feelings, we readily grant him a space whereby he may put the statue of some one, who may be a foreigner or a half foreigner, upon the public parks.

Mr. President, I think the time is at hand when we should declare that we are an American Nation and an American people; that we are not a hyphenated or heterogeneous people. I think the time has arrived when, instead of its being a greater honor to be a hyphenated American citizen, it is a greater honor to be just a plain American; and I think the time has come when, by law and the actions of the American people, we should, once for all, say to every immigrant: "The moment you set your feet upon American soil, the moment you take an oath before God to support the Constitution of the United States and to renounce all allegiance to any other country, we demand your heart loyalty as well as your lip loyalty."

Mr. President, I have no feeling against those who fought for the "lost cause" and who still believe they were right, even though they seek to perpetuate that belief in erecting statues to their own citizens and representatives of their own States who sought to destroy the Union, but I submit to them that it is hardly just that they should reach beyond their own States into the loyal North and select therefrom citizens whose loyalty was at least questionable. I can understand to a certain extent how they could support a joint resolution of this kind, but I confess that I can not understand how any loyal Northern man could vote for that resolution.

Yes, I have feeling on the subject. To-day the U-boat which the Secretary of the Navy and the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs declared some 10 days ago had been driven away from the Atlantic coast is taking its toll. Twenty fair American ships have gone down, stung by this rattlesnake of the sea. Many brave boys have gone to the bottom of the ocean. We are in a great battle, but we pause, pause in our patriotism, to palliate disloyalty by erecting statues to disloyal Northern men. Maybe this will be imposed upon us. I believe it will be. Maybe the German Zeppelin may yet sweep over our fair city. If it ever does, there would, in my mind, be but one spot in this fair land where a bomb could be properly dropped—the spot where disloyalty sits throned in the seat of national respect and honor.

Mr. President, I had hoped at least, for the honor, for the loyalty, for the patriotism of the North, for those whose fathers, brothers and sons died for this great country during that civil conflict, that there would not be a Northern vote cast for a joint resolution to erect a statue of James Buchanan, the northern copperhead.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to indulge in the impassioned oratory to which we have listened on the part of those who are opposing this joint resolution. I want simply to occupy a few minutes in a plain statement of my position so far as the erection of this monument is concerned.

I recall very vividly the days of James Buchanan. I carried banners, before I was old enough to vote, on which were inscribed the names of Fremont and Dayton, and I did all I could as a boy to prevent the success of the Democratic ticket in that election; but the Democratic ticket prevailed and Mr. Buchanan was elected President of the United States. I have not been as careful a student of history as the Senator from Massachusetts, and perhaps not as careful as the Senator from North Dakota, but I was conversant during those four fateful years with the situation in this country, and I was fully cognizant of the circumstances and the difficulties that surrounded the President of the United States. It matters not what Senators may say; the fact remains, and will remain as long as history lasts, that Mr. Lincoln took practically the same view of the southern movement against the Union that James Buchanan did, and that until Sumter was fired upon Mr. Lincoln indulged the same hope that Mr. Buchanan did, that we might be saved from civil war. Of course, when the overt act was committed, there was nothing to be done but to subdue the South and to save the Union from destruction.

I have no doubt but that Mr. Buchanan made mistakes. Most men in this world have made mistakes. I have no doubt but that Mr. Buchanan, in his great desire to prevent civil war, did some things that we would call at the present time, and that might well have been called at that time, acts of weakness and irresolution. But that Mr. Buchanan was a traitor to his country, that he desired to see the Republic dismembered, and two nations, one beside the other, here established I do not believe, nor does any man who remembers those days preceding the Civil War; and I say that it ill becomes any man in this Chamber or elsewhere to denounce James Buchanan as having been disloyal to the Government that he was sworn to protect. I certainly shall not be guilty of that offense, because I know better; and I know better because of the fact that I was interested in politics then, as I am now, and tried to acquaint myself with every movement on the part of the South and on the part of the North preceding that terrible conflict.

Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on the Library, which reported this joint resolution. If it were not for that fact, I would not say a word to-day. The first joint resolution came to the Senate from the House of Representatives on December 18, 1916, almost two years ago. It was considered by the committee, then composed of the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS; the Senator from Georgia, Mr. SMITH; the Senator from Nevada, Mr. Newlands; the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BECKHAM; the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. Broussard; the Senator from Iowa, Mr. CUMMINS; the Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. GALLINGER; and the Senator from Delaware, Mr. du Pont. It was given careful consideration. The valiant soldier, the former Senator from Delaware, Mr. du Pont, whose record as a defender of the Union needs no apology here or elsewhere, and a neighbor, in a sense, of Mr. Buchanan, did not raise any objections as to Mr. Buchanan's loyalty or disloyalty; but the committee unanimously reported the joint resolution. It did not pass the Senate at that time. I believe twice since that time it has been reported from the same committee by a unanimous vote, and it is now before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. President, some of my best friends have more than once suggested to me that I am not wholly reconstructed, so far as the Civil War is concerned. I think I had as much bitterness in my heart during those years as most men—some of which, perhaps, I have not yet entirely gotten rid of—toward the effort of the South to destroy the Union; but there are more recent events that might well engage our attention, rather than to rake up the record of James Buchanan, which was written so many years ago. As I look yonder at the gallery of the Senate the face of Aaron Burr is looking down on me. Following that series of busts around I discover the face of Andrew Johnson, who came within one vote of being impeached by this body as being a disloyal President. I go through Statuary Hall and I see some evidences that might well excite the passions of northern men if they felt disposed to rake up the embers of the Civil War, but they pass unnoticed. All the artillery of eloquence and denunciation is reserved for James Buchanan, who was President of the United States in 1856. I do not sympathize with that feeling, and I do not believe the Senate, when it comes to vote, will sympathize with the feeling that has been so forcibly, and to some extent bitterly, expressed to-day.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], while he started out a few days ago to suggest that Mr. Buchanan was disloyal, said to-day that he did not charge disloyalty upon Mr. Buchanan, but he charged weakness and irresolution, and perhaps that characterization may be to a large extent true. I can not believe that Mr. Buchanan meant to have this Nation of ours dismembered. I can not believe that he had any such feeling in his heart, and I do not believe the Senate of the United States will make a record of that kind. I do not sympathize with the eulogies that have been pronounced to-day upon men educated at the expense of the Government who had taken an oath to support the Government, and yet who in the time of stress and strain deserted the Government and fought on the side of the Confederacy. I do not sympathize with eulogies of that kind, but I have no disposition to-day to revive those memories. They are bitter memories. Some of us went through that period and knew all about them, and so I pass unnoticed allusions to Gen. Lee and to others who did such valiant service for their States, but who did it for the purpose of establishing another government in opposition to the one that they had sworn to defend and support.

Mr. President, I was greatly impressed by the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]—a matter that I had known before, but had forgotten—that by a unanimous vote of both houses of the legislature the great Republican State of Pennsylvania has recognized James Buchanan to the extent that it has purchased the beautiful estate, Wheatland, of which he himself was so fond, and has made it a memorial at which the citizens of Pennsylvania can meet and recall the services of the man whom they honor and respect, whether we do or not.

Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say. I rose to justify my vote as a member of the Committee on the Library, thrice cast in favor of a joint resolution of this kind, and to say that no man can fairly charge me with infidelity to the principles that I inculcated before I was old enough to cast a vote—fidelity to the Government, support of the Constitution and the Union, and opposition to every man and every party that is in favor of disloyalty now or that has been in favor of disloyalty in the past. I do not believe that the action of the Government of the United States in surrendering a few feet of land in yonder beautiful park for the placing of a monument by one of the loveliest women that ever graced the White House and who offers this testimonial because of the love she had for her uncle can possibly be construed as anything that the loyal, liberty-loving people of this country will not approve; and for that reason I shall cast my vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat, with his permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who has had long experience here, if it is customary in bills for the erection of these monuments to specify particular parks in which they shall be placed; and if not, why is this particular park selected for this particular monument?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not answer that question definitely. I recall the fact that a few years ago we removed a statue that was on New York Avenue and specified that it should be placed in another portion of the city, and it was so placed. I recall that.

Mr. KENYON. I had understood—I may be in error—that the bills generally provided that the monument should be placed on some public ground.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is true, as a rule.

Mr. KENYON. Is this the park that is on Sixteenth Street?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is on Sixteenth Street just above Florida Avenue.

Mr. KENYON. There are no trees in this park, are there? It is mostly gravel?

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President; there are not any trees, so that the vandalism that has recently taken place in these other parks will not be committed there.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me that it would be a better place to put these buildings that are going up in the parks where trees are being removed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course that is a matter of opinion, Mr. President. This park has been bought. It is being beautified. By the unanimous consent of those who know more about those matters than I do, it will be one of the most beautiful parks in all the world. Maybe it is not an appropriate place; I do not know about that; but, after all, a little corner of the northeastern portion of that park has been suggested, I think, by the artists of the city, and I do not think it will do any harm to put the statue there.

Mr. KENYON. From what I have seen of that park—I pass by it every day—it seems to me it ought to be disposed of and the money put in the Public Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is another opinion that is a mere opinion. That park was purchased after a long investigation on the part of both Houses of Congress, and it was decided that that beautiful spot, containing about 12 acres, ought not to be given over to cheap houses or apartment houses but that it ought to be reserved as a park, and both Houses of Congress gave their assent to that. The money was appropriated, and it has been bought, and it is being beautified. I do not think there is any possibility of selling it to anybody.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, sitting here and listening to this discussion, I almost felt that I was in the position of the walls of Jericho when the Israelites marched around them with their music, with their timbrels and cymbals, and I doubted at one time whether it would be safe for me to vote for this joint resolution, but I have concluded that as a veteran of the Civil War it would be safe for me even in the midst of all these contentions to vote for the joint resolution.

The proposition seems quite simple. It has been my aim since the great Civil War was over to do all in my power to smooth out and cure all the acerbities, all the harshness, what you might call the bad blood, that arose from that great war, and I am glad to see that we have become year by year a homogeneous Nation not only in blood but homogeneous in loyalty and faithfulness to the flag.

Now, I am not here to defend Mr. Buchanan; I do not think he measured up to the situation; but when Senators on the floor call him a copperhead I want to say to them that whatever else his failings were he was not a copperhead in the sense that Vallandigham and others of his kin were.

I remember those critical days at the beginning of the Civil War. There were many people—good, loyal people—in the North who deplored secession and doubted our right to keep the Union together by force of arms. As big a man as Horace Greeley said in his great paper, "Let the wayward sisters depart in peace." It was not until the Confederates fired on Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor that our Nation throughout the entire North responded with one heart and one soul in favor of the preservation of the Union. Up to that time there were many who doubted. A convention of Union men was held immediately before the war, trying to hatch up some plan by which they could avoid war and preserve the Union in some shape, or, if not preserve the Union, at all events avoid war. There were many good people at the North in those days before we got into the war who looked at the situation in the same light that Mr. Buchanan did. I think they were all mistaken. I think Mr. Buchanan was mistaken.

But what is the situation? One of the great poets of New England has said:

> Let the dead Past bury its dead!
> Act, act in the living present!
> Heart within, and God o'erhead!

It seems some of the Senators from New England have forgotten this beautiful sentiment of the New England poet.

Mr. President, many long years have passed since the Civil War, and why should we attempt at this late day to stir up the embers of that war and segregate one particular victim of all the people in the land? What have we done? Men who were members of the Army of the United States departed from their duty as officers of the United States Army and took up arms and fought for the Confederacy for four long years. What have we done with them? We have taken them back in full grace and fellowship.

I remember years ago when I was a Member of the House of Representatives one of the prominent generals of the South, Gen. Wheeler, was in the House. He was one of the leading cavalry officers of the South, a brave, patriotic man. I got thoroughly acquainted with him. He was a man with a noble and most generous heart. What did we do after the Spanish War? One day here—and I voted for the bill—we took two old Confederate generals, Gen. Wheeler and Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, and we took two Union generals, Gen. Hawley and Gen. Osterhaus, one of the best and bravest of all the German officers we had in the Civil War, and we put those four men side by side on the retired list of the United States Army.

Yonder in Statuary Hall there is a statue of the commanding general of the Confederate forces. We have buried the past as to all those men. We have obliterated it. Now, having done all this, why make this single son of Pennsylvania the one solitary victim of the remnant of that hate which was engendered during the days of the Civil War? I protest against it.

Mr. President, whatever faults Mr. Buchanan may have had, whatever mistakes he may have made, he was not, in my opinion, at heart disloyal, nor was he, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has said, a copperhead. He was mistaken, but no more mistaken than was old Horace Greeley, and who doubted Greeley's loyalty and patriotism? At this late day, when we have granted atonement, as it were, to all the men who were engaged in the Civil War, when we have obliterated all discriminations, when we have come to regard ourselves as one people in soul and in spirit, why should we take one of the men who was President of the United States, although in a moment he may have perhaps erred, and discriminate and spot him out and say, "Here is one solitary rebel whom we want to leave as a specimen for the future"?

This is not the case of the Government erecting this statue. A niece of Mr. Buchanan, Harriet Lane, and I remember the name very well, because one of the ships in the Gulf Squadron where I served in the Army had the name Harriet Lane—Harriet Lane, the niece of Mr. Buchanan, was the mistress of the White House during his administration, and before she died she saw fit to bequeath a legacy of $100,000 for the erection of a monument to her uncle. It is inscrutable to me how any man in his heart can say to the spirit of that kind-hearted woman, that noble woman, "Although you have given $100,000 for this statue, we will not use the money; we will allow the legacy to lapse; we want to spot your uncle beyond anybody else in this broad land as a copperhead, as a rebel."

I was very much amused at the side track the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] entered into. He had a good deal to say against hyphenates, and I am a little surprised at that, because hyphenates have done as much as anybody to make his own State of North Dakota a flourishing State. Then, he was worried about the submarines taking so many ships. I want to call his attention to the fact, and the Senate will pardon me for it, that a large part of those ships were Norwegian ships.

I want to call his attention further to the fact that upward of a million tons of Norwegian shipping are now engaged in the trade and commerce of the United States, and while I am not here to justify, as all who have served here with me know, the conduct of some of these hyphenated Americans, yet to group them all in a class and to put the brand of disloyalty on them passes my comprehension.

I am waiting and pining anxiously for future battles in Europe, and then I can imagine how proud I will be when I can go to my fellow Senators with a morning paper and say, "Here is Ohlson, here is Nelson, here is Larsen, here is Erickson, who fell on the battle fields in defense of the American flag." I hope that day will come, and I know it will come, and it will be the proudest moment of my life.

The spirit that has been manifested here to-day against this statue of Mr. Buchanan is an intolerable spirit, to my mind, born of an unregenerate heart, a heart that has not come to the conclusion that the Civil War is over.

It is strange, Mr. President, but somehow or other it is easier for us who were in that great war to forget and forgive than some of you younger men who never smelled powder in that war. Oh, how belligerent you are, especially when it comes to gunning for the statue of one of our Presidents!

Your patriotism and eagerness for war find its vent in that conduct.

It is said that when the Chinese make war they do like the Israelites did around the walls of Jericho, they travel around the enemy's fortress beating their gongs and blowing their horns and keep on repeating the performance until by and by the fortress is expected to fall. Now, in spite of all the eloquence that I have heard to-day, Mr. President, it is my intention to vote for this joint resolution, and I hope that nobody in this audience will question my patriotism or loyalty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should not have said another word upon the subject had not the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] reminded me that in my own State we have a great many hyphenated Americans, and that he would undoubtedly feel a spirit of pride in finding upon the battle fields of France the names of Nelson and Ohlson and Larsen. I can say to the Senator yes, and you will find them there to-day, and we do not find them there to-day as hyphenates. We find them battling as Nelson and Haugen and Ohlson, Americans in heart, in soul, in character, in loyalty to this country above all other countries upon the face of the earth.

What am I pleading for, what I am hoping for, is that the day will come when we will forget all about our foreign ancestry, whether they were Mac's or O's, whether they were Nelsons or Ohlsons. I do not like the term Scotch-Americans. I want them to be just what I know they are, Americans all the way through, and I am casting no discredit upon any of those who came to this country recently, when I say that they are and should be styled Americans just as truly as though their ancestors had come here in the colonial days.

Mr. President, I recognize the feeling of the Senator from Minnesota and his desire to be forgiving. I share in that desire. I may be of those of a generation who never smelt powder that he speaks of, but after all, Mr. President, the sons of the present generation, the Senator will find, will be just as loyal and just as brave upon the fields of battle in France as were their fathers from 1861 to 1865. I think they are demonstrating it to-day, and the insinuation that because some of us did not live or were not able to bear arms in those days we perhaps have not the right to express our convictions of what true American means and what true Americanism means is not well founded.

I am against this joint resolution because I feel in my heart of hearts that this man was disloyal, and I speak advisedly. He was disloyal when he emptied the Treasury of the United States just prior to the war and scattered its moneys among the States of the Confederacy, when he put disloyal men at the head of nearly all the forces, when he sent the troops and the equipment out of the control of the Federal authority, when every act of his official life showed hostility to Northern sentiment against slavery, and his last message to Congress charged the North with being responsible for the nullification sentiments of the South; and I can not find it in my heart to say that all these acts and words were merely manifestations of weakness. I believe they were studied and intended to injure the cause of the Union, but whether it was weakness or disloyalty it is the same to me; we ought not to erect a monument to either the weak or the disloyal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SPANISH WAR AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION PENSIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. In view of the notice I gave on Saturday, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4444) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in the Boxer rebellion in China.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the acting chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KENYON. The Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 9054) has been in conference now since the 5th of April. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina, the acting chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, in the absence of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], why this bill is delayed so long in conference and when it is expected that a report will be made by the conferees?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, we have had several meetings of the conferees, but they have resulted so far in an absolute deadlock. The House is "standing pat" on the price of $2.20 a bushel for wheat, which has already been promulgated by the administration. The Senate conferees have stood for a price of $2.50 per bushel. On a vote or on any kind of proposition it has resulted in the deadlock continuing. Unless there is something done either by this body or by the other, the whole bill will necessarily fail.

I should like to state, in this connection, that on July 1 the appropriations carried in this bill will be necessary for the proper carrying on of the Agricultural Department; and, unless this body takes some further action, I see no hope whatever of reaching anything like an agreement between the two Houses.

I desire to state to the Senate that the other House takes the position that on the price of wheat, which was fixed by the President under authority granted by a previous bill, at $2.20 a bushel at certain markets—32 in number, I believe—for No. 1 Northern, he had reached an understanding with the allies and also a reciprocal agreement with Canada that that would be the basis of like grades for the purpose of supplying the armies and the people who are allied with us in this war. On that ground the conferees on the part of the House have taken a very positive stand and to such an extent that there is no compromise or anything save a deadlock before us.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator what would be the difficulty in making a report on the remainder of the bill? Is that the only item in dispute?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The remainder of the bill has been reported to the House and has been agreed upon; there is nothing in conference save this one item, and upon that it seems the bill will ultimately fail unless the Senate takes some action in reference to the action of its conferees on the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Could not the Senator from South Carolina bring this one proposition in and permit the Senate to again vote on it?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That proposition has been made to the conferees, but it has been voted down by the Senate conferees; so that there is absolutely nothing save some further instruction. I should like to say, in justification of myself as acting chairman of the committee, that after the action in conference I did not feel that I was justified in breaking away from the majority action and coming here and asking for a thing for which they did not vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will wait until the Senator from Kansas yields the floor, and then I will take the floor in my own right and proceed with this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me, as I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he would prefer that action be taken by the Senate before the conference report has been made to the Senate? In other words, from what the Senator has said, I understand that the conferees on the part of the Senate feel that the Senate has so positively passed upon the question that they do not want to yield at all.

There are only two ways to reach the matter. Either the Senate conferees must agree with the House conferees that they will report to the Senate for further instructions or else the Senate itself must take action and directly instruct its conferees. Which would the Senator from South Carolina prefer?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should prefer the latter, because there is no hope of the former.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is nothing for us to do, it seems to me, except to instruct our conferees to agree to the House provision, unless we wish to further insist upon $2.50 wheat. As I understand it, the same reasons that existed when the measure was before the Senate for insisting upon $2.50 wheat scarcely exist at the present time. I voted for $2.50 wheat, and yet, it seems to me, it would be impossible for us to obtain it, when perhaps, as it is claimed, the arguments which we then used do not now exist.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Kansas, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield for the purpose which the Senator from North Dakota states.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. What reason has the Department of Agriculture or anyone else to pass judgment at this time upon the spring-wheat crop? We may have the opportunity to produce the finest crop that has ever been produced, but we may also have an equal opportunity to produce none.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sufficiently expert on the subject to go further than to say that it is claimed—and I thought the suggestion of that fact might bring to us some further information from those who know more about it than I do——

Mr. McCUMBER. There is one little piece of information which I think it would be very well to get before the conferees. I think if Senators would go out a little way into the country here they would find signs reading, "Come to Washington for a minimum wage of $3.85," or something like that, and beside it another notice, which is being posted all over the country, after calling away their laborers, telling the farmers to work day and night in order to produce a good crop. It is the question of labor, the question of what has got to be paid for labor, that is going to determine what the farmer ought to receive for his crop.

SPANISH WAR AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION PENSIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, as indicated by the title of the bill it simply provides for the pensioning of widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or in the Boxer rebellion in China, wars and military operations participated in by this Government at about the same time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how much money does it call for to be appropriated?

Mr. THOMPSON. It will not require a very large amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. How much?

Mr. THOMPSON. From the report of the Department of the Interior, which of course is only an estimate, based on their experience in other wars, the Secretary states to me that the first year there will be about 1,900 pensioners, widows, on the roll; the second year, 6,700; and the third year, 11,500, with an average of one minor child for each allowance. The average annual rate of pension would be $168, making the cost for the first year $319,200, for the second year $1,125,600, and for the third year $1,932,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator might add there that widows who have incomes in excess of $250 a year are not permitted, as I understand, to receive the benefit of this act.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator from Mississippi is correct.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So that only the indigent widows of Spanish-American War soldiers are permitted to participate in this benefaction.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; and also the widows and minor children under 16 years of age of soldiers who participated in the Philippine insurrection, or in the Boxer rebellion in China.

The bill provides that the pension shall be paid only to widows who have net incomes not exceeding $250 per annum. It provides for the payment only of $12 per month and $2 a month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age.

In behalf of this motion, Mr. President, I simply wish to state that the dependent widows and orphans of Spanish-American War soldiers are the only dependent widows and orphans of soldiers of any war in which this country has engaged since the foundation of the Government who have not been amply provided for by legislation of this character.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does this bill distinguish between those who went to the war and those who merely stopped in Georgia on a frolic?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it does. It requires 90 days' service in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It limits the payments to those who went to Cuba, I presume?

Mr. THOMPSON. It provides for the widows and dependent children of those soldiers who had a service of 90 days in the Spanish-American War irrespective of where their service was. There could be no distinction as to service in a bill of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the bill limited to those who went to Cuba or is it proposed to pay those who went into camp and never reached Cuba?

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, 90 days' service is what the bill requires, and there is no distinction as to where the service was or the kind of service performed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then it covers merely camp service. Does not the Senator see a distinction between that kind of service and actual service at the front?

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume technically there would be no distinction; that 90 days' service of a soldier in a camp would be sufficient to bring his widow under the provisions of the bill. These men were volunteers; they offered their services and actually entered the Army; and their wives had to suffer the usual hardships occasioned by their absence in the service. This legislation is of the same character as legislation which has been enacted into law for the widows and minor children of soldiers of all other wars.

I wish to correct what appears to be a misapprehension in regard to this bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMPSON. In just a moment. There seems to be a misunderstanding of the purpose of this bill on the part of some Senators. Spanish-American War veterans are not pensioned by this bill; they are the only veterans who have not asked for a pension; and they are not asking for it now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, there are not many of them who are veterans. There were very few of them who went to war at all; they were practically all in camps here at home, and did not do any fighting.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, I think the Senator is mistaken about that. The statistics of the War Department show that there were 223,235 volunteers who went to the Spanish-American War and something like the same number of Regulars and Marines, making about 400,000 men in all.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I know of a large number of so-called Spanish-American veterans who went to California and who had the pleasure of camping in the parks there for three, four, five, or six months and never crossed the water to the Philippines or saw any service. I presume their widows will receive pensions under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume that instances of that kind happened in the Revolutionary War, in the War of 1812, in the Mexican War, and in the Civil War; but no one has raised such a question when it came to pensioning the dependent widows and orphans of soldiers or even the soldiers themselves of other wars; and why make this discrimination against the widows and orphans of the soldiers of the Spanish-American War? The unselfishness of the Spanish-American soldiers in not asking a pension for themselves should commend itself to all fair-minded men. We are seeking only in a small way to take care of their dependent widows and orphans, a duty we have owed them for 20 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not 10 per cent——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMPSON. Just a moment; one at a time. I will gladly yield to you one at a time all the afternoon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Was there not this difference? Not 10 per cent of the men who were mustered into the service in the Spanish-American War ever went where there was any fighting or ever left their own home States or home country; and therefore they did not fight at all, while in the Civil War 90 per cent of them got into the fight.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken again. I know that about 5,000 young men were mustered in from Kansas, and that most of them actually went to the front, the Twentieth Kansas, under leadership of the late Gen. Funston, winning renown for their valiant services.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. For the RECORD I wish to answer the Senator from Georgia. There were engaged in the Spanish-American War 312,523 men, and there were sent to the Philippine Islands, across the Pacific, and were engaged in the war in the Philippines, 140,038 men.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, how many of them went to Cuba?

Mr. SMOOT. I had those figures here, but I appear to have mislaid them and do not have them at hand now. I can get them in a few moments.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish the Senator would get them; I should like to have them for my own information.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMPSON. Just a moment. The Senator from Tennessee asked me to yield some little time ago, and I now yield to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. There was a considerable number of men in the Spanish-American war who assembled in east Tennessee. I do not think they went farther—a great many of them, at any rate—than that locality, and I was wondering whether their widows were included in the bill?

Mr. THOMPSON. The bill is very plain and explicit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the purpose of the bill to include all those Tennesseeans?

Mr. THOMPSON. It provides for pensions to the dependent widows and orphans of soldiers of the Spanish-American War who had a service of 90 days and were honorably discharged, regardless of whether they were in Tennessee or elsewhere. There could be no fair distinction as to when and where the soldiers served or as to whether they were Tennesseeans or Kansans in a bill of this nature where we are proposing to pension the widows and orphans of all honorably discharged soldiers with 90 days' service to their credit. It would be unfair and unjust to attempt to distinguish between soldiers and the character of service they performed. It is presumed that a soldier always performs the service assigned to him. That is the first duty of a soldier.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can only speak for one regiment that was enlisted, but that did not reach Cuba and did not participate in the fighting. That was the First New Hampshire Regiment. They went to camp somewhere, I think, in the State of Georgia——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At Chickamauga Park.

Mr. GALLINGER. At Chickamauga; and while there there was an epidemic of typhoid fever, which wrecked the health of a very large proportion of those men, and they came home disabled and sick men. Of course they were pensioned, and properly so, and equally are their widows entitled to pension with the soldiers and sailors, as I look at it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume there may have been other camps where there was not any sickness of an extraordinary character like there was at Chickamauga.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say that I am familiar with the case referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am glad to say that it was an exceptional case, and I think it ought to be treated in an exceptional manner.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am somewhat familiar with it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was referring particularly to my own friends in Georgia, who never left Georgia, but were pleasantly situated in camp, had a good time for 90 days, and came back home in better health than they were when they went out. I do not believe in pensioning that class of men. I am talking about my own constituents, and I am not embarrassed in expressing myself. For those who were injured, for the men who were made sick by their service at that camp, no one will vote more than I will; for the men who were wounded in the service, no one will vote more than I will, but I do not see why the man who goes out to a camp for 90 days and has a good time is any more entitled to a pension than the clerk who stays at home in the city.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, this legislation has been delayed for 20 years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope it will be delayed for 20 years more.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not believe it will be delayed for very many hours; I think that this bill has been so long before Congress that it will require but very little discussion to pass it, in view of its meritorious character. Bills similar to this have been in Congress since 1911, and have passed the House of Representatives, whose Members are said to be closer to the people of the country than the members of any other body, three different times. The last time, in the Sixty-fourth Congress, it passed almost unanimously. Not only that, but this bill, or one of a similar nature, has been on the calendar of the Senate on three different occasions. At the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress it passed as in Committee of the Whole, all the amendments were acted upon, and the bill reached the Senate, and the only question remaining was, "Shall the bill pass?" when by the iniquitous rule of the Senate, which we had then and which permitted interminable debate, a filibuster defeated the bill or it would have been passed almost unanimously by the Senate of the United States. At different times 56 Senators have been recorded as favorable to this proposed legislation. Now, it does seem to me that practically a unanimous vote of the House and a favorable expression of a majority of the Senate ought to be controlling. It is at least convincing that the Congress desires to pass the bill.

Mr. President, there is no reason that can be assigned why any exception should be made of the dependent widows and orphans of the Spanish-American War veterans. They are the only widows and orphans who have not been provided for. We only ask a small sum, $12 a month, for the widows, less than half what the Civil War widows are now receiving, and not more than enough to pay the rent in the city of Washington of a single room for a single person.

As I have indicated, the bill will not take a large amount of money; and it certainly will give hope and comfort to the mothers, the wives, and the sisters and brothers whose sons and husbands and brothers are now being sent to the front in this terrible war to know that they live in a country and are citizens of a Nation which will never overlook the rights of the destitute and dependent widows and orphans, should they unfortunately become such.

I submit the motion, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, while, of course, all Senators may not recall the circumstance, it is nevertheless true that I made three separate and distinct efforts to have the Senate consider Order of Business No. 141, to provide for leasing Indian reservations so that the metalliferous minerals might be extracted. I expected to be recognized at this juncture, but I do not wish to place Calendar 141 ahead of the bill which my friend, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], has requested to have considered, because I am in favor of his bill; but, of course, if the Senator's bill should lead to protracted debate, I would not feel warranted in longer withholding my attempt to secure consideration for Calendar 141. The Senator from Kansas stated to-day that on Saturday he gave notice in regard to his bill, but the RECORD shows that I gave my notice on last Thursday, on Wednesday, and on Tuesday.

Now, if this bill can be disposed of without debate——

Mr. McKELLAR. It can not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it can not. The Senator refers to this pension bill, does he?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no; of course it can not be disposed of without debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ASHURST. I do, cheerfully, for a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes—for a suggestion. My suggestion is that we are drifting into wrong legislative procedure when a Senator claims that because he gave notice that he would ask the Senate to consider a bill he has any priority of claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the Senator is without any standing on that ground.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. That is what I wanted to have the RECORD show.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the floor and may proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not so simple-minded as to pretend that I believe a notice is of any value in the Senate. It is not like an attorney serving notice on another attorney as to a legal proceeding, of course; and when I gave my notice the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire stated that a notice gave me no priority, and I agreed with him at that time.

I am addressing myself to gentlemen. Gentlemen are bound to recognize the fact to be that I gave a notice. It is of as much value as the notice which the Senator from Kansas gave, but no more value.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a question only.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator did not give notice that he would move to take up his bill to-day, did he?

Mr. ASHURST. I gave notice, Mr. President, that at the earliest possible opportunity I would seek and demand the attention of the Chair to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Permit me to call attention to the fact that I made my notice specific.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, if it is a question of notice, I cheerfully admit that a notice is of no value. It can not bind anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has the floor; but the pending question is whether or not the Senate will proceed to the consideration of a pension bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President. I thank the Chair for that suggestion, and I am proceeding to argue that question. It is debatable after the hour of 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 141; and that motion is also debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Chair's pardon. Then I will withdraw it and debate the other motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not be a sufficient reason for failing to take up the bill suggested by the Senator from Kansas that there is another bill which we had better take up, and therefore defeat his motion to take up his bill?

Mr. ASHURST. In the first place, I wish to state briefly what the bill is which I seek to have passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Arizona has made a motion to proceed to the consideration of another bill.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I made it and withdrew it, because the Presiding Officer [Mr. KIRBY] correctly held that it was not in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, Mr. President, when Senators are urging the speedy passage of bills it is a natural thing for them to say that they are "war measures." I have refrained from emphasizing the fact that this bill ought to address itself to the Senate as a "war measure." The bill which I seek to have the Senate consider provides that the Secretary of the Interior may grant a permit to any citizen of the United States to prospect upon Indian reservations, and if such citizen discovers metalliferous minerals he may make a location of a mining claim and subsequently take a lease from the Government and proceed to extract the minerals therefrom. The royalty to be paid to the Indian tribes is named in the bill. The lease is to run for 30 years, with recapture clauses, carefully guarded; and at the end of 30 years, if the person holding the lease so desires, he may procure an additional lease of 10 years, and at the expiration of that period another one for 10 years.

Now, Mr. President, every Senator here knows just as well as I that there are certain metals which are necessary in the manufacture of ordnance; that we are importing those metals from other countries; that in some instances those metals are known to exist on Indian reservations. The Indians are not working the mines, and will not do so for years and years to come. Why, then, deprive the United States of the metals that are on these Indian reservations?

The line of cleavage and point of difference on this bill arises in this way—and I wish to be most courteous and respectful toward the views of those Senators who oppose the bill—the opposition, and the only opposition to this bill, arises from Senators who belong to the school of thought that is opposed to "leasing" any "public domain." With them I am in sympathy.

I do not believe in a landlord system for the public domain. The homestead system has built up the great West and has made happy and prosperous communities in all the States. If you revert to a landlord system, I doubt if you will get the strength and the production that you would get from the homestead system. But, Mr. President—and I beg pardon of the Senate, because this is the fourth time I have said it—this bill does not propose to lease any public domain.

I will use the State of Arizona as an example. There are 19,000,000 acres of Indian reservations in Arizona. Some of them have minerals in and upon them. Some have not. The United States Government holds the legal title to these Indian reservations. The equitable title reposes in the Indian tribe. Now, Senators ably and earnestly urge that these Indian reservations should be thrown open to the public.

Mr. President, that can not be done, because a large majority of the Members of this body and of the other body of Congress are opposed to throwing open the Indian reservations, for the reason that the boundaries of these reservations have been fixed; the Indians have occupied them a long time, and each bill opening a reservation would have to be considered separately. Some of the reservations ought not to be opened. Some should be opened. We must discriminate, and we can not by one act, without any discrimination, open all the reservations to mineral exploration and disregard the Indians' rights. The only safe way to do is to pass a bill dealing specifically with the matter. I have no pride of expression, certainly no pride of authorship, and if any Senator can suggest an amendment that will strengthen this bill I shall be glad to have it adopted; but I do say, let us not get crushed between the upper and the nether millstones of these two schools of thought, and thus deprive ourselves of the minerals that are on these reservations.

The Indians' rights are carefully guarded. This bill has been favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs twice; I could call the roll of the members of that committee, and it would disclose that some of the most distinguished Members of the Senate are members of the committee. They have carefully guarded this bill so that the Indians can not suffer loss or injustice, but will get a generous royalty and the Government will get the metals which it so badly needs.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator think that 19,000,000 acres of land is really more land than the Indians of Arizona can ever cultivate or ever handle to any advantage? Would it not be better for the State of Arizona if those so-called Indian reservations were reduced to an amount that would take ample care of every Indian that is in Arizona and then have the great bulk of that land thown open for white people to come there and settle and cultivate and build up the State, and from that land have taxes paid to maintain the institutions of Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator asks me, and properly asks me, a question, but I can not answer by saying "yes" or "no." We have 20 or 21 different reservations. One reservation has an area of 9,000,000 acres.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Just let me finish the sentence, and then I will yield to the Senator from New Mexico. A large number of the citizens of my State believe that many of those reservations should be reduced in area, and I agree with them. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], now on his feet, introduced an amendment, to be written into the appropriation bill, which prohibits the Chief Executive from making any more reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, so large are they now. But, notwithstanding the force of that argument, I still insist that you can not by one general bill, with justice to the Indians or justice to the public, open the reservations nolens volens, without regard to the Indian rights and treaties. You must consider each reservation separately, as each reservation presents a different problem.

Mr. SMOOT. I had no such thought, Mr. President. My thought was to take that reservation of 9,000,000 acres and give the Indians all the lands that they could possibly wish or desire.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, let me answer the question. That is the Navajo Reservation; it is largely poor land for agricultural purposes. It takes 900 acres in some parts of that reservation to support one "critter," unless you are willing to make appropriations of immense sums for storing water to irrigate and cultivate the soil and teach the Indians all the arts of agriculture.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I was simply going to call the attention of the Senator from Utah, in connection with his colloquy with the Senator from Arizona, to the fact that we in Arizona and New Mexico understand that we are up against a condition; that we agree with the Senator in theory that we would like to have some reservations thrown open or materially decreased in size, but it requires our constant effort and attention to prevent the increase of the size of the reservations that now exist or the creation of new reservations.

The Senator referred to an amendment which Congress adopted and which is now a law prohibiting the creation of new reserves by Executive order. Five years ago the Congress of the United States prohibited the location of Indians upon the public domain in the States of Arizona and New Mexico; that is, it prohibited the use of the public money for the purpose of locating them outside of the reserves, because the practice had grown up of locating the Indians among the cattlemen throughought New Mexico and Arizona, and taking the public lands particularly for the Navajos. To-day the Navajo Indians are under a treaty by the terms of which they agreed that they would never undertake to settle upon any public land, or avail themselves of any public-land law; yet we had 120 located in one year, each upon 150 to 320 acres, in New Mexico.

Then the Congress passed a bill providing that none of the public funds should be used for any such purpose, and stopped it; but last year the President of the United States, of course not understanding the circumstances, but having an order presented to him, by Executive order overrode the act of Congress, and in New Mexico alone included in the Navajo reserve fifty-four thousand and some odd acres.

That is what we are up against. That is the condition; and if we can not get the reserves thrown open, we want to do the next best thing, and make them available for some business purpose. That is the reason why I announced the other day that I favored this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very complete and forceful answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. What we would like to do, what we would prefer to do, is relegated to the rear by what we may do. The only practicable thing we can do in this instance is to pass this bill or some similar bill providing for leases of these Indian lands.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator, then, if he would not be perfectly willing to let this bill apply only to Arizona and New Mexico?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, speaking for myself, as I introduced the bill originally and applied it to Arizona alone; but this is not a bill that is for the benefit of Arizona. It is a bill to benefit the United States. The United States needs the metals. Manifestly, I would not seek to force a State in under the terms of this bill where the Senators from that State objected; but it seems to me that logically if we may lease the Indian lands in Arizona we can lease them in Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Washington, and so forth; and I do not see how such an able and capable legislator as the Senator from Utah can see in this bill any commitment of Congress to a system of leasing the public domain, when I have repeated—why, it is tiresome—over and over again that we are leasing lands belonging to Indian tribes and that do not belong to the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, when the bill is up for consideration I am going to show the Senator cases that have taken place in my own State, and that more than likely would take place in his State, in which if this bill passed there would be mining under leases on the public domain, because I expect soon to see all of the land in Arizona now in Indian reservations opened for settlement.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, just let us assume that a lease is made to Mr. X of Indian lands to-day. The lease to X is for 30 years, with a right at the end of that period to a renewal for 10 years; and let us assume that 1 year from to-day Congress, in its wisdom, sees fit to and does open the land. The lease is in full force and effect. The man X still has his lease, which at the end of the lease period would revert to the Government of the United States and become public land.

We must not forget that we stand with regard to the Indian in the position of trustees, and that such trusteeship requires of us the highest type of fidelity. If it were left to a referendum in my State, I am sure that those who want the Indian lands opened would be three to one in the majority, and if I am ever defeated for the Senate it will be because I do not open the Indian lands in my State fast enough. But I am going to vote to open only those lands that address themselves to my conscience and my mind as lands that ought to be opened in good faith.

I know of one Indian reservation on the Colorado River near Parker where 10 acres have been allotted to each Indian. You can maintain yourself at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on 20 acres, so splendid is the soil. It will grow most anything. It could be used in many places for fertilizing purposes. I am an earnest advocate of opening that reservation. Every reason exists for its opening and no reason exists against its opening. Still we can not say we are going to wait and never pass a leasing bill until we open all the reservations to mining.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Government does not seem to feel very much alarmed over securing manganese, for the War Industries Board have arranged the price so that western producers receive 15 cents less per unit than miners east of Chicago.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. SMOOT. So if we throw these lands open for the mining of manganese, who knows whether it can be successfully produced or not if there is a power here to come in and say: "You shall sell at such and such a price, and that price must equal the cost of production of manganese in some other section of the country." Does the Senator know also that the freight rates are against the West and there are other disadvantages? I would hate to begin a leasing system here upon any kind of land for precious metals when the prospect of any advantage to our country is so remote as it is there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think the Senator from Utah is happy in his illustration. The necessity for manganese is known to everybody. His argument does not go to the fact that we have ships engaged in that trade that ought to be engaged in other trades. We have manganese in this country that we can produce. It means miserable administration to put a burden of 15 cents to the unit on western production of manganese.

Mr. SMOOT. Six dollars a ton.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think that can stand. As soon as they know that this manganese can be handled just as easily as the manganese in the East, what little they get, there will be no trouble about arranging the matter, when the necessity keeps on pressing as it is pressing now.

Then, as to the mere fact of leasing, it is leased from the Indians. It is taken from the Indians. It is not setting the example of a lease from the United States Government. The Indian himself gets the advantage of the lease. It seems to me they ought to blame the administration for that particular matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that there are two or three amendments to be offered to the bill that the Senator from Arizona is trying to get up, and that one of the Senators who desire to offer amendments is not here. Will not the Senator yield the floor and let us have a vote on the question of taking up the bill to pension the widows of Spanish-American War veterans? I am very anxious to see that bill passed, and hope it will be taken up to-day.

Mr. KING. Some of us have observations to make on that matter, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I will later yield to the Senator from Kansas, but I have not yielded as yet.

This is the fourth time that I have been required to take up this bill and discuss it rather in a desultory way for a few minutes and then have it laid aside. The Senate has been courteous and quite patient in the matter, but I have been unable to make it the unfinished business. I see now that I shall be unable to make it the unfinished business this evening, and I repeat I am not trying to secure any advantage by a notice, and I am not pretending that I think a notice would be of any value. Therefore with perfect courtesy I say that when the present pending matter is disposed of I shall again seek an opportunity to make this the unfinished business by making the appropriate motion, so I yield the floor at this time.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I will answer, of course.

Mr. SHIELDS. Would the Senator object to striking out all after the enacting clause of this bill and providing simply for the shipping of this soil which he says is used for fertilizer? That is more important now than metals.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; if you will guarantee a low freight rate, we will give you a soil that will fertilize a vast deal of the soil of good old Tennessee, so ably represented by her Senators here.

Mr. SHIELDS. But the Senator from Arizona said a few minutes ago that it took 900 acres of this Arizona soil to support a "critter." He might distribute some of it over there.

Mr. HARDWICK and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wanted to move an executive session, but I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there are two matters that I wish to call to the attention of the Senate in connection with the motion of the Senator from Kansas. The first is the situation in the Agricultural Committee. The Senate must consider the question as to whether it desires the Agricultural bill left in a conference where the conferees will not agree to come back to the Senate and can not agree between themselves. I hope the Senate will, if practicable, consider that question to-morrow, and see whether they desire their conferees to continue to adhere to $2.50 wheat or whether they desire their conferees to recede, and give some advice to the conferees. Some of the conferees would have been gratified to come back to the Senate for further instructions, but the majority did not desire to do so.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. I just wanted to suggest to the Senator that some of us who are favorable to the bill which is in the hands of the Senator from Kansas, and to which he is referring, simply desire to dispose of it, and then we will take up the conference report or any other matter; but it is rather unfair, it strikes me, to insist upon injecting something else in the way before we finally dispose of the motion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to discuss quite elaborately the motion of the Senator from Kansas before it is disposed of.

Mr. FALL. I understood——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not yield to the Senator, unless he desires to ask me a question. In that event I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. FALL. No; I will discuss the motion later. I will also discuss the Senator's report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why, certainly. I am not asking for any action. I have to be away to-morrow, and I thought it was proper that I should make that statement to the Senate with regard to the status of that conference report. If it is the desire of the Senate that it should remain where it is, in conference, of course that is for the Senate to determine; but some of us felt, as the Senator from Iowa clearly indicated, that the Senate should understand the situation, and take control or not take control of it, as the Senate pleased.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9218) to prevent extortion and to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. CROSSER, and Mr. CARY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3391) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a deed to G. H. Beckwith for certain lands within the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a conference report which has come over from the House. It is the report with reference to the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended. The conference report has very little change from the bill as it passed the Senate. The principal change is that the Senate conferees consented to add "father through adoption" and "mother through adoption," and also, on page 3, to make it read:

> That the discharge or dismissal of any person from the military or naval forces on the ground that he is an enemy alien, conscientious objector, or a deserter, or as guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude, or willful and persistent misconduct, shall terminate any insurance granted—

And so forth.

It is quite important to the War-Risk Bureau that this bill should be disposed of, but I am afraid since the Senator from

New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and I have gotten into this tangle, which I hope will not last, I shall not be able to dispose of the conference report this afternoon.

Mr. FALL. No; it will not be disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I feel sure it will not. So by request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the Senator withhold the motion for just a few moments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but I do not yield the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that. Will not the Senator consent that we may recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, by unanimous consent, after the executive session?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; Mr. President, there are a number of us who are not willing for the motion of the Senator from Kansas to pass this afternoon, or to take up the bill without a full discussion. We wish to go into the measure before we agree to take it up at all.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me, if that be true, would it then not be the wisest and sanest and most practical way, if there is opposition to the bill, to proceed with my bill as the unfinished business?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not do that, because there is a motion now to take up another bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure the Senator from Kansas, who is a practical legislator, knows that with this opposition to the bill undoubtedly, if he will withdraw his motion, I think we can pass the bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservation in about a day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will agree, if the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his motion.

Mr. ASHURST. I will wait for that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Only for that purpose I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to accommodate the Senator from Arizona, but I am not in a position to withdraw the motion, and I give notice now that if Senators will not consent to a recess I shall renew my motion to-morrow and the next day, and until Congress adjourns, unless this measure is taken up. I wish to say that if it is going to result in a great deal of discussion I think a recess until to-morrow would be preferable, and then the Senate could act on the motion when it reassembles.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, we want a vote by yeas and nays on taking up the bill. We think we can defeat it.

Mr. THOMPSON. On taking up the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then let the question be taken by yeas and nays now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; there would not be a quorum present.

Mr. THOMPSON. But——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the floor and renew my motion to go into executive session.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. THOMPSON. The motion pending will not be the unfinished business to-morrow at 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the motion to take it up prevails before 2 o'clock, it will then be the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; and the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	King	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Henderson	Lenroot	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lewis	Smoot
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thompson
Gallinger	Kenyon	Sheppard	Trammell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is apparent that we will not get a quorum, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask that the Secretary call the roll of absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is first in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. A motion to adjourn has precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the junior Senator from Georgia that the Senate adjourn.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 17, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, in whom we put our trust, in whom all our fondest hopes are centered, continue Thy favors unto us as individuals and as a Nation, that the words of our lips may be wise and the issues of our hearts be pure; that we may work out our own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure; that we may play our part in the great orchestra of life, in harmony with Thy purposes.

Make our soldiers and sailors wise and strong to deliver, that with our allies they may bring order out of chaos, harmony out of discord, peace out of war; that the Old World may smile again and brotherly love have its sway; and Thine be the praise, in the name of Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, was received.

DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES SUBJECT TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Chair whether all these reports should not be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as they involve the question of military duty?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to think that that would be the most sensible thing to do, although naturally, and according to the usual practice, this would go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it related merely to the clerical force in the departments it would rightfully go to the Committee on Appropriations, but as this is a military question, pertaining to the military arm of the Government, I think it would be more consistent to have the reports referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, except that from the naval department, which would be, of course, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the law fixing the practice of the House this resolution is properly referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Now, the question whether or not after all the reports are in we shall undertake then to formulate a plan whereby they can be referred to one committee will arise at that time. The gentleman is not asking unanimous consent at this time, is he?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am merely making a suggestion to the Chair whether or not the reports are not more properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Speaker is right in referring this to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of the House is to seek information on the number of men available in the departments for military duty. When these reports are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs they can determine what action shall be taken. If these reports were referred to the respective committees of the House there would be no general action taken on them.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent, the Chair, I think, will grant it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this report, and all similar reports when they come in under the resolutions adopted by the House as to the clerks and employees in the departments liable to military service who have claimed exemption, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, except the one from the Navy Department, and that they all be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this report and all other reports like it, except the one from the Navy Department, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that they be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent that the report may lie on the Speaker's table for the time being, and then, after they are all in, we can consider the matter further.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this report and all others like it, except the one from the Navy Department, lie on the Speaker's table, and that in the meantime they be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in response to the resolution passed by the House of Representatives on June 3, 1918, requesting the Secretary of State "to report to the House of Representatives the number of men in the service of the Department of State who were on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31 years, for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by such department and allowed, the name and home address of each such person and the character of work he is performing in the service of the department and the length of time he has been in such service."

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
17 June, 1918.

The PRESIDENT: In response to a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on June 3, 1918, requesting the Secretary of State "to report to the House of Representatives the number of men in the service of the Department of State who were on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31, for whom requests for exemption from military duty or deferred classification have been asked by such department and allowed, the name and home address of each such person and the character of work he is performing in the service of the department and the length of time he has been in such service," the undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the House of Representatives, if the President approve thereof, a statement containing the information requested in the resolution.

Respectfully submitted. ROBERT LANSING.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 11284) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the President had, on June 14, 1918, approved and signed bill of the following title:

S. 4151. An act to provide for a determination of heirship in cases of deceased members of the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, conferring jurisdiction upon district courts to partition lands belonging to full-blood heirs of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the conference report on the bill S. 4482, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 618).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"SEC. 18. That section 313 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 313. (1) That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed to the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made.

"'If a beneficiary or conditional beneficiary shall have recovered, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other person, such money or other property so recovered shall be credited upon any compensation payable, or which may become payable, to such beneficiary or conditional beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person, other than the United States or the enemy, to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid to such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"'(3) The bureau shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the purposes of this section. For the purposes of computation only under this section the total amount of compensation due any beneficiary shall be deemed to be equivalent to a lump sum equal to the present value of all future payments of compensation computed as of the date of the award of compensation at 4 per cent, true discount, compounded annually. The probability of the beneficiary's death before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined according to the American Experience Table of Mortality.

"'A conditional beneficiary is any person who may become entitled to compensation under this article on or after the death of the injured person.

"'Nothing in this section shall be construed to impose any administrative duties upon the War or Navy Departments.'

"SEC. 19. That section 401 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 401. That such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation, except that those persons who are in the active war service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of such contract of insurance may apply at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled, or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his widow from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or if there is no widow surviving him, then to his child or children, or if there is no child surviving him, then to his mother, or if there is no mother surviving him, then to his father, if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total and permanent disability, shall be so paid. The amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between children as may be provided by regulations.'

"SEC. 20. That section 19 of this act amending section 401 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be deemed to be in effect as of October 6, 1917: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the payment of monthly installments, authorized to be made under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted, for the months up to and including June, 1918: Provided further, That all awards of automatic insurance under the provisions of said section 401 as originally enacted shall be revised as of the 1st day of July, 1918, in accordance with the provisions of said section 401 as amended by section 19 of this act.

"SEC. 21. That section 402 of said act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them. The insurance shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value, if any, of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½ per cent interest in full of all obligations under the contract of insurance.'"

And the House agree to the same.

Adding to class A, in the case of a man, the following: "to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children."

(These words restore the language of the original act, but were stricken out in the bill as it passed the House.)

(This restores the language of the original act, but the words were stricken out of the act as it passed the House.)

The Senate concurs in section 10, amending section 300 of said act with an amendment inserting the words "in line of duty" and the words "active service" in said section, which restores the language in the original act. And the Senate further concurs in the proviso of the House, which was as follows: "Provided, That for the purposes of this section said officer, enlisted man, or other member shall be held and taken to have been in sound condition when examined, accepted, and enrolled for service: Provided, That this section as amended shall be deemed to become effective as of October 6, 1917."

The Senate concurs in section 11 amending section 301 of said act, which amendment of the House to the original act strikes out the word "widowed" wherever it occurs before the word "mother," and also adds the father to those who may receive compensation under this section; and the House receded from its amendment striking out the words "but no compensation shall be possible if a dependency arises more than five years after the death of the person."

The Senate concurs in section 12, amending section 302 of said act, with the following amendments:

Inserting after the word "bedridden" the words "from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States."

The Senate concurs in amendment in section 13, amending subdivision 4 of section 302 of said act with an amendment inserting the word "family" before the word "conditions," so that it will read: "(4) The amount of each monthly payment shall be determined according to the family conditions existing on the first day of the month."

The Senate concurs in section 14, which adds two new subdivisions to section 302 of said act, and concurs therein.

The Senate concurs in section 15 with an amendment striking out that part of section 14 which makes it retroactive as to section 302 of said act.

The Senate concurs in section 16, which repeals section 311 of said act.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to section 17 and concurs in the following amendment, which occurs in the Senate bill, making section 312 read as follows:

"SEC. 312. That compensation under this article shall not be paid while the person is in receipt of service or retirement pay. The laws providing for gratuities or payments in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to any person in the active military or naval service on the 6th day of October, 1917, or who thereafter entered the active military or naval service, or to their widows, children, or their dependents, except in so far as rights under any such law have heretofore accrued.

"Compensation because of disability or death of members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) shall be in lieu of any compensation for such disability or death under the act entitled, 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 7, 1916."

The Senate concurs in section 18, which amends section 313 of said act with an amendment making section 313 read as follows:

"SEC. 313. (1) That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, may require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person, or if it appears to be for the best interests of the beneficiary the director may require him to prosecute the said action in his own name, subject to regulations. The director may require such assignment or prosecution at any time after the injury or death, and the failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be placed to the credit of the military and naval compensation appropriation. If the amount placed on the credit of such appropriation in such case is in excess of the amount of the award of compensation, if any, such excess shall be paid to the beneficiary after any compensation award for the same injury or death is made.

"If a beneficiary or conditional beneficiary shall have recovered, as a result of a suit brought by him or on his behalf, or as a result of a settlement made by him or on his behalf, any money or other property in satisfaction of the liability of such other person, such money or other property so recovered shall be credited upon any compensation payable or which may become payable to such beneficiary or conditional beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

"(2) If an injury or death for which compensation may be payable under this article is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person to pay damages therefor, then, in order to preserve the right of action, the director may require the conditional beneficiary at any time after the injury or death, to assign such right of action to the United States, or, if it appears to be for the best interests of such conditional beneficiary, to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name, subject to regulations. The failure on the part of the beneficiary to so assign or to prosecute the said cause of action in his own name within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the director, shall bar any right to compensation on account of the same injury or death. The cause of action so assigned may be prosecuted or compromised by the director, and any money realized or collected thereon, less the reasonable expenses of such realization or collection, shall be paid to such beneficiary, and be credited upon any future compensation which may become payable to such beneficiary by the United States on account of the same injury or death.

Respectfully submitted,

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, when the Senate bill 4482 was referred to the House committee, the House had reported two bills on that question. Everything in the Senate bill was contained in one of the bills that passed the House. Therefore it was not hard for the conferees to get together. The House bill, however, contained a great many things that the Senate bill did not contain. Of course, the conference was brought about. The bill as reported to the House is practically in form and substance as it passed the House, with two or three substantial changes, in only one of which was any great percentage of the Members vitally interested. When we passed the bill in the House we expanded the term "parent" to include father and mother by adoption and also anyone who has stood in loco parentis to the enlisted man for a period of five years next preceding his enlistment. The Senate agreed to the amendment including father and mother by adoption, but they were not willing to agree to the amendment bringing in anyone under the terms of the act who had stood in loco parentis. That went out of the bill as it passed the House. The House also passed an amendment to section 300 of the original act where it has to do with compensation, striking out the words that the injury or death must occur in line of duty, and substituted therefor "in active service." That amendment of the House went out, and the language of the original act was restored, which was that the injury or death must occur in service in line of duty.

There is only one more amendment that the House receded upon. The House passed an amendment having the effect that this compensation should be payable to the parent regardless of any limitation as to when the death occurred or when the dependency arose.

An amendment was adopted in the House when the bill was under consideration, not reported from the committee, striking out the five-year limitation, which would have made it any time during the life of the parent if dependency arose. The language of the reported bill on that proposition was reestablished in the bill, and, with these three changes, I think the bill is essentially in the form in which it passed the House.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman has just stated that this subdivision G of section 301 as it was originally proposed to the House provided that this compensation of $20 in the case of one parent or $30 in the case of both parents should be paid, provided there was a dependent relationship existing between parent and son, and this provision also contemplated that this dependency might arise even after the death of the enlisted man but within five years of such death. The House adopted an amendment, which I offered at the time we were considering the bill, striking out the limitation of five years and provided that whenever the dependency might arise the amount would be payable under this subdivision G of section 301. I would like the gentleman to give a reason, if he cares to, why there should be any such limitation as five years placed upon the payment to a dependent parent. It occurs to me that the provision as now written in the bill would put a premium upon the early attempted proof of dependency. If you put a limitation that such dependency must be proven within five years, such limitation would naturally operate as a stimulus to the filing of claims within that time, so that the claimant might not be shut off by the limitation, and, even aside from that feature of the matter, it occurs to me that if a mother or father 10 years after the soldier was killed in the service becomes dependent the right would be just as persuasive then for the recovery of this compensation as it would be after five years. I am at a loss to understand why there should be a limitation. I thoroughly sympathize with the provision of the bill that requires dependency, but I am at a loss to understand why there should be a limitation as to time. Frequently the dependency of a parent does not arise until they have reached an old age.

Mr. RAYBURN. The same idea was carried out in the original act as to a widow, and we provided in that that one who married the soldier more than 10 years after the injury——

Mr. BLACK. I think that would be different.

Mr. RAYBURN. As far as I am concerned, I contended in the committee for the retention of the House provision, but the argument was made that on a question of dependency that would arise in such a remote time of, say, 10, 15, or 20 years, in all probability the Government would be done a serious injustice. If people knew they were going to get this compensation at any time, they might be willing or would naturally dissipate what they had of the world's goods, more so than they would if they knew they would not get this compensation from the Government after that period of time. The Senate committee was very positive on that. They would not agree to it at all, and we finally decided that it must go out before we could get an agreement; and then it does seem to me that after the death of a soldier, five years—not for the wife, but for a dependent mother or father—could not be objected to. They may be in good circumstances now, but they may suffer reverses just like anyone else is likely to do, whether we are at war or not. With a liberal provision in the bill as to compensation and striking out the word "widowed" wherever it precedes "mother," and also the inclusion of the father, if there is a father and mother, if either be living, that one should get $20 a month, if dependent, and if both be living, $30 a month, it seems to me if we extend that over a period of five years, with the provision for payment which we have made, it is very liberal, indeed. It does not seem to me that after a period of five years after the death of the soldier or the close of the war a dependency then could arise that would arise out of the soldier having been taken away.

Mr. BLACK. The presumption would be that the son would support his parents when they should become dependent as long as he might live, and his expectancy under the American table of mortality, of course, would be much longer than five years, and I should think that a parent, father or mother, who became truly dependent 10 years after the soldier's death would really have as much equity in the payment of this compensation as if it occurred within the five-year period.

Mr. RAYBURN. I could not agree with my colleague on that at all. If the soldier were living five years after the injury, or five years after the war closed, in all probability he would have undertaken obligations before that time that would probably have placed him in a position where he would have other dependents.

Mr. BLACK. No; very few sons ever get themselves in a position where they are not ready and willing to help their parents.

Mr. RAYBURN. There are a lot of people in the poorhouses in this country.

Mr. BLACK. We do not want any parents of these soldiers to go to the poorhouse.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am talking about the question of dependency arising.

Mr. BLACK. And I am absolutely certain that sooner or later Congress will repeal this provision of the law.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and Congress is going to repeal the provisions of a bill about putting officers and privates on the same plane that my colleague offered last year.

Mr. BLACK. That remains to be seen.

Mr. STAFFORD. In line with the suggestion of your colleague, I understand under the existing pension law that if a soldier receives injury in the service, even though the parent is not dependent at the time of the injury so that the parent could receive the pension, nevertheless whenever the parent becomes dependent he then obtains a pensionable status to entitle him to the amount of pension that he would have obtained from the very beginning of the injury in case the parent was then dependent. Now, as I understand the provision in the conference report, it is necessary for this parent to be dependent within five years after the injury in order that he may get compensation, so it is virtually taking a contrary position to that which has been established for years under existing pension laws.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would have been very much pleased if it could have remained in the bill and we could have gotten an agreement, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. SNOOK. I wanted to ask the gentleman what became of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to section 300?

Mr. RAYBURN. It remained.

Mr. SNOOK. In the language adopted by the House?

Mr. RAYBURN. Exactly in the language adopted by the House.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not clearly understand the statement of the gentleman in regard to the liability occurring upon the death incurred in line of duty. Does that mean every disability, every disease incurred in line of duty, or death itself? That is what I want to get clearly, because possibly he might be in a hospital some time afterwards, and I was not very sure whether the gentleman made that clear or not.

Mr. RAYBURN. For death or disability resulting. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If a man dies in the service and his mother is dependent upon him and her husband is still living but a deserter and not contributing to her support, will the mother in that case derive any benefit?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not undertsand the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A man dies in the service leaving a dependent mother. She is married and her husband can not be found——

Mr. RAYBURN. That does not make any difference whether she is married or single, if she is a dependent mother.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. She becomes a beneficiary under this amendment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12441, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12441) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to page 2 for the purpose of offering a new paragraph; and, pending that request, I desire to make to the committee a statement, so they will understand what is involved in the request. I have been instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer as an amendment to the bill a provision for "the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $50,000,000." That is to continue the special emergency fund for the present. I have also been instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer, following that, an amendment for the Committee on Public Information, appropriating $1,250,000. Now the purpose of asking the request to go back to page 2 is simply because it would put this first matter in the bill at a place that it ought to come.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, on what page of the bill is the public-information item now?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not there at all; and I will read what is proposed to be offered as an amendment, and which is separate from the amendment in regard to the President's matter.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood there was an item of $2,000,000 in this bill for public information.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; there was an estimate submitted to the committee of $2,098,000, but there is nothing now in the bill. The committee has had hearings since the presentation of the bill. They are available now to the Committee of the Whole. Of the work of the Committee on Public Information and the amendment which is proposed, I will read—it is not very long——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman answer a question before consent is granted? What induced the committee not to report the item in the bill for the Committee on Public Information?

Mr. SHERLEY. The estimate did not come in time for the committee to take it up in detail before reporting the sundry civil bill, unless the bill was to be unduly delayed. Further, I will say to the gentleman that there was a complete understanding between Mr. GILLETT and myself as to the matter, and after the hearings were finished on the bill—the regular hearings, other than those relating to this—there were two or three days necessary for the clerk and the printer to prepare the bill. I took advantage of that time to be absent on a visit to my own city for a day and a half, for the first time since the Congress has met. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] was away, and he was desirous and I was also desirous that he should be present at the hearings touching this matter. So it was agreed, informally, that we would take it up subsequently, and thus not delay the consideration of the rest of the bill. It was taken up by the subcommittee and these hearings held, which are now printed, and the matter was brought before the full committee to-day, and they authorized me to make this report.

Mr. MADDEN. Up to the present time the funds for the Committee on Public Information have been received from the President, have they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have. And it was believed by the President, and believed, I think, by all of the committee, that this, together with other funds that could be properly estimated for, should be appropriated for in the regular way rather than being paid for out of the President's fund, and accordingly we have endeavored to get such information as we could touching the activity of the Committee on Public Information and are prepared to offer for the consideration of the House this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman and his committee believe that the information they have obtained as the result of their investigation justifies the existence of the Committee on Public Information and its work, do they not?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is no division on the part of the members touching that. Whatever may be the individual judgment of members touching Mr. Creel, who is the head of that committee, I think there is a general acquiescence in the belief that the work of the Committee on Public Information has not only been of very great importance and value to the country, but it is work that ought to continue, and that the Congress would not be justified in discontinuing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Does this appropriation for publicity work contemplate appropriations for more than a year?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it contemplates simply an appropriation, as other appropriations are made, and the provision which I am offering requires a report to be made at the first of each session of Congress, so that Congress may keep fully advised. And I will say to the gentleman frankly that I thoroughly share the view, that I think is shared generally by the membership of the House, that work of this kind is work of such importance and work which could be so abused that Congress should be fully advised from time to time as to the character of it and have it within its control.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that heretofore this bureau has been paid for out of the President's $100,000,000 fund. Congress had nothing to do with the establishment of this Bureau of Publicity or the appointment of Mr. Creel.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is, therefore, a creation of the Executive. Now it is being shoved over onto Congress——

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not say that that was the situation at all, sir. I think Congress in the proper exercise of its functions has asked for information touching the matter and is now prepared either to vote moneys or deny moneys for this as well as other governmental activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Ordinarily the creation of a new bureau is a matter for Congress to determine. In this instance the bureau was created without the knowledge of Congress, and now, after it has been in operation for a year, it is suggested substantially as a permanent institution for which Congress will make provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman. There is nothing that is proposed looking to a permanent institution. The work of this committee is purely war work. And I say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] wrote me a letter, one with which I am in thorough sympathy, suggesting that this work was of such a character that he felt that Congress should be advised touching it, and should, if it desired to continue it, make direct appropriation for it. And it has been, until the gentleman has taken a different view, the generally accepted view, as I have gathered from Members, that it was desirable that Congress should know about the matter and should say whether or not it should continue.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman regards this bureau as a war-emergency bureau, simply, does he not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is there anything in the amendment providing for it that contemplates a limitation upon its tenure?

Mr. SHERLEY. The amendment itself simply makes moneys available for the fiscal year, and when the fiscal year ends the thing dies of its own accord, unless additional moneys are made available.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bureau or committee would have to come back to Congress for a continuance?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course. There is no desire on the part of anybody to create a permanent bureau.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Its usefulness is for the war period?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the amendment does not accept it as a permanent institution?

Mr. SHERLEY. It not only does not contemplate it but the Appropriations Committee is unalterably opposed to the creation of such a bureau in peace time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to page 2 to offer——

Mr. SHERLEY. To offer a new paragraph at the beginning of the page.

The CHAIRMAN. To return to page 2 for the purpose of offering a certain amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Insert as a new paragraph at the top of page 2 the following:

"NATIONAL DEFENSE.

"For the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $50,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I desire to have read a letter from the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 24 May, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. SHERLEY: I take the liberty of writing to call your attention to an appropriation which seems to me of capital importance in connection with the effective conduct of the war. I refer to the sum for national security and defense which has been placed at my disposal during the past fiscal year. I think that it is of the utmost importance that a similar fund should be put at my disposal for the next fiscal year, though in my judgment it need not be so large as the last appropriation for that purpose. I think that a sum of half the amount, namely, $50,000,000, would be abundant.

I believe that you and your colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations are familiar with the objects for which I have used the appropriation, but perhaps you will permit me to summarize them and to append an outline of the actual expenditures.

I have used considerable sums for the maintenance of the Food Administration, the Fuel Administration, and the War Trade Board, and for the maintenance of the proper agencies for the allocation of labor, a matter of very great consequence and of no little difficulty just now, when there is so general a dislocation of labor throughout the country. For these objects it seems probable that the fund is no longer necessary, inasmuch as their administration has now been quite thoroughly organized, and is susceptible of being maintained by definite appropriations assigned to their use in the usual manner. Of course, this method of appropriation is preferable to any other.

Besides these objects, I have spent very large sums for the repair of ships owned by alien enemies, which we took possession of immediately after our entrance into the war, and which, as you know, had been deliberately damaged in the most serious way by their own crews; for the providing of temporary accommodations for the newly created services connected with the war; for advances to the regular departments for services appropriated for in the usual way when it seemed unwise in the circumstances to wait until appropriations, which could certainly be counted upon, could be acted upon by the Congress; to provide additional facilities for the Civil Service Commission, in order that it might more nearly meet the exceptional demands of the time for clerical aid; for miscellaneous expenses connected with the very serviceable action of the Council of National Defense; and for labor matters of many sorts, investigation, mediation, the settlement of strikes, and many objects arising from time to time and impossible to foresee or calculate for beforehand. Most of these matters may also now, fortunately, be taken care of in the regular way, though similar occasions for the immediate expenditure of money may, no doubt, arise on a smaller scale than before. Some of these objects, as, for example, the repair of ships, have now been, I assume, entirely covered.

There remain the uses for such a fund which I may perhaps characterize as continuing but incalculable. I refer to the conduct of many necessary investigations—for example, in connection with the determination of the prices which the Government is to pay and which the Governments associated with us in the war are to pay.

To indispensable secret service and to confidential uses abroad;

To the very large necessities of record and information;

To the maintenance of the instrumentalities, both on this side of the water and on the other, which are doing admirable work in forming public opinion both here and there of the real aims of America, of the progress she is making in the conduct of the war, and of the real facts with regard to all the larger aspects of our policy;

And to the service and guidance to all sorts of patriotic movements in the United States which appeal to the Government for its assistance and for materials wherewith to conduct their work.

Besides these things which can now be stated, the experience of the past year convinces me that there are many occasions which will arise which I can not now even conjecture, but which will make it necessary that I should have a free fund at my disposal.

May I not take the liberty of saying a word of special emphasis with regard to the work which the Committee on Public Information has been doing? I have had very close personal connections with the work of that committee and have watched its development and its activities with particular care and interest, feeling a special responsibility. The work of the committee has, on the whole, been admirably done, and I think it very likely that nobody, not even those intimately connected with the Government, is aware of the extent, the variety, and the usefulness of that work or of the really unusually economical manner in which it has been accomplished, so far as the expenditure of money is concerned. I should feel personally crippled if any obstacle of any kind were put in the way of that work.

It is probable that it will now be possible to a considerable extent to submit estimates of the usual sort to take care of the work of the committee, and I hope that in connection with those estimates at least some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations may have an opportunity to know more particularly what it has been doing.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

HON. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there will come to the committee, after consideration and action upon this amendment, the amendment touching the Committee on Public Information, I shall not now refer to that at all. I desire very briefly to speak touching the emergency fund that has been granted to the President, and which by this proposed amendment is to be renewed to the extent of $50,000,000.

The President has supplied me with a statement, which I shall place in the RECORD, showing the allotments that have been made from this fund from time to time, and which total as regular allotments $55,935,965.98, from which should be deducted the amount returned under these regular allotments of $133,815.61, leaving a net of $55,802,150.37.

There have been allotments under the head of reimbursable allotments of $82,399,280, and there has been reimbursed of such allotments $65,000,000, leaving $17,399,280 which has not been reimbursed under the reimbursable allotments, which, added to the $55,802,150.37 that I first spoke of, makes a total of $73,201,430.37 of net amount allotted, leaving a balance at the time of this statement of $26,798,569.63 which has not been allotted, and which, to the extent that it shall not be allotted, will be returned to the Treasury of the United States.

Now, these allotments have been, in large measure, as follows: For the Treasury Department there has been made a permanent allotment of $1,454,161.54; of reimbursable allotments there were $4,200,000, which, as I recall, was the amount that went to the purchase of the Arlington property, and which the House is familiar with by virtue of a discussion had on the floor. There have been permanent allotments to the War Department of a little under $15,000,000 and reimbursable allotments of $77,500,000, and of the reimbursable allotments $65,000,000 has been returned.

Now, those were of a character where the activity so provided for would be appropriated for by Congress but where the need for immediate action was great, and in order to save time allotments were made without awaiting the appropriation. I recall one instance of which I have spoken heretofore in the House and for which I was in large measure responsible in the beginning. It developed in the Committee on Appropriations shortly after the war broke out that there was need of having the Ordnance Department placed in a position where it could undertake the creation of factories and the manufacture of certain character of material for the Army which it was of the first importance should be undertaken at once, and there were no funds available. The Committee on Appropriations were well satisfied of the need of such work and that Congress would appropriate the money, as it subsequently did. They therefore authorized me to say to the President, which I did, that if the President saw fit to advance this money to the Ordnance Department, so as to save a month or two of time waiting on bills, the committee was disposed to appropriate the money, and that this fund would be reimbursed out of it. That has happened, and that has happened in a number of other instances.

A large part of this money, however—or, rather, a considerable part of it—went to purposes that Congress has not seen fit to reimburse the President, and which I explained to the House when I brought in a deficiency bill early in the calendar year. I stated to the President that if every time an advancement was made out of this fund Congress was to reimburse the fund, without regard to the advancement, it would result in practically having the judgment of Congress disregarded touching the desirability of work being carried on, and it would simply result that this fund would be a medium whereby the departments would get—subject, of course, to the President's judgment—such moneys for such purposes as they saw fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. The President was in thorough sympathy with the view I expressed, and saw no reason why such funds should be reimbursed; and the committee will recall that I stated a number of instances in which estimates were submitted for the purpose of reimbursement, but which we did not vote.

For instance, when the War-Risk Insurance Bureau was established, with its enlarged powers, it was through legislation passed about two weeks before Congress adjourned. It was highly proper and absolutely necessary that the President should provide for the activities of this bureau by advancing money; but we felt that there was no reason for reimbursing such moneys, because that was the very purpose for which this fund had been created, and if we were to reimburse in each instance, as I stated a moment ago, it would result in these departments not having to come to Congress at all. So the policy of the Committee on Appropriations, at least, has been in every instance to ask that the various departments, many of which have had their activities outlined and enlarged by virtue of presidential proclamation, and necessarily and properly so, should come to Congress with estimates the same as the regularly established departments of the Government, and so that the Congress could, as they have, make such appropriations as were necessary. For instance, the food and the fuel departments were conducted out of funds advanced by the President in the first instance. That was true of the Alien-Property Custodian. It was true of the War Trade Board, it was true of many activities of the Council of National Defense. It was true of the activities of the War Industries Board, and the moneys so advanced have not been reimbursed. Now, in all of these cases in this very bill we are carrying money for the purpose of taking care of these activities of the Government in the regular way, which is the only way by which Congress can properly supervise such activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. These activities are now compelled to come before the Committee on Appropriations and state their claims?

Mr. SHERLEY. They not only are obliged to do so, but they have done so; and this bill, as I stated, carries moneys for all of those different activities.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For one I think that is highly commendable. Of course, we could not prevent the President from exercising his judgment after we had given him $100,000,000. But in view of the fact that the President's request is now reduced from $100,000,000 last year to $50,000,000 next year, I want to ask if the gentleman can state how much has been provided for in this bill in lieu of the $50,000,000 the President has not asked for?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not made a calculation of that character, but it is a very considerable sum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the total exceed $100,000,000 for next year, including the $50,000,000 not now asked for?

Mr. SHERLEY. I doubt whether the moneys that we have appropriated for these new activities would exceed $100,000,000, though they might. For instance, here is one of the activities. The President very properly advanced $19,061,211.07 to the Shipping Board. That was in connection with the repair of a lot of the German ships that this Government seized when we went to war with Germany. The gentleman will recall that there were a great many acts of sabotage committed by the crews of these ships.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I remember.

Mr. SHERLEY. And when we took them over it was necessary to make extensive repairs. Now, the President very properly advanced nineteen and a half million dollars for that purpose. All of that sort of work is now cared for regularly in connection with the Shipping Board.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to that Congress had no official information until the President's letter was read a while ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is not quite accurate in that regard. Congress was advised last December, by a letter of the President, of date December 5, to Mr. Fitzgerald, the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, of the $31,500,000 of allotments that the President had made out of the fund, and at that time there was an extension of the fund for a longer period, and a statement was made concerning the use that had been made of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The main point is this, that the tendency to appropriate money by Executive order, through agents whom the President can not very well follow, is decreasing, and the supervision of Congress over moneys to be expended for war purposes is increasing.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true, and this ought to be said: I think the President from the beginning has had a pronounced desire, which he has carried forward, not to advance moneys for bureaus except in matters that seemed of such importance as to make it necessary that he should do so, and he was in full sympathy with the view that I expressed to him on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, that the Congress should make provision for activities of the Government in all instances where it was possible and that he should not be called upon to do it from such a fund. Now, there are certain things that it is manifest the President's fund was intended to be used for and has been used for, which things have not been made the subject of inquiry by the committee and ought not to be. The President, in the memorandum that he has submitted, states that for confidential use abroad and for other secret uses in America he has allotted $6,807,507. I have not sought to obtain any information touching the use of that fund, and I am quite sure that I voice the sentiment of the House when I say that it is not desired that we should make inquiry into it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That fund was not reimbursed, was it?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; that was not reimbursed. Then there was allotted to the Committee on Public Information, which we will deal with subsequently, $2,100,000, all of which has not been used. There was allotted to the Food and Fuel Administrations $2,400,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But they all now come under the supervision of Congress?

Mr. SHERLEY. They do; and there is a reasonably detailed statement presented by the Executive; and I am quite sure that had I sought to obtain additional information touching any matter it would have been gladly furnished. There is running through these hearings information in great detail as to the use of most of this money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. For instance, when the Food Administrator was before us the Committee on Appropriations asked him how much money had been allotted to him by the President. He told us, and we then asked him what he did with it; and in each instance as these new bureaus or old bureaus have come before us we have asked them not only as to moneys that had been appropriated and which they had used but we have asked them, "How much money have you had from the President's fund? What have you done with it?" And there is contained in these two volumes pretty full information touching the uses of moneys that have been made under the allotments by the President. I have not had the time to check up the one statement as against the other; but I can only repeat that the use of this fund has been a most conservative use. I know of my own personal knowledge that there have been many efforts by the departments to press matters that they thought were of first magnitude, and which they desired to have the President allot funds for, in which efforts they were not successful.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman refers to reimbursable allotments, but where funds have been used and properly used, as the gentleman states, why should there be any reimbursement?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was this reason. For instance, $77,600,000 was allotted to the War Department in the way of a reimbursable allotment. If that had been allotted as a permanent allotment manifestly this whole fund might be pledged so soon as to require the President to come and ask for additional money, or put him in the position where he might not have available funds for matters of great magnitude, which might require at any moment a very large amount. But, as I explained, possibly when the gentleman was out of the Chamber, there were some circumstances in which time could be saved by the President allotting money that it was perfectly apparent Congress was going to appropriate.

I recall an instance in which, by instruction by the Committee on Appropriations, I wrote the President a letter stating that I thought that something like thirty or forty million dollars—my memory may be wrong as to the exact figures—ought to be advanced to the Ordnance Department to enable them to undertake the immediate creation of facilities for the manufacture of field artillery, and that a saving of some time then would mean perhaps months of time later on; that the committee was prepared to vote these moneys, but that it was not practicable to put it through Congress immediately. On these assurances and representations made to him by the Secretary of War the President did make the allotment. Now, then, allotments frequently are never drawn on, but the very fact that the War Department was in a position, in dealing with men whom they wanted to create these factories and place the orders with, to say that they had funds available for work of such magnitude made it possible to induce such men to undertake the work rather than to wait until Congress appropriated the money.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It means that the President has approved the proposition and made the allotment, and therefore with the implied understanding that later on there would be an appropriation, and that is what the reimbursement proposition means?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose some of this amount remains in the hands of the President on July 1, 1919; will that be covered into the Treasury?

Mr. SHERLEY. It will.

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following statements touching allotments out of the $100,000,000 fund:

Total reimbursable allotments so made by the President, $17,399,280.

Treasury Department, June 5, 1918.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think as a minority member of the committee I ought to say a word on this appropriation. Of course, the original appropriation of $100,000,000 which was granted to the President at the outbreak of the war was made in order to meet the sudden exigency, we all recognizing that there were unforeseeable expenses which ought to be met. Therefore we gladly gave the $100,000,000.

Then in December, when only one-third had been spent, we reappropriated the balance of it. Now, I have followed as closely as I could the expenditures made from that fund. I am disposed to think that the President has been scrupulous in its use and has husbanded it carefully. I do not mean that there have not been expenditures which personally I did not approve. For instance, the Arlington Hotel purchase did not seem to me to come naturally within the scope of this emergency war fund, but I thought its purchase should have been left to the determination of Congress. But I recognize that that is merely a difference of opinion and that my judgment is not infallible. I do not criticize the expenditure of the hundred million dollars in the main. I think it has been done with great care and with general economy. I agree heartily with what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] says about the reimbursable feature of it, and I am glad that the President is in accord with that theory.

As to the additional $50,000,000, we can not, of course, foresee what emergency will come, although we can foresee better than we could a year ago.

The Secret Service may suddenly require very great expansion. When we see what Germany accomplished in Russia by her secret-service expenditures we may feel that both in this country and abroad our Government may suddenly need and can use with great results large sums of money. As to that I made no inquiry, and I would make no inquiry, but would trust implicitly to the administration and would not begrudge any sum it should spend. Therefore it seems to me that the House ought cheerfully and trustfully to make this appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the constitutional provision with regard to the appropriation of money is as follows:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

Under that mandate and authority it becomes the duty of Congress to carefully consider the estimated expenditures and to pass judgment relative to them. In time of peace in a country like ours there should be no large general fund in the hands of executive officers to be used at their discretion. In time of war, of course, the situation is very different. That was particularly true at the outbreak of the present war. There were matters that needed to be gotten under way which had not been specifically provided for and could not be specifically provided for. There were increased expenditures required in our war preparations that had not and could not at the time be provided for specifically. It became necessary, therefore, for the Congress to place the sum of $100,000,000 in the hands of the President for allotment in his discretion. I join with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in saying that I think that in the main this discretion has been wisely and judiciously exercised.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. We originally gave the President $100,000,000, and we have appropriated to keep that fund intact from time to time. How much has the fund, in fact, amounted to—$150,000,000 or $200,000,000 or $250,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. The fund is $100,000,000. The action of the Congress in December, I think it was, was simply to keep available the hundred million dollars which had been appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. The $100,000,000 at any one time, I know, but we have appropriated from time to time to make that fund whole. I would like to know how much it has amounted to altogether.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I read that to the House. There has been paid by the President $82,399,280, which he places under the head of reimbursable allotments. There have been reimbursed $65,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. So that is has been $165,000,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. But there is now unexpended $26,798,569, so that if you count it the way the gentleman is figuring, at the outside, there would have been a little less than $140,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. MONDELL. The question now arises as to what it is wise and advisable and necessary to do at this time. The President has suggested the necessity, apparent I think to all of us, of a continuation of a certain appropriation within his discretion, and has suggested the sum of $50,000,000 which we have provided for in the amendment now pending. I am very glad indeed to give my assent as a member of the committee to that appropriation. I want to make this suggestion in regard to it. I think it is in harmony with the view of the members of the committee and of the House, and I believe in harmony with the President's own view of the matter. Since the war began and the first appropriation of $100,000,000 was made, a number of new activities have been started and have conducted their affairs out of the President's fund, which activities we are now appropriating for.

My thought is—and I believe, as I said, the thought of the membership of the committee and of the House, and I believe the view of the President—that, by and large and in the main and as a general thing, the sums which the Congress in its judgment has granted for the various activities should indicate to the President the amount which the Congress believes should be used for those activities as the limit of those activities, unless conditions should arise or necessities should appear which were not brought to the attention of the Congress and its committees at the time the appropriations were recommended and made. Necessarily, however, in time of war there will be some increased activities in connection with the bureaus for which we have appropriated—activities that clearly and definitely could not have been foreseen. Clearly the President, in his discretion, would be authorized to advance further sums for such purposes, but I think we all realize and appreciate the fact that the President's fund should be for activities, extension of activities, and uses unforeseen at the time the appropriations were made. Personally I have no doubt that policy will be followed in the use of the President's fund. So far as the use of the fund for emergency purposes which are not ordinarily reported in detail to Congress are concerned, we must trust the President to wisely make expenditures as may seem necessary for those purposes out of this fund. Conditions might arise under which it would be found necessary to expend a considerable portion of the President's fund at home or abroad for such purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 31, after line 25, for the purpose of offering the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman has concluded with page 2?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to return to page 31 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, after line 25, insert the following:

"COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION.

"For all expenses of the Committee on Public Information, in connection with the work that may be specifically assigned to it by the President, including personal services and rents in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, printing and binding, and for such expenses of every character as the President in his discretion may deem necessary in carrying on the work assigned to the committee, $1,250,000: Provided, That when necessary advances for expenditures that shall be warranted in connection with the authorized work of the committee may be made under proper safeguards in amounts not exceeding $1,000: Provided further, That all moneys received through the motion-picture activities of the committee shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation and be available for the said activities: Provided further, That a detailed report of the receipts and expenditures under this appropriation shall be made to Congress on the first day of each regular session."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, on April 14, 1917, the President issued the following Executive order:

I hereby create a Committee on Public Information, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and a civilian who shall be charged with the executive direction of the committee.

As civilian chairman of the committee I appoint Mr. George Creel.

The Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized each to detail an officer or officers to the work of the committee.

WOODROW WILSON.

APRIL 14, 1917.

Mr. Chairman, that is the beginning of the Committee on Public Information.

In a letter which the President wrote to me and which I had read from the Clerk's desk a few moments ago there was a statement to the effect that the President felt that the activities of the committee were of such a character as would enable it now, as ordinary bureaus, to submit estimates for the consideration of Congress. On receipt of that letter I wrote to the President and stated, on behalf of my colleagues of the committee and myself, that we thought that it was desirable that such estimate should be submitted for the consideration of Congress, and accordingly there was submitted the estimate which is found in House Document No. 1168 and which came to the committee as of date of June 12, 1918, an estimate of $2,098,000 for the work of the Committee on Public Information, and in connection with that document is a recital of the amounts of money that it was believed were necessary to carry on the various existing divisions of work. The committee learning informally that such an estimate was in process of formation and to come before the committee, began its hearings on June 11 and continued those hearings from morning to morning as its time permitted, the sundry civil bill being then pending in the House, and it has taken testimony that is found in 160 printed pages and which is available to the membership of the House. That testimony served, I think, very clearly to show the past activities of this Committee on Public Information, and also to show what activities are proposed by the committee to be carried on in the future.

May I be permitted at this point to make this statement to the House? Mr. Creel, the chairman of that committee, has been the center of a good deal of controversy growing out of certain past writings and certain recent writings and certain recent utterances and alleged utterances of his. It seems to the Committee on Appropriations—it certainly seemed to the Subcommittee on Appropriations—that, altogether aside from Mr. Creel's personality, altogether aside from what individual Members may think of him as an individual or what they may even think of him as an official, aside from the question of the wisdom or foolishness of utterances of his—of the justifiable or unjustifiable character of such utterances—the real basic question before this Congress was the question of the activities of the Committee on Public Information as a whole; whether the work which they have done and are proposing to do is work of such character as to warrant the approval of Congress by making its continuation possible through the appropriation of public moneys.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Touching the latter phase of this matter, I do not believe that any man, no matter what his prejudice may have been or may now be, no matter what his individual opinion touching Mr. Creel may have been or may now be, can for a moment question the value of the work which has been done, and I say that I believe that was the opinion of all the members of the subcommittee. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] were present at the entire hearing and will, of course, speak in their own behalf; but I believe I am warranted in saying that we have come to the joint conclusion that the work of this committee has been of very great value to the country. Now, I had the impression—because I have been very much too busy a man to follow the publications which have been issued by this committee or the activities of this Committee on Public Information—I had been under the impression that the committee's work had been a work largely of censorship. I thought it was a work of negation rather than a work of affirmative character, and I have no doubt that in the minds of many, and perhaps to a certain extent in the mind of the President at the time he issued the Executive order, it was believed that the main function of this committee would be a work of negation and censorship.

At that time gentlemen here will recall there was a considerable agitation looking to the passing of a censorship law. Such a law never was enacted.

There have been certain prohibitions accompanied with penal provisions against the publication of things useful to the enemy, touching the movement of troops, transports, and so forth, but there has been no censorship law as such passed, and whatever censorship has existed has existed by virtue of the voluntary cooperation of the press of America with the Committee on Public Information, and it is to the distinct credit of that press of America and the patriotism of it that it has acquiesced, practically without exception, in the requests—because they could only be requests—that have come from the Committee on Public Information touching what it was not desirable to publish.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Can the gentleman inform me whether Charles Edward Russell, a prominent Socialist, was in the employ of the Committee on Public Information when he made a speaking tour of the Middle West last winter?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can answer the gentleman to this extent, though I hope after answering him I may be permitted to make a general statement, and then I will be subject to any inquiry: I learned after the inquiry had been conducted, through my colleague [Mr. MONDELL], that Mr. Russell had made some speeches out in Iowa, and those speeches had been the subject of criticism. Had I known it prior to the hearings I should have inquired into it. The only information which I personally have is that which I learned, I think, yesterday from the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I understand that Mr. Russell was employed and did make some speeches under the Speakers' Bureau of the Committee on Public Information, and that some people have thought that those speeches were subject to criticism. I also understand, though I do not understand it authoritatively, that he is not now in any way connected with the bureau, nor is he engaged in making speeches.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it developed that Mr. Creel, as a member of this Committee on Public Information, has occupied from the beginning the rôle of an advocate of publicity rather than of censorship. As he very well stated it, he felt that his position was one somewhat between that of the military people, who had a natural tendency of wanting to prevent the publication of any sort of information, and that of the newspaper point of view that usually desires to publish most of everything that is available for publication, and that his rôle has largely been one of constant urging——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I request the gentleman may have five minutes additional.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent——

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to take much more time, but I think it is due the committee to make a general résumé of the work, and I will try to be as brief as possible.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask that the gentleman be given 10 minutes, if he needs that much time, in which to finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. SHERLEY. I will take the 10 minutes and try not to unduly delay——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may have permission to conclude his remarks on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. His rôle was a rôle of constantly urging the printing of information rather than censoring it. Practically the only direct censorship that has been asked of the newspapers is found in a printed memorandum that has been sent to all the newspapers of the country, and it is to be found on page 23 of the hearings, and sets out the number of things that it is desirable publication shall not be made concerning; and I doubt if anybody will question the advisability of such things being prohibited. It is as follows:

[Committee on Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.]

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT ASKS OF THE PRESS.

The desires of the Government with respect to the concealment from the enemy of military policies, plans, and movements are set forth in the following specific requests. They go to the press of the United States directly from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and represent the thought and advice of their technical advisers. They do not apply to news dispatches censored by military authority with the expeditionary forces or in those cases where the Government itself, in the form of official statements, may find it necessary or expedient to make public information covered by these requests.

For the protection of our military and naval forces and of merchant shipping it is requested that secrecy be observed in all matters of—

1. Advance information of the routes and schedules of troop movements. (See par. 5.)

2. Information tending to disclose the number of troops in the expeditionary forces abroad.

3. Information calculated to disclose the location of the permanent base or bases abroad.

4. Information that would disclose the location of American units or the eventual position of the American forces at the front.

5. Information tending to disclose an eventual or actual port of embarkation, or information of the movement of military forces toward seaports or of the assembling of military forces at seaports from which inference might be drawn of any intention to embark them for service abroad; and information of the assembling of transports or convoys; and information of the embarkation itself.

6. Information of the arrival at any European port of American war vessels, transports, or any portion of any expeditionary force, combatant or noncombatant.

7. Information of the time of departure of merchant ships from American or European ports, or information of the ports from which they sailed, or information of their cargoes.

8. Information indicating the port of arrival of incoming ships from European ports or after their arrival indicating, or hinting at, the port at which the ship arrived.

9. Information as to convoys and as to the sighting of friendly or enemy ships, whether naval or merchant.

10. Information of the locality, number, or identity of vessels belonging to our own Navy or to the navies of any country at war with Germany.

11. Information of the coast or antiaircraft defenses of the United States. Any information of their very existence, as well as the number, nature, or position of their guns, is dangerous.

12. Information of the laying of mines or mine fields or of any harbor defenses.

13. Information of the aircraft and appurtenances used at Government aviation schools for experimental tests under military authority, and information of contracts and production of air material, and information tending to disclose the numbers and organization of the air division, excepting when authorized by the Committee on Public Information.

14. Information of all Government devices and experiments in war material, excepting when authorized by the Committee on Public Information.

15. Information of secret notices issued to mariners or other confidential instructions issued by the Navy or the Department of Commerce relating to lights, lightships, buoys, or other guides to navigation.

16. Information as to the number, size, character, or location of ships of the Navy ordered laid down at any port or shipyard, or in actual process of construction; or information that they are launched or in commission.

17. Information of the train or boat schedules of traveling official missions in transit through the United States.

18. Information of the transportation of munitions or of war material.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Photographs conveying the information specified above should not be published.

These requests go to the press without larger authority than the necessities of the war-making branches. Their enforcement is a matter for the press itself. To the overwhelming proportion of newspapers who have given unselfish, patriotic adherency to the voluntary agreement, the Government extends its gratitude and high appreciation.

THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION,
By GEORGE CREEL, Chairman.

JANUARY 1, 1918.

It was impressed on the committee that the real evolution of this Committee on Public Information had been from that of negation to one of affirmation, of affirmative action, of serving to inform the people of America and peoples abroad of the real facts that led this country into war with Germany, and with those facts which, when known, necessarily justified the position that this country has assumed and justified her in going to war with Germany.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the Committee on Appropriations inquire into the question of whether the Committee on Public Information, through its different agencies, wrote captions for newspaper articles setting forth the advance preparation made by the United States, and with regard to the readiness with which we were prepared to meet the situation with aircraft?

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee did make an inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. What excuse did he make for having done that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Perhaps the excuse is found in a refusal to admit in its entirety the correctness of the premises upon which the gentleman bases his inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. I read the statement of a man named Rubley, if I recall—I am not sure that I get the name right—made before the Military Committee of the Senate, in which he did admit it, if the record of the hearings tells the truth.

Mr. SHERLEY. There were three matters touching affirmative information that was given out by the Committee on Public Information concerning which there has been considerable criticism, and inquiry was made touching each of them. One of them grew out of the statement that was made by the committee in connection with the first movement of troops crossing the water last July, and in which it was stated that these transports had been subject to submarine attack. There came a denial through the Associated Press, based upon the representations of a correspondent across the water. There is placed in the record the report of Admiral Gleaves, touching that, which seems to have warranted the statement that was given out, although it may not have warranted the flamboyant language with which the statement was accompanied. The other question was as to the accuracy of the statements in connection with the aeroplane development. The statement made by Mr. Creel is that what was published was published as having come from the War Department, and, as they then believed, as an accurate statement relative to the matter; that with that statement went certain photographs which were photographs of aeroplanes that were being built.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. That the photographs plainly showed they were photographs of training planes and were not photographs of fighting planes; but that, inasmuch as these pictures were liable to be used so as to give the impression that they represented fighting planes that had been and were being built to ship abroad, at the instance of the Senate committee the pictures were withdrawn. Mr. Creel then went on to say that he had urged and had finally succeeded in having placed in the department men who on behalf of the Committee on Public Information were there to find out the activities of the department and to check up statements that might be made touching such activities, in order that the committee in a particular sense might be responsible for whatever it issued touching the facts in connection with any department, and that it had been and was the policy of the committee to give the facts, whether those facts were agreeable or disagreeable, whether they were creditable or discreditable. And I believe that this statement is warranted fully, namely, that there was nothing that developed in the entire hearing that warrants the belief on the part of anyone that at any time, in any way, the Committee on Public Information sought to use its position to mislead the public, to play politics, to be partisan, to be sectional, or to do other than to advise the people of America, whose war it is, of the facts in connection with that war, and to use its efforts to put behind the Government a united people in the prosecution of this war.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the statement of imaginary things done would tend in the ultimate analysis to bring the people unitedly together for America in the war?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. But I think it is proper, instead of putting the question in the form of a statement of that kind, to designate the imagined things which have been given out, with the evidence to show they were imaginary.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield in a moment, but I would like to make this suggestion.

Here is a committee that has been engaged since April of last year in work that is not only of first importance but of first difficulty. If only three evidences of mistakes as to its statements can be shown, when it has given out thousands of statements, even assuming there is no explanation of those three, I maintain it is an average that is rarely equaled by bureaus of government here or elsewhere. Now, that does not justify the giving out of any statement that is false, and if there was any proof that there had been a statement given out by Mr. Creel or his committee which they knew to be false and had been given out for the purpose of deception, I hope I have enough manhood to stand here and denounce it, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would denounce it. But if there be such evidence of intentional wrong I have not come in contact with it.

Now, I do not mean that the statement which was issued by the War Department, and which this committee accepted as coming from the War Department, was altogether warranted; but I do mean to say that the committee in its efforts and in its work has undertaken honestly to perform, without bias and without party malice or party prejudice, the very high functions that pertain to it.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not making any party charges.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know the gentleman is not; and yet the gentleman would be warranted in making them if these people undertook to bolster up an administration against the facts. In that case they would be subject to criticism.

Mr. MADDEN. The charge I make is this. The gentleman asked me to make it specific. The admission of the men themselves who wrote the article to the effect that they had no information upon which to base the article except newspaper stories purporting to have come from the Secretary of War. I claim that there is no justification for the publication of articles calling the attention of the American people to the fact that we are well prepared to meet the emergency in the matter of airplanes when the fact is that we had no airplanes; and when they were compelled to admit, and when the colonel who was in charge of the airplane construction, or of the information that was supposed to emanate from the bureau having charge of it, came before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and submitted himself that there were no airplanes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The distinction that the gentleman ought in fairness to make is a distinction between the statement that Mr. Creel had made of his own knowledge or lack of knowledge and the statement which came from the Committee on Public Information, predicated on what they had reason to believe were the facts as given out by the War Department.

Mr. MADDEN. My point is that the committee is holding such an important position in the public eye that it ought not to base any action that it takes or any publication that it makes upon any imaginary thing, but that it should be positively certain that the facts existed upon which it based its publications.

Mr. SHERLEY. They not only share that view of the gentleman, but they share it so thoroughly that for months they have urged and finally succeeded in getting the right to have certain officers of the Government working under the Committee on Public Information in the various departments whose business it is to check matters that are given to the public for information, in order that when the committee gives it it may give it with the knowledge of its accuracy. And the evidence of the desire of this committee to do that is perfectly plain, unless you believe that the men who testified before our committee were deliberately undertaking to deceive our committee and not to tell the truth.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky relieves Mr. Creel of any responsibility in connection with the publications to which I have referred and places the burden of that responsibility upon the War Department. I doubt very much any disposition on the part of the War Department, from the Secretary down, to do anything that would mislead the public.

Mr. SHERLEY. I agree with the gentleman. But this frequently happens—I spoke of it the other day, without having this matter in mind at all: The natural tendency on the part of any man engaged in activities is to view those activities from the optimistic standpoint and to believe that the things that he is doing are being well done, and that the criticisms that are made at him are criticisms that are not warranted. I am not going to undertake to go into the controversy that has raged around the question of airplane production. There have been statements of all sorts made—good, bad, and indifferent. I hope, as every man who hopes for the desirable things for his Government does, that the airplane department will do work that will go forward and be successful, and if there have been the mistakes that have been alleged in the past that they have been and will be corrected. But it seems to me that that is aside from the matter that is directly before the House.

Now, Mr. Creel did make a statement, and honestly conceded that he thought he should not have made it—he made a statement touching the way the Liberty motor had been created. I do not mean he created the story, but rather that he repeated the story that had been known by many of us here, and which the gentleman from Massachusetts, when he made the statement before the committee said had also been made before our committee, and that is that some gentlemen had gotten together in a room and had there stayed and worked until they had perfected the Liberty motor, and so on. How far that story is warranted by the actual facts I do not know, but most of us have heard it in various shapes and forms for months past.

Now, briefly, I want to call your attention to the activities that have been engaged in by this committee.

They have not only undertaken to give out statements as to what the governmental departments were from time to time doing, but they have issued a series of publications that are of tremendous value and that served to show an amount of ability and impartial skill on the part of the writers that can not be too highly commended; pamphlets as to how America came to enter into the war, the facts that underlie it, statements as to German kultur, statements as to German spy propaganda in this country. And I defy anyone to read those statements without being convinced of the admirable way in which they have been prepared and of the very great value that they have been to the country in clearly and concisely and definitely bringing home to every person that came in contact with them the real reasons that led this country into war and that justify it now in continuing that war to the bitter end.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have not had time to examine these hearings as carefully as I might, but I have been wondering if in the hearings there was any information giving a résumé of the expenditures that have been made by this Committee on Public Information?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir. There have been in each instance statements undertaking to tell somewhat of the moneys that have been expended and of the moneys that they expect they will need to expend in the way of the preparation of these pamphlets and their distribution, and also in connection with other activities they have engaged in.

I submit herewith a statement of expenditures.

Now, one of the things done by the committee has been to develop what are known as the four-minute men. Mr. Blair is in charge of that work, and he has had under him something like thirty-five thousand and odd speakers who, in connection with liberty bond campaigns, Red Cross campaigns, and other activities, have spoken at the various theaters and elsewhere for three or four minutes at a time. These speakers have been furnished with information, with data, and with suggestions touching the character of speeches that could properly be made within that limit of time. Mr. Blair is a Republican, a gentleman who was active in the campaign for Mr. Hughes. He tells of his activities in connection with this work, and he also gives a statement as to his conception of Mr. Creel and Mr. Creel's work which I commend to the reading of all of the membership of the House. And this is true: So far as I know there has been no complaint and no suggestion that these four-minute men have not been engaged in the making of patriotic speeches that have been of very great value; and certainly the testimony is without contradiction that there has been no suggestion at any time or place looking to the use of these men in any partisan or party or sectional or narrow sense, or in any other sense than the one great, consuming, patriotic desire to inform the people of America, so that being informed they might fully realize the reasons for this country being at war, and with all the energy of a hundred million of people support the Government in the successful prosecution of the war. [Applause.]

There is also testimony as to the activities that the committee have engaged in, in connection with moving pictures, the arrangement of pictures that might carry visually to the people of America the facts as to what we were doing in the way of the creation of an Army and Navy and in the way of preparedness for them, what we were doing abroad and elsewhere.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to ask if the picture that they displayed at Poli's last week is an example of what they are doing in that line?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the picture of Pershing's Crusaders was prepared by this committee. I did not see the picture——

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is the biggest humbug that has ever been put before the public.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have heard a great many expressions of very high commendation of the picture. Of course questions of taste are questions of taste, as the old lady said when she kissed the cow, and I doubt if you will ever get any number of people to agree as to what constitutes good or bad or indifferent moving pictures; but I have certainly heard no criticism of the picture because of its undertaking to teach an unpatriotic or an inaccurate or a false lesson touching the war.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree to that, but I think the picture itself does not do justice to the country, and that it is a humbug. It does not present the case of America in the sense that it should be presented.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the picture was built with the idea of understatement rather than overstatement; and if that be a fault, it certainly is a fault on the right side. But they have endeavored by these pictures and by other pictures to present to the people the situation as it exists. For instance, as an incident to the activities of the Signal Corps, pictures are being taken abroad for the preservation of a historical account of the war. These pictures are examined by this committee, and are then, to the extent that they seem valuable and appropriate, used in the making of slides here in America, short reels and long reels and plays such as the one that has just been referred to.

They have also printed a great deal of news. They have gotten the artists of America to prepare the posters that have been used in connection with Liberty drives, Red Cross work, war-savings stamps campaigns, and other posters that in many instances, I think, speak wonderfully well for the artistic ability of American artists. This has been done practically without expense. They have also obtained through the advertising organizations the space that has been used in the newspapers. You have seen it from day to day. Whole pages of space have been contributed, and the words "contributed by So and So" appear at the bottom or at one corner, and the rest of the page is given to the advocacy of some governmental activity. They have brought together some of the best magazine writers in America, who have volunteered their work and produced stories designed to carry to the people of America a more intimate knowledge of the work that is being prosecuted in connection with the war. So I might go on enumerating for a great deal of time the activities that have been undertaken by this committee. If gentlemen will turn to page 166 of the hearings, they will find a two and one-half page summary of the various activities of the committee, which will show very well the range that they have taken and the value of the work.

Now, in concluding, I want to say just one or two words touching Mr. Creel himself. One of the serious indictments brought against Mr. Creel has been in connection with certain editorials written by him as editorial writer for a Denver newspaper, then owned by the late Senator Patterson. In one of these editorials it was charged Mr. Creel had shown a hostility to the Catholic Church and had assumed the correctness of certain charges that had been brought in connection with the Vatican and the then President of the United States. In point of fact, the article as a whole was an article setting forth those charges in order to deny them and refute them, and that has been testified to by leading Catholic journals. Touching the other articles, which were written during a heated campaign in connection with the initiative, referendum, and recall, Mr. Creel gives this in response: First, they were written a good many years ago, and he very properly says that he thinks he should be judged by what he has been doing since as the head of this bureau and what he has written since rather than by these articles.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. I should like to complete this summary.

Mr. MADDEN. In connection with this point.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. In regard to Mr. Creel's refusal to go slumming and to look into the hearts of Members of Congress——

Mr. SHERLEY. I will deal with that in a few moments. But whether that be a matter of criticism, it does not bear any relationship to these editorials that were printed years ago. He says that these editorials were written daily in the heat of a campaign and in support of a program for the initiative, referendum, and recall, three things that he then believed and still believes in thoroughly; that he does not undertake to defend in their literal reading the editorials so written.

Speaking for myself, I want to say that there is not a line of them that I am in accord with at all. Men who know me know perfectly well that I have no faith in statements such as these were. I make no defense of them as such because I do not approve of them, but I can not help believing that editorials as extreme as those ought to be judged in the light of the environment in which they were written.

I have not read many Denver newspapers, because I am not often there, but those I have read in the midst of heated campaigns were not of such a character as to commend themselves to the reader because of the conservatism of their utterance. [Laughter.] I think that is putting it mildly. So that you can take these editorials for what you please, they belong to the past anyway.

Touching the statement to which the gentleman from Illinois has just referred I have no sort of defense for it. I do not believe that Mr. Creel or any other man is justified in making the statement he made in connection with the question that was asked him at the conclusion of the speech he had made relative to Congress. He makes a statement touching it and he has done this: He has written and apologized to the Congress of the United States. The apology is in a letter written to Mr. POU as chairman of the Committee on Rules. When a man apologizes for an utterance that largely closes the incident, at least to the extent of a discussion about the wisdom of the thing. It ought not to have been done, and Mr. Creel has said that it ought not to have been done, and has apologized for it. I leave the matter there, in no sense undertaking to defend or commend the statement that has been made.

Mr. MADDEN. May I add one more word as an expression of my view of it?

Mr. SLERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I think a man occupying a high public place such as Mr. Creel occupies, who has made such a statement as that about the Congress of the United States that appropriates the money for the conduct of the department that employs him, ought to be dismissed from the public service instanter, regardless of whether he apologizes or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is proper to say that Mr. Creel, in his apology, has called attention to the fact that he did not hold such views in making the statement; that he had made an unfortunate statement for which he was sorry. He also called attention to the public official action over his own signature that he had taken touching Congress and the work of Congress, in which he had commended very highly the activities of the work of the War Congress.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. POU. I think it is proper to say just here that at the very time Mr. Creel made that foolish and indefensible remark this bureau was engaged in the work of preparing a résumé of the work of Congress, entirely to its credit, and which was absolutely not in harmony with his remark.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, I think this is fair, gentlemen. I have all the feeling that every other man has and ought to have against the slurs about the Congress of the United States, because after 16 years of service here I have from year to year a growing respect for my colleagues and the motives that actuate them in the performance of their public duties. I think too frequently there has been a flippancy touching the action of men in Congress. Yet it is fair to say that when one has been speaking extemporaneously and at the close of a meeting is plied with questions, though he answers them foolishly, indefensibly, it is under an environment that makes possible an interpretation of the thing said that is frequently far from the intention or sober thought of the man saying it.

Now, that is not a defense, it is not a justification, but it does serve to bring to those of us who undertake to pass upon the motives of others the environment that ought to be taken as a part of the thing complained of and as an interpretation to some degree of how it happened to occur.

There are other matters of Mr. Creel's that I do not defend, and I repeat these have been things that ought not to have been done, but I have tried to look at this matter somewhat dispassionately, and weigh the good and the bad. This is true, and it should be borne in mind by this committee, that whether this man is responsible for the work of the committee or not, whether it has been because he has had the wisdom to surround himself with men of foresight and ability, whether it be because he has brought to them suggestions of value and a desire to serve, or whether it be the incident of chance, the fact remains that the work of the Committee on Public Information, judged as a whole, must be pronounced good work. [Applause.]

Now, the importance of this work is beyond the personality of individuals. The President is responsible both by what he has authorized in the past and by the language of this amendment now for the activities that the Committee on Public Information will be permitted to engage in. I am not prepared to deny moneys to that committee to continue the work that I think has been of extreme value in helping to solidify the public opinion of America, and to make for the better prosecution of the war and for the morale of the people of America. I am not prepared to deny to the President the discretion with the responsibility as to the agencies that he shall employ in the continuation of this important work. And in fairness I can not deny to Mr. Creel credit for much of the good work that the Committee on Public Information has done.

The amount we have recommended is less than asked, but would seem to be sufficient if administered with economy. If it should prove inadequate, the fact can be shown when Congress meets in the fall, and additional moneys voted if the accounting then had shall warrant it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: At the end of the committee amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the payment of the salary of any person who on the fifth of June, 1917, was between the ages of 21 and 31 years unless he has been placed in a deferred classification by his local board on account of physical defects which incapacitated him for military duty."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, speaking for myself, and I am reasonably certain for the committee, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I have nothing to say in respect to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that much of the work of the Committee on Public Information has been of great value. Germany's violations of international and local law have been so flagrant, the cruelties which she has practiced have been so atrocious, the duplicity which she has used with reference to those for whom she has professed friendship has been so villainous, and her acts in setting up in this country a nest of spies who would destroy our property while she pretended to be in friendship with us, have been of such a nature that few of the people at large would believe the real facts with reference to her until they were set under their eyes by the most undisputable evidence. I know, in the first instance, I had some difficulty myself in believing that any nation in this day of civilization, in this day of progress, when we have thought that we had improved in morality and ethics, could possibly be guilty of the acts which Germany has been shown to have committed. The only way of getting these matters before the people thoroughly and completely, of furnishing them with the evidence which they needed to satisfy them on this point, has been through the Committee on Public Information, and in that way, I think, it has discharged a very valuable and useful work. Some of its activities, however, whether they were under the direction of Mr. Creel or not, have not been of that character.

I recall a time last winter when Mr. Charles Edward Russell was making speeches throughout the Middle West. In the course of those speeches he denounced this Congress as an utterly incompetent body, an unworthy body. He denounced individual Members, talking about who should be elected and who should not be in the same manner as a speaker in the political hustings. He indulged in some very strange statements, declaring at that particular time that we were passing through the darkest period in our history—whether because of the war or by reason of the membership of Congress I am unable to state. I say he made these statements, because all of the newspapers in reporting his speeches seemed to agree upon it. Let me lay down this principle, which I hope all public servants will observe, that no man in the employ of the Government has any right to go about denouncing Congress. The ordinary citizen may criticize this body as he pleases. Against him our only defense is and should be the integrity of our conduct and the nature of our actions; but any man who is in the employ of this Government has no business to go around and criticize those who were sent here as representatives of the people to employ him and direct his actions. I recall that during the time of the Civil War some generals, very prominent at that time, saw fit to criticize Congress very severely in some letters written, I think, to the Members of this House, and that President Lincoln, to their Commander in Chief, used language substantially like this:

Members of Congress speak of me in their places—meaning in the Senate and in the House—as they choose. That is their right and privilege, but it is not the right and privilege of officers to criticize Congress, and I warn you that I will not permit it.

This insubordinate conduct was stopped then and there, as it ought to have been. I suppose this man Russell was in the employ of some speakers' bureau. It is possible that Mr. Creel was not directly responsible for his employment, and of course no one knew what he was going to say when he was sent out, because he is of such a character that no one could tell.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not know what the expressions are that the gentleman complains about, but Mr. Russell made three speeches in my State, and I had some letters from there, and they wanted him to go to other places in the State to speak. He received commendation upon every side. I read one of the speeches that he made at the capital in my State, and I thought it was a very splendid speech.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is that one of the speeches in which he denounced Congress as an utterly incompetent body?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to be led in that direction, but the gentleman has forced me into it. There seems to have been a slight difference in the situation when Mr. Russell was speaking down South. He was then in a region where there are no Republican Members of Congress. That seems to have made quite a difference with Russell's utterances, and it makes his conduct just that much more reprehensible. It was highly improper for him to turn his utterances into a political harangue, when he was supposed to be going over the country making patriotic speeches.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, that Mr. Russell or anyone else speaking under the auspices of this committee or any other governmental agency, who undertakes to criticize Members of Congress, ought immediately to be taken off the stump; and I want to say that if I had known of the instance of which the gentleman speaks, I should have made inquiry of Mr. Creel. This I think I ought to say, that it is the only instance of the kind that I have heard of in connection with more than 9,000 speakers.

Mr. CANNON. Who is Charles Edward Russell, and what place does he hold?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Charles Edward Russell is a prominent Socialist and writer for magazines and newspapers. The gentleman from Kentucky says he is no longer in the employ of the bureau.

Mr. ROSE. Is it not a fact that Mr. Russell, in speeches in certain States of the Union, has actually named certain Members of Congress who should not be returned to this body?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman states the fact. I might say further in answer to what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has said, with whose statement I most heartily agree, that it is an unfortunate fact that some other speakers, although not going to the extent that Mr. Russell did, have subjected themselves to like criticisms. I do not know of any of them who undertake to denounce Congress as a body or to denounce particular Members of Congress, but I do know some of them were very indiscreet in their language.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman know one of the most prominent administration papers in New York City the other day said of this Congress that it had touched probably the lowest level of intelligence of any Congress in many years?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I said before, Congress will have to make its defense against such slanders by the integrity of its action and the results of its work. We can not control the press, which is free to print what it pleases, even though this freedom be abused, but this is different from a Government employee taking such a course.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield further? I wondered if the man who so speaks was aware that this Congress has enacted practically every particle of war legislation that has been recommended by the administration?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Undoubtedly not; but I do not care to get into a controversy with some newspaper. Such writings are usually inspired by the ignorance of the author, and are deserving only of the attention which ignoramuses are generally accorded. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that the Bureau of Public Information has a function that might be of great good in these trying times, with me goes without question. That it is not doing the good that it might do, I think, will be conceded when we stop and consider the fitness of the gentleman who is at its head and directing its activities. That it has done much good I am willing to concede, but I believe that that good has been done in spite of rather than by the support of the gentleman who is at the head of it. Mr. Creel is not only temperamentally but he is socially and politically unfit for the position that he holds; and I form this judgment not from what he said 10 years ago but from his reaffirmation of what he said 10 years ago, and from what he has said with reference to other things that have been referred to, and which I will endeavor to refer to before I am through. This is a time when above all others we should be holding foremost before the minds of the people the things for which we are contending, and which justify us in being in this war. Those things should be held before the people by those who are in charge of public information, who are in sympathy with those things not only now but who have been in sympathy with them, and who by their work show to the world that they are entitled to the confidence of all the people. Mr. Creel gave utterance to things in the editorials that have been referred to, and to which I wish to call the attention of this body, that no man whose sympathies were in accord with our kind of Government and the fundamental principles upon which it is based could possibly give utterance to. Now Mr. Creel admits that he is the author of this editorial:

The socialists, single taxers, nonpartisans, and commissioned government men are to us as Caleb and Joshua, bearing the grapes gathered in Canaan, were to the waiting Israelites, only with us it remains to be seen whether the grapes are sweet or sour.

The law winks complacently or else groans impotently at the crimes of those in high places; it does not punish or prevent the offenses of those with political power, whose crimes are against the property of the people, or of others whose rapacity results in the accumulation of vast profits.

Instead of standing before the world as a triumphant democracy, in which one man is not favored before his brother, America is now regarded as a Nation of commercial "sharks," willing to devour one another if other game is not at hand.

Money is now the standard, no matter how acquired, whether by dishonesty or cruelty or a clever combination of both. Morality is now of small account, and intellectual endeavor is now so little a paying proposition that only a fool will work at it.

Mr. Creel says these sentiments were uttered a number of years ago, and he now says he regrets that he gave them utterance, and yet before he is through with his testimony before this committee he says that he recants not one whit of these expedients or these sentiments. Now, if he does not recant these things now, what does he stand for? Does he stand for anything that this republican form of our Government guarantees?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Is he not speaking in violation not only of the Constitution which guarantees them, but in defiance of the law that protects property rights of this country? I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does Mr. Creel's statement quite warrant that assertion?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. He does not recant as to the initiative, referendum, and recall, nor does he undertake to say that these editorials were not written and written at a time when under the circumstances he felt like writing them, but does not he expressly say that they do not represent his viewpoint now?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He does say that in substance in connection with his explanation, but by and by when he forgets the necessity of his excuse at a time when he spoke from the heart, and not through the camouflage he has been acting under since he has been in this place, this is what he says:

I do not recant my faith in any degree in such expedients of government——

Mr. SHERLEY. What page is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. From page 160.

Mr. SHERLEY. What Mr. Creel was referring to there, at least that was the impression made upon the committee, was the initiative, referendum, and recall which he says he believed in. I do not believe in them, but there are a great many folks who do.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman read all of that sentence where he says he does not recant his faith in any degree in such expedients of Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will read it all:

I want to reiterate the statement, if I may, that while those articles are all pleas for direct legislation, and while I do not recant my faith in any degree in such expedients of government, the spirit of the articles, however badly the phrasing may read to-day, does not indicate any lack of faith in our institutions or any lack of love for them.

These articles are the best evidence of whether or not there is any lack of faith in our Government and in our governmental institutions. It is easy now for this gentleman to coin phrases for the purpose of covering up his intent, but we should gather his intent from his acts in this case, like we would in any other case where there is one accused and upon trial. So, I say, if he does not recant—and he says he does not—any of these expedients, he stands for the worst possible socialism; he stands for the bolsheviki kind of government; he stands for the I. W. W. kind of government; and, if you please, not only by his spoken word and reaffirmation, but by his acts in sending such men as Mr. Russell around over this country blatantly giving to the people ideas concerning a socialistic form of government he is reaffirming his belief in this character of doctrine.

That is not all the gentleman has said, and to which he has added "I do not recant."

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. Are there not very many good people who believe in the initiative, referendum, and recall?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There are a good many people who believe in the initiative, referendum, and recall, but if they do they are not the kind of men that ought to be at the head of this Government's activities now, when not only the courts of this country should be a bulwark to the rights and liberties of our people, but a guarantee to the world for what we stand.

Mr. MAYS. Is there not a very distinguished man, who was once President of the United States, who now believes in those expedients?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Whether he now believes in them or not I can not answer. He advocated them at one time. I trust that he has arrived at a period when he will not only recant by words but by deeds.

The gentleman further says:

A new and distinctly critical attitude toward the courts—

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman, before he reads that, let me ask him a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if the initiative, referendum, and recall were put into effect now, we would have to refer the question of whether we would raise a new company or a new regiment, and all that sort of thing, before we did anything, would we not?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely. And to go back a little further, we would have had to refer to the country the greatest question that has ever confronted our people, whether we should or should not enter this war. We would have had to refer to the country another great question, new in this country, whether the soldiers of the United States should be conscripts or volunteers. So that when we enter into that realm the mere mention of these things shows the danger of them and what might have befallen this country had they been given enforcement then.

Mr. Creel says:

A new and distinctly critical attitude toward the courts is a most striking sign of the times. Whether by cunning design or mere force of submission, the dawn of the twentieth century found the judiciary occupying a curious and remarkable position in American life. Judges were held in almost superstitious reverence, not to awe, and as much exempted from the usual official restraints as though they had been beings from another world.

Historical records showing that Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, and Lincoln had attacked the Supreme Court with vigor and frequency had been expunged and were as if they had never been. Men were chosen to be mayors, governors, and Presidents and were still considered as fallible human beings, but elections in the cases of judges were gravely assumed to repeat the figure of the Transfiguration. People deemed them born again, stripped of all passions, prejudices, frailties, and friendships—Olympians, in fact, who sat in a vacuum and thought in purity most profound.

All effects of stagecraft were employed to heighten this feeling. Lawyers prefaced each sentence with "Your Honor." Everyone had to rise when judges entered the court room. They wore the garb of another age. No one queried their right to impose fine and imprisonment when angered or affronted. Unreasoning and unfaltering respect for the judiciary was just as much regarded as a heritage from the reverenced fathers as the Declaration of Independence.

In 10 years a mighty change has come about. In every State men are now looking judges full in the eye; throughout the length and breadth of the land there is a deep-seated distrust of courts, a growing conviction that the steady extension of judicial power is a menace to democratic institutions.

It is not a case of individual judges or certain decisions being singled out for assault; this new and emphatic questioning cuts at the very root of the entire system. As one goes from the Atlantic to the Pacific a sentiment in favor of the abolition of the whole Federal judiciary below the Supreme Court becomes increasingly apparent.

It is not local nor is it a class protest. The movement includes all sorts and conditions of men, and its national importance is attested by the fact that many magazines are commencing series of articles on this subject. Much of the rankest criticism comes from those who have no apparent kinship with the masses.

Now, this gentleman who says that he is sorry that in the heat of a campaign he gave utterance to these words, and that they are not entirely expressive of his ideas now, says, "I do not recant one iota of my faith in these expedients." If he does not recant, what are these expedients? One of them, if you please, is striking down the very barrier that has stood for the people of the United States and in protection of the rights of the lowest as well as the rights of the highest, namely, the Federal courts of the United States. He does not recant that expedient. He would, if you please, if he had the power to-day, with one stroke of the pen destroy the Federal court system of the United States. Can you say to me, then, that a man who uttered those sentiments and who believes them now and is not willing to recant them is the character of man that ought to be giving information to the people of the United States that will spur them to the greatest action and that will inspire confidence among them? If we were selecting a man to-day to go at the head of some great business enterprise, would we select him because his whole life had been inimical to that character of project? If, forsooth, he says, "I am sorry I have been against that kind of work, but I will try to do my best in favor of it now," would we engage him? No. You would take a man whose every act had been in accord with that institution.

The attitude occupied by the gentlemen who are offering apologies in behalf of this man reminds me of the story of the preacher in the Civil War, who preached good sermons on Sunday, but the remainder of the week he employed in beating the soldiers out of their pay playing seven-up, and when taken to account said, "It is your business to do what I tell you to do, and not what I do." Just as much confidence can be inspired by any man who is inimical to the interests of the country and who is not in accord with them as there could be in the preacher to whom I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. On the subject of the initiative I find that 20 States have adopted the initiative and referendum according to the encyclopedia of 1915, and the amendment is up in 12 additional States for adoption.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You do not hear any of them talking about it now; and if there had been a war at the time these States were asking for this thing, I dare say they would have been engaged in better business.

There is another thing which to my mind is evidence of the fact that this man should not be at the head of this great activity. He said, if you please, that he would be thankful to his dying day that we were not prepared when we entered into this war; that to have been prepared would be to put a lie to everything we are standing for. He said that, if you please, with full knowledge of the fact that by reason of this very unpreparedness hundreds of young men have already given up their lives, and thousands of them will give up their lives by reason of that unpreparedness. And when taken to task about that he first denied he gave utterance to those words, and then when it was established beyond question that he uttered them he began an explanation of what he meant and said how they should be taken in connection with his entire speech.

If this is the sentiment entertained by this man, is he the character of man that will inspire confidence in getting cohesion and coordination of all the interests of this country of ours?

And, again, the gentleman said—and there has been an apology made by him for it—that he would have nothing to do with this Congress; that he "did not care to go slumming." Now, that was not said, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHER-

LEY] would have you believe it was said, on the spur of the moment or in the heat of debate. It was said deliberately, for the reason that the society to which he was addressing himself requires that every interrogation submitted to a speaker after his address must be submitted in writing; and that interrogation was addressed to him in writing, and he gave the answer deliberately, and he was speaking his mind as to the manner in which he esteemed this body.

It was said by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, that while he was giving utterance to those words he was getting up a summarization of the things done by this Congress. It has been the coadjutors of this man who have made whatever of success has been attained by the institution, and they are the ones who prepared the summarization referred to. I have reason to believe that if the President of the United States had known the character of the man, as he now must know him, he would never have appointed him to this important function. I believe it is due to the people of the United States, who, now that the President knows him as he is, and for the benefit of our public institutions, that he should ask for his resignation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the critics of this administration must have a "goat." For a time their criticisms were directed against the Secretary of the Navy, and there was no limit to the criticism and abuse heaped upon Mr. Daniels. Since we entered the war and the efficiency of the Navy under the direction of Mr. Daniels has won the plaudits of the people of the allied nations as well as those of our own country, we now hear nothing but praise of the Secretary of the Navy. Disappointed by the success of Mr. Daniels, some men, like the distinguished Col. George Harvey, seek to discredit the Secretary of War, and in order that we may follow his villification of Mr. Baker he writes Members of Congress that free of charge he will send them his publications containing his unfriendly criticism. And then we have those who, knowing the efficient work of Mr. Baker, fear that they can not successfully attack him, and therefore attack another appointee of the President, Mr. Creel, who directs the Committee on Public Information. The work of this committee is a departure in governmental activities. The power to direct the sentiment of the people is, of course, susceptible to abuse. But unfriendly critics have searched the records to discover evidence of abuse of power by Mr. Creel, and the fact that they are to-day unable to point to a single abuse of the power vested in him is evidence of his fitness to discharge the duties of his office.

Of all the statements that have been issued by the Committee on Public Information since its establishment there are but four statements that have been questioned. No press association can boast of such a record. When Mr. Creel appeared before the Appropriations Committee he referred to these four statements and satisfactorily explained them to the members of the committee. One of them was a statement issued July 4, 1917, referring to the safe arrival in Europe of the first troops sent abroad. Mr. Creel stated before us that that statement was written by Secretary Daniels and himself in the presence of an admiral whose name I have for the moment forgotten, and that it was based upon the cable report of Admiral Gleaves, which report Secretary Daniels had in his hand at the time the statement was written.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Is not the gentleman mistaken there? As I read the hearings, Mr. Creel did not put in what he said he would—the telegram on which he based that story.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not state that Mr. Creel had inserted the cable of Admiral Gleaves in the RECORD. I remember that the gentleman from Massachusetts asked that the cable be inserted in the RECORD, and I have not noticed whether it was inserted. But the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that Mr. Creel stated to the committee exactly what I have said—that the statement in question was prepared by the Secretary of the Navy and was based upon the report of Admiral Gleaves.

The statement as to the aircraft situation he also satisfactorily explained to the committee, and if there was any inaccuracy no blame can attach to Mr. Creel.

The danger in the administration of an organization of this character is that it is possible to use it for partisan purposes. And the comfort you gentlemen should have is that notwithstanding its possibilities, careful examination shows that in every division there has been an absolute absence of partisanship. The bulletins to guide and direct the "four-minute" speakers of the country is prepared by the committee and a careful investigation of these bulletins will show that there is not one single sentence that bears any evidence of partisanship. Further, it is only fair to state that the gentleman who is in charge of this division, and who directs the activities of the four-minute men of the Nation, Mr. Blair, of Chicago, stated before the committee that he was a loyal Republican, and in the last presidential campaign not only voted for Mr. Hughes but actively aided him in his campaign. The hearings show that the men who are associated with Mr. Creel were employed by him without regard to political affiliations, and no inquiry was ever made as to the political affiliations of any employee until the question was asked by a Member of this House.

Realizing that the work of Mr. Creel as director of this committee can not be successfully questioned, his critics now attack him, not for anything he has done as Director of the Committee on Public Information, but for statements made in public speeches and for editorials written some years ago when he resided in Denver, Colo.

Let us first consider the editorials from the Rocky Mountain News which have been inserted in the RECORD. In justice to Mr. Creel we must recall the political situation as it then existed. The distinguished ex-President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, in 1912 sought the nomination for President at the hands of the Republican Party. With all the enthusiasm and ardor of which he is capable he advocated the theories afterwards adopted by the so-called Progressives. His campaign for the Republican nomination was opened in Ohio, where in a speech he advocated not only the initiative and referendum but the recall of judicial decisions. Sane men lost their heads in an effort to demonstrate their progressiveness. The constitutional convention was in session in the State of Colorado and the adventurous people of that State, ever ready to experiment, immediately proposed the adoption by the convention of the theories advocated by Mr. Roosevelt. A hot campaign ensued. No man can understand what this means unless he has been to Denver and read the newspapers published there. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is an idle day when the Denver newspapers do not carry red headlines with every letter 2 inches long. They see red and talk red. If a man without a sense of humor read any one of the newspapers published there during a campaign he would immediately arm himself and prepare for a riot. The followers of Mr. Roosevelt in Colorado proceeded to advocate with all their zeal the initiative and referendum, the recall of judicial decisions, and everything else that he had urged in his Ohio speech. Mr. Creel was among those who followed him, and in the campaign that followed he wrote the editorials complained of by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. Now, we know how editorial writers do their work. They must furnish so much copy per day; they work under high pressure; they have no time to revise their remarks, but write just as a Member of this House makes a stump speech. I certainly would hate to have the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] read to-day all the stump speeches he has made in years gone by.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman recalls that the principal criticism of Mr. Creel was not that he favored the initiative, referendum, and recall, but because of the statements that he made relative to the character of the Government in urging the referendum and recall.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Wyoming endeavors to come to the rescue of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], but the gentleman from Indiana did criticize Mr. Creel for advocating these measures, and yet it is a fact that 20 States of this Union have adopted the initiative and referendum, and 12 more States are considering it. In criticizing Mr. Creel for to-day reasserting his faith in these measures it should be borne in mind that he is but concurring in the wisdom of the people of 20 States of this Union. Certainly it is nothing for which he should be damned in this House. And the gentlemen on that side of the House who have so freely forgiven and so cordially embraced Mr. Roosevelt should not now criticize one who was then but an humble follower and merely advocated in the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, the adoption of the theories so strenuously advocated by Mr. Roosevelt.

The gentleman from Indiana says that Mr. Creel instead of recanting the views expressed in those editorials, has now reasserted them. The hearings show, on the contrary, that Mr.

Creel has only reasserted his faith in the measures he advocated, and not the language he used in advocating these measures. Here is what Mr. Creel says:

I want to reiterate the statement, if I may, that while those articles are pleas for direct legislation, and while I do not recant my faith in any degree in such expedients of government, the spirit of the articles, however badly the phrasing may read to-day, does not indicate lack of faith in our institutions or any lack of love for them.

Again, he says:

As I explained at the time, we were advocating the initiative, the referendum, and recall, and all of this was a part of the campaign out there seven years ago, a very heated campaign in advocacy of an idea that was novel, and appealed to the great many of us as a panacea, and the advocacy of which I have not changed in any degree; but as far as the phrasing is concerned, I regret it.

Can anyone ask for a manlier statement? He reasserts his faith in the measures advocated, but expresses regret that in the enthusiasm incident to a heated campaign he used extravagant statements which did not express his real thoughts as to our institutions.

The gentleman from Indiana also referred to the speech made by Mr. Creel in New York, which has been the subject of so much criticism. Of course, there is no defense for his statement on that occasion. I do not defend it nor does he defend it. On the contrary, like a man, he apologizes for it. In justice to him, we should consider the circumstances under which that statement was made. He stated before the committee that he had been speaking for about two hours; that for nearly an hour he had been answering questions, many of them ridiculous; that he became irritable, and on the spur of the moment, without any idea of the construction that would be placed on the language he used, he made the statement which reflected on this House. Thereafter he wrote the chairman of the Rules Committee, apologizing for the statement. Now, let us be fair. In addition to the apology made by Mr. Creel to the chairman of the Rules Committee, he has called attention to the fact that under his direction a bulletin was prepared as to the work of this Congress during the last session. The foreword or preface was written by him and signed by him. In that statement he pays tribute to the patriotic, able, and energetic manner in which this Congress has discharged its duties. In emphatic language he expressed his admiration for the work of the Congress of the United States, and that statement he has sent throughout the Nation, and it stands as proof of his sincerity in stating to-day that belief in the Congress and the other institutions of the Government is with him a religious belief.

If a man can write as much as Mr. Creel has written and can speak as often as he has spoken, and to-day, after the careful scrutiny to which his record has been subjected, nothing can be found other than the few editorials which have been referred to, and his speech in New York, his batting average is indeed high.

His associates have paid tribute to his creative genius, to his loyalty to his work, and his ability to enlist the enthusiastic support of those who surround him. Under his direction bulletins have been sent broadcast throughout the Nation, which have explained as nothing else could have explained our reasons for entering the war. In not one of them can there be found one sentence indicating a desire to advance the interest of any party. On the contrary, they appeal only to the patriotism of the people, and the demand for their distribution is evidence of their effectiveness in uniting the people in the prosecution of this war. The bulletins sent to the four-minute men breathe the spirit of patriotism and not of partisanship.

The work this committee has done at home and abroad justifies its continued existence, and it would be folly for us to even seriously consider refusing this appropriation, because the personality of the gentleman in charge of the work, may not be pleasing to some Members of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I favor this amendment, and my reason for favoring it is entirely apart from any question of personality; because strictly the personality of the men who are at the head of it, or their subordinates, is irrelevant to the amendment itself, and I shall not discuss them. The question is, Shall we make an appropriation for this bureau, or shall we leave it as it has been in the past—to be paid for by the President out of his emergency fund? It seems to me it is wiser for Congress to make the appropriation and determine upon the amount of it than it is to leave it as it has been before, entirely in the hands of the President. I am not going to discuss whether Mr. Creel ought to have been appointed originally, whether his editorials which have been cited here show that he was not of a temperament to make an ideal censor or an ideal head of a publicity bureau, because that is absolutely a matter for the Executive. All appointments belong to the Executive. The President is responsible and we are not, and if Mr. Creel's statement in New York later shows again that he was not of the temperament for that position, it was the duty and responsibility of the President to pass upon it, and not ours. So I am disposed to leave that responsibility where it belongs—upon the President. And, inasmuch as it is not our function to appoint or remove, our dissatisfaction and criticism should be directed to the appointing power. But after examining Mr. Creel and the other members of his bureau I came to the conclusion that as far as any evidence that we could discover it had not been conducted in a partisan spirit. That is the great danger of such a bureau as this, because we must all admit that if any administration has in its power a Bureau of Public Information, as it is called, but really an advertising bureau, a propaganda bureau, a bureau of publicity, to exploit the various acts and departments of the Government, it is a very dangerous thing in a Republic; because, if used in a partisan spirit or for the partisan advantage of the administration, it has tremendous power, and in ordinary peace times I do not think any party or any administration would justify it or approve it.

Until the statement made about Mr. Russell came before us I was unable to find that the bureau had not been conducted in a nonpartisan method for the purpose which it asserted, of encouraging a spirit of patriotism throughout the country. I think its pamphlets were well calculated for that purpose. The question arose about the aeroplanes which has been discussed here, and I think the chairman said that that was a question between Mr. Creel and the Secretary of War. Personally as to that I am disposed to agree that the mistake was with the Secretary of War, because I am judging from my own experience which I think I alluded to once before. The Secretary of War came before our committee last January and told us about the aeroplane production. I went home, I remember, the 1st of February and told my constituents that the aeroplane production was the one bright spot of all our war preparations and was the only one where achievement was keeping pace with expectations. That was because the Secretary of War had just told the committee so. I presume he told others the same. I was misled myself and misled my constituents. Consequently, in that respect I am not disposed to censure Mr. Creel.

As I stated at the outset, to me the personality of this bureau did not enter into my action in supporting this amendment in the committee, nor supporting it here, because it seems to me that it is a question of whether we shall make the appropriations or whether the President shall make them out of his war fund. I do recognize that the work of this bureau is a fair subject for criticism, and that the President is responsible both for the original selection and the continuance in office of his appointee, and both Mr. Creel and the President can justly be criticized for any act which he does now which a public official ought not to do, and any act which he may have done years before. But the one question before us is, Shall we make this appropriation or leave it, as has been done, to the President, without any suggestion or limitation by Congress? Between these two alternatives I thought it wise for Congress to express its opinion as to the amount of the appropriation, and for that reason I approve of this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the question before the House I will not refer to Mr. Creel further than to say that I think the defense of Mr. Creel by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was not necessary, because I do not consider that Mr. Creel would dare under any circumstances to send material to the country that was not patriotic, regardless of whether he wanted to or not. So I do not think Mr. Creel should be given any credit for patriotic literature that may have been sent to the public with a view of unifying the sentiment of the people of the Nation in the conduct of the war. If Mr. Creel should take advantage of the position he occupies and send anything else, he would not last very long, regardless of who might be behind him. So that can be set aside with those few words.

The question before us is whether we shall continue the Committee on Public Information, whether we shall appropriate for its activities, regardless of who may be at the head of it. It seems to me it makes no difference who is at the head of it or who is at the foot of it, the President of the United States is the responsible head, and the functions must be carried on in accordance with the patriotic sentiment of the American people, regardless of anybody. It makes no difference what I think about Mr. Creel—I do not know the gentleman, I never saw him, and I would not know him if I met him on the sidewalk with a signboard on him. All I know of him is by the things he has done, by the statements he has made, which I do not consider justified. I think, however, that it is the part of wisdom for the Congress to keep jurisdiction over all appropriations, for every governmental activity, and particularly for the activities on which this Committee on Public Information is engaged.

That is the only means by which Congress can control men who presume to exercise undue authority by reason of the position they occupy.

I will take my chances on any man in any place in the Government, no matter who he is, daring to do an unpatriotic thing. The American people themselves will not stand for that, and everybody, from the President down, realizes that the time has come when every ounce of power within the Government of the United States must be used for one purpose, the successful conduct of the war. [Applause.]

If the creation of a patriotic sentiment throughout the country by any means helps, I am for any appropriation that may be sought for that purpose. I do not care who you put at the head of the bureau, we will take care of him if he goes outside of his authority. I do not indorse or condemn Mr. Creel, who is at the head of this bureau. I hold the President of the United States, and the people of the United States do, accountable for everything the committee does. The President has proved his patriotism, and there is nobody in the United States who will deny that he is doing the very best he can to accomplish the object for which we went into the war. It is our duty to join forces in every way we can to help him, and if he lags to urge him on. That is what we are trying to do. If he fails to be sufficiently energetic to meet my views at any time while he is conducting this war, I will not hesitate to say so. I shall not consider that I am violating my privileges as a Member of Congress or as a citizen if I criticize the President for his failure to do a thing that I think will best promote the welfare of the American people and the success of the war. I have no criticism to make; I think he is doing the best he can to win the war——

Mr. GARNER. And making a success of the job.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). And we are all working as one, and my hope is that before we get through he will make a complete success of the job as my friend from Texas has quietly intimated. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in considering this item for the committee on public information, we are considering the appropriation for an important, useful, and necessary activity of the Government. It is regrettable that the discussion should largely relate, not to the activities of the bureau, but to the personality of the man at the head of it; and yet I think it is inevitable under the circumstances that such should be the case. I think that any man who attempts to defend all the utterances of Mr. Creel as an editorial writer on the Denver Rocky Mountain News, or some of his utterances at a still later and quite recent period, has a very trying task on his hands. I do not believe all these utterances can be successfully defended before the American people in their present frame of mind. Mr. Creel does not himself endeavor to defend all of them. He rather apologizes for some of them. Let me read some of those editorial utterances. It is said in regard to them and in extenuation of them that they were penned hurriedly by an editorial writer in the heat of a campaign for the initiative, referendum, and the recall, and that out of his tremendous desire to carry the issue, to win the campaign, he was led into extravagances of speech. Let no one confuse the issue. There is a very considerable difference of opinion among the American people as to the virtues of these instrumentalities of government and many good people believe in them. I personally believe in the theory, at least, on which they are urged. It is not a question of these issues; it is a question of a man's utterances expressive of an opinion of his country and of his Government. Mr. Creel in these Denver editorials, among other things, said that Lincoln Steffens had—> once compared the "free-born American citizen" to the Russian serf, arousing a storm of indignant protest thereby. And yet, coming right down to brass tacks, do we really enjoy any greater liberty, any larger measure of true governmental power than the subjects of the Czar?

Can people holding that kind of an opinion to-day be whole souled and whole-heartedly behind the Government in this war? Mr. Creel, among other things, said that the Senate—

> sits in despotism * * *. The law winks complacently or else groans impotently at the crimes of those in high places—

And more of the same sort.

> We have no more real control over an elected official than if he were Nicholas and we poor moujiks in the fields.

Then, speaking of the Constitution, after criticizing the manner of its formation, he said:

> Even as it was, the Constitution barely slipped through. But it did slip through, and from the very first the judiciary—real and intended masters of the Government—proceeded to justify the faith reposed in them by the conspirators against democracy.

That is, Jefferson and Washington and the rest of them! He further said or wrote:

> As a matter of fact, the Constitution was framed by rich men for the protection of their property—by aristocrats for the preservation of aristocratic privileges.

If there is anyone anywhere, Mr. Creel included, that now in calm thought and deliberate judgment cares to attempt to justify that sort of utterance, I guarantee he will not be found among the men who are whole-heartedly behind the Government in this war.

It is an unfortunate fact that in this country a few years ago there were many more or less brilliant but always ready writers who fell into the bad habit of constantly appealing to ignorance, prejudice, and passion, who adopted the practice of discrediting our Government and one after another about everybody and everything connected with it, and I am sorry to say that they received considerable applause and approval from certain classes of our citizenship. In my opinion it has taken a great deal of the activities of this very bureau, at the head of which is Mr. Creel, to overcome and right and rectify the error of view and frame of mind which they were largely responsible for creating by these extravagant and unjustifiable expressions.

I should like to feel entirely certain that Mr. Creel has come to a sound, sane, and sensible patriotic view of his country and its institutions. I am not altogether certain about it when I recall his answer to the question propounded to him in his New York speech—admitting that it was at the end of a long speech when he was tired and worn—an answer so characteristic of the muck-raking school of thought, belittling and contemptuous of one of the great legislative bodies of the Government, the one body in the land that represents all of the people. These utterances can not be justified, they are without justification, they indicate a frame of mind, or, at least, a trend of thought which is tremendously regrettable, and which, spread broadcast in the land in the past, has done much to create a question in the minds of many of our people as to the real virtue and justice of the foundations of our Government; and the true grandeur of our institutions. These are the doubts and false opinions that had to be combated when we took up the sword in defense of that democracy which in times past these gentlemen would have had the people believe did not exist under our flag.

So much for that. I have not desired to discuss Mr. Creel. I certainly have no ill will toward him, and have only referred to his former utterances because it seemed that it could not be avoided. But Mr. Creel is not the issue to-day. You did not appoint Mr. Creel. I did not appoint him. The President appointed him. The President may not have known either his past views and utterances or of his present views. I do not believe that he would now make the statements or feel disposed to make the statements that he did years ago. I am glad of it, as we all must be. There are a number of gentlemen at the head of responsible bureaus and departments of this Government with regard to whom I wish devoutly I had more confidence. There are gentlemen in very responsible positions with regard to whose ability and whose judgment I wish I could feel more assured, when I realize the importance of the work they have in charge in connection with the carrying on of the tremendous enterprise we have in hand. It is true my views may not be well founded in all respects with regard to these gentlemen, and in any event I am not responsible for them. I am responsible only as a Member of this House in providing the necessary funds and the necessary authority for the prosecution of the war, and if the President or anyone else fail in judgment or discretion in the appointment of men who are to carry on the essential work of the war the responsibility is theirs and not mine.

Having said this much about Mr. Creel and his past utterances, I now want to say that I believe Mr. Creel has endeavored to patriotically do his duty at the head of this bureau.

I am of the opinion that whatever his opinions may have been or may be now that, so far as his activities in connection with this work are concerned, they have been, in the main, judicious, and that the work has been carried on for the most part in a businesslike, thorough-going, effective, and patriotic way. Mr. Creel has called to his assistance and placed in positions of responsibility men of a variety of political views, some of them Republicans of recognized standing. I do not believe that Mr. Creel has endeavored to influence their activities, and I do not believe there have been any activities of the bureau consciously and intentionally partisan. A great work has been done. A great work has been done by the four-minute men, 40,000 of them speaking continuously to audiences, ready-made, all over the country. A great work has been done and will be done through the medium of the picture film. A great work has been done through the medium of the publications of the bureau, which I believe can be commended and approved by every good citizen. Much remains to be done, and I believe the committee has not granted any too much money for this work. I trust the work will be carried on in a useful, helpful way. There is need of it in the future, not perhaps as much as in the past, but there is need of a continuation of the proper activities of a bureau like this, and we can not withhold the moneys necessary for such work. I am willing to leave the responsibility of saying who shall be at the head of the bureau to the President.

Mr. WOODS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, several months ago we were considering the subject of the delivery of soldiers' mail abroad. I believe that was the original appearance on this floor of any criticism in reference to the chairman of the Committee on Public Information. In that connection, although not having a direct bearing on the matter under consideration to-day, I would like to refer for just a moment to an article in yesterday's Washington Post. Its heading "The Army has Christmas mail" is very illuminating. It is an article written with the troops in France on May 21, describing the receipt of Christmas packages by the soldiers on that date. Some of them were marked "Do not open until Christmas." I suppose that must refer to the Christmas of 1918, because as applicable to the Christmas of 1917 it would, of course, be extremely humorous and out of place. I would like to insert that extract from this interesting war article bearing on the question of soldiers' mail as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is this the article from the Saturday Evening Post?

Mr. TREADWAY. From yesterday's Washington Post—an extract from an article by William C. McRae, special correspondent of the Washington Post with the American Army in France. If the gentleman has any objection, I will withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I object to that; I think that sort of stuff has no business in the RECORD.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will read it in my time, I think; but I do wish to say there is no occasion for objection that I can see. But if the gentleman objects, why, let it go. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for the appropriation that the Committee on Appropriations recommends for the support of the Committee on Public Information. It seems to me that the explanation given by my colleague [Mr. GILLETT] covers the ground very fully indeed, as his remarks always do. I wish, however, particularly to refer to the statements of the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERLEY] and also of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], wherein they more or less apologize for Mr. Creel's remarks and statements. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that any man who would make the statement that was made by Mr. Creel in New York ought not to be in a responsible position connected with the Government. But it is not for us to decide, perhaps, whether he should or should not be so retained. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the delay in the apology. One of the principal reasons given why we should accept the gentleman's statement and his apology is his backing down, as it were, from the statement that he made.

That remark was made in New York on Sunday, May 12, and on May 14 a resolution of inquiry was introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules, of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is chairman. It was not until May 17, the following Friday, that Mr. Creel decided that he wanted to apologize, the morning on which the Committee on Rules set a hearing on the resolution introduced relative to Mr. Creel. That morning the chairman of the committee came to the Committee on Rules and made the statement that he had met Mr. Creel down town and that he was anxious to present a letter to the committee absolutely apologizing for any reference to Congress. It strikes me that it took the gentleman a good while to find out that he wanted to apologize to Congress for the remark he made.

In view of the many expressions of apology made by Mr. Creel and his satements that he frequently says things he does not mean, and in view of the very thorough investigation the Committee on Appropriations has made on this subject, it is hardly to be expected that the Committee on Rules will report the resolution originally introduced. It is, however, apparent that the resolution has served a useful purpose. While Mr. Creel is publicity agent for governmental items, and is the publisher of the Official Bulletin, the resolution has brought forward considerable publicity about Mr. Creel himself, of an unenviable nature. Furthermore, it brought out his letter of apology for the remarks he made in New York. It is very evident that no apology would have been forthcoming had Congress not taken the initiative.

It is more than a coincidence that his letter of apology was only received after the hearing on the resolution was under way. His apologists here to-day have not defended his personality nor have they claimed that he is the right man personally for the position he holds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administration: For expenses of the office of the commissioner, including stationery, scientific and reference books, periodicals, newspapers, for library, furniture, telegraph and telephone service, repairs to and heating, lighting, and equipment of buildings, compensation of temporary employees, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $10,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make an inquiry about the paragraph preceding the one just read, as to the reason why the officers and crews of the Bureau of Fisheries connected with certain vessels that are not under the classified service should be specifically brought within the protection of the civil-service status?

Mr. SHERLEY. Those three vessels are now used by the Navy, but the officers and crews have been for a great many years under the Bureau of Fisheries. They are men who are of value, and it was not believed it was entirely fair to them to just dismiss them and let them lose the status that they had in connection with those ships, and so it was provided that they should keep their civil-service status beyond the expiration of one year, so as to be eligible for reappointment back on those vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume, then, that the purpose is to protect them so at the conclusion of the war they can be given a similar position?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is it exactly. When these ships get back from the Navy to the fisheries, these men can get their old places.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, $375,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question.

Under this head of "Propagation of food fishes," I saw some place a report that the propagation of the lobster, which is a very valuable food fish along the coast, had been discontinued. It would come under this head, I presume. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether that report is true, and if so, what was the cause?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not true, so far as I know. While I do not recall any such testimony this year my impression is that they are continuing the work that resulted in a very great increase of the lobster. Some years ago there was a threatened extinction of the lobster on our coasts, and very active work was undertaken looking to the reproduction of the lobster in greater numbers, and it was very successful work. My understanding is that it is going to be continued. It ought to be.

Mr. ROBBINS. I agree that it ought to be continued, and the scarcity of lobster has alarmed some of the people who are at this time urged to eat fish rather than the food that the soldiers use.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was very much worse a few years ago, I think, than it is now. Nothing that I recall occurred in connection with the matter this year.

Mr. ROBBINS. I was not able to see anything in the hearings about it, and I thought I had overlooked it, probably.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall that it was mentioned. It would have been mentioned, probably, if they were to discontinue the work.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is what I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to purchase, to the extent of not to exceed $5,000, from the appropriations for the Bureau of Fisheries, clothing and small stores for the crews of vessels, to be sold to the employees of said service and the appropriations reimbursed.

That is the only means by which Congress can control men who presume to exercise undue authority by reason of the position they occupy.

I will take my chances on any man in any place in the Government, no matter who he is, daring to do an unpatriotic thing. The American people themselves will not stand for that, and everybody, from the President down, realizes that the time has come when every ounce of power within the Government of the United States must be used for one purpose, the successful conduct of the war. [Applause.]

If the creation of a patriotic sentiment throughout the country by any means helps, I am for any appropriation that may be sought for that purpose. I do not care who you put at the head of the bureau, we will take care of him if he goes outside of his authority. I do not indorse or condemn Mr. Creel, who is at the head of this bureau. I hold the President of the United States, and the people of the United States do, accountable for everything the committee does. The President has proved his patriotism, and there is nobody in the United States who will deny that he is doing the very best he can to accomplish the object for which we went into the war. It is our duty to join forces in every way we can to help him, and if he lags to urge him on. That is what we are trying to do. If he fails to be sufficiently energetic to meet my views at any time while he is conducting this war, I will not hesitate to say so. I shall not consider that I am violating my privileges as a Member of Congress or as a citizen if I criticize the President for his failure to do a thing that I think will best promote the welfare of the American people and the success of the war. I have no criticism to make; I think he is doing the best he can to win the war——

Mr. GARNER. And making a success of the job.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). And we are all working as one, and my hope is that before we get through he will make a complete success of the job as my friend from Texas has quietly intimated. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in considering this item for the committee on public information, we are considering the appropriation for an important, useful, and necessary activity of the Government. It is regrettable that the discussion should largely relate, not to the activities of the bureau, but to the personality of the man at the head of it; and yet I think it is inevitable under the circumstances that such should be the case. I think that any man who attempts to defend all the utterances of Mr. Creel as an editorial writer on the Denver Rocky Mountain News, or some of his utterances at a still later and quite recent period, has a very trying task on his hands. I do not believe all these utterances can be successfully defended before the American people in their present frame of mind. Mr. Creel does not himself endeavor to defend all of them. He rather apologizes for some of them. Let me read some of those editorial utterances. It is said in regard to them and in extenuation of them that they were penned hurriedly by an editorial writer in the heat of a campaign for the initiative, referendum, and the recall, and that out of his tremendous desire to carry the issue, to win the campaign, he was led into extravagances of speech. Let no one confuse the issue. There is a very considerable difference of opinion among the American people as to the virtues of these instrumentalities of government and many good people believe in them. I personally believe in the theory, at least, on which they are urged. It is not a question of these issues; it is a question of a man's utterances expressive of an opinion of his country and of his Government. Mr. Creel in these Denver editorials, among other things, said that Lincoln Steffens had—> once compared the "free-born American citizen" to the Russian serf, arousing a storm of indignant protest thereby. And yet, coming right down to brass tacks, do we really enjoy any greater liberty, any larger measure of true governmental power than the subjects of the Czar?

Can people holding that kind of an opinion to-day be whole souled and whole-heartedly behind the Government in this war? Mr. Creel, among other things, said that the Senate—

> sits in despotism * * *. The law winks complacently or else groans impotently at the crimes of those in high places—

And more of the same sort.

> We have no more real control over an elected official than if he were Nicholas and we poor moujiks in the fields.

Then, speaking of the Constitution, after criticizing the manner of its formation, he said:

> Even as it was, the Constitution barely slipped through. But it did slip through, and from the very first the judiciary—real and intended masters of the Government—proceeded to justify the faith reposed in them by the conspirators against democracy.

That is, Jefferson and Washington and the rest of them! He further said or wrote:

> As a matter of fact, the Constitution was framed by rich men for the protection of their property—by aristocrats for the preservation of aristocratic privileges.

If there is anyone anywhere, Mr. Creel included, that now in calm thought and deliberate judgment cares to attempt to justify that sort of utterance, I guarantee he will not be found among the men who are whole-heartedly behind the Government in this war.

It is an unfortunate fact that in this country a few years ago there were many more or less brilliant but always ready writers who fell into the bad habit of constantly appealing to ignorance, prejudice, and passion, who adopted the practice of discrediting our Government and one after another about everybody and everything connected with it, and I am sorry to say that they received considerable applause and approval from certain classes of our citizenship. In my opinion it has taken a great deal of the activities of this very bureau, at the head of which is Mr. Creel, to overcome and right and rectify the error of view and frame of mind which they were largely responsible for creating by these extravagant and unjustifiable expressions.

I should like to feel entirely certain that Mr. Creel has come to a sound, sane, and sensible patriotic view of his country and its institutions. I am not altogether certain about it when I recall his answer to the question propounded to him in his New York speech—admitting that it was at the end of a long speech when he was tired and worn—an answer so characteristic of the muck-raking school of thought, belittling and contemptuous of one of the great legislative bodies of the Government, the one body in the land that represents all of the people. These utterances can not be justified, they are without justification, they indicate a frame of mind, or, at least, a trend of thought which is tremendously regrettable, and which, spread broadcast in the land in the past, has done much to create a question in the minds of many of our people as to the real virtue and justice of the foundations of our Government; and the true grandeur of our institutions. These are the doubts and false opinions that had to be combated when we took up the sword in defense of that democracy which in times past these gentlemen would have had the people believe did not exist under our flag.

So much for that. I have not desired to discuss Mr. Creel. I certainly have no ill will toward him, and have only referred to his former utterances because it seemed that it could not be avoided. But Mr. Creel is not the issue to-day. You did not appoint Mr. Creel. I did not appoint him. The President appointed him. The President may not have known either his past views and utterances or of his present views. I do not believe that he would now make the statements or feel disposed to make the statements that he did years ago. I am glad of it, as we all must be. There are a number of gentlemen at the head of responsible bureaus and departments of this Government with regard to whom I wish devoutly I had more confidence. Mr. WOODS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, several months ago we were considering the subject of the delivery of soldiers' mail abroad. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I object to that; I think that sort of stuff has no business in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administration: For expenses of the office of the commissioner, including stationery, scientific and reference books, periodicals, newspapers, for library, furniture, telegraph and telephone service, repairs to and heating, lighting, and equipment of buildings, compensation of temporary employees, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $10,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make an inquiry about the paragraph preceding the one just read, as to the reason why the officers and crews of the Bureau of Fisheries connected with certain vessels that are not under the classified service should be specifically brought within the protection of the civil-service status?

Mr. SHERLEY. Those three vessels are now used by the Navy, but the officers and crews have been for a great many years under the Bureau of Fisheries. They are men who are of value, and it was not believed it was entirely fair to them to just dismiss them and let them lose the status that they had in connection with those ships, and so it was provided that they should keep their civil-service status beyond the expiration of one year, so as to be eligible for reappointment back on those vessels.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume, then, that the purpose is to protect them so at the conclusion of the war they can be given a similar position?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is it exactly. When these ships get back from the Navy to the fisheries, these men can get their old places.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, $375,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman a question.

Under this head of "Propagation of food fishes," I saw some place a report that the propagation of the lobster, which is a very valuable food fish along the coast, had been discontinued. It would come under this head, I presume. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether that report is true, and if so, what was the cause?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not true, so far as I know. While I do not recall any such testimony this year my impression is that they are continuing the work that resulted in a very great increase of the lobster. Some years ago there was a threatened extinction of the lobster on our coasts, and very active work was undertaken looking to the reproduction of the lobster in greater numbers, and it was very successful work. My understanding is that it is going to be continued. It ought to be.

Mr. ROBBINS. I agree that it ought to be continued, and the scarcity of lobster has alarmed some of the people who are at this time urged to eat fish rather than the food that the soldiers use.

Mr. SHERLEY. It was very much worse a few years ago, I think, than it is now. Nothing that I recall occurred in connection with the matter this year.

Mr. ROBBINS. I was not able to see anything in the hearings about it, and I thought I had overlooked it, probably.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall that it was mentioned. It would have been mentioned, probably, if they were to discontinue the work.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is what I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to purchase, to the extent of not to exceed $5,000, from the appropriations for the Bureau of Fisheries, clothing and small stores for the crews of vessels, to be sold to the employees of said service and the appropriations reimbursed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. I do so in order to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the policy of the department in the authorization that is here first provided.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for that language is this: It was testified that some of these ships are off on long cruises, that they do not come into ports where purchases can be made readily by the crews, and that it would be a matter of great accommodation to the crews if the ships were permitted to carry limited commissary stores, with the idea of selling at cost, without the idea of making a profit. And we thought by limiting the amount of investment that could be put in such commissaries to $5,000 that no harm could come and that it might prove to be of value to some of these members of the crews who were out, say, for long periods of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this recognize a new policy in authorizing the department, so far as the Bureau of Fisheries is concerned, to furnish clothing and small stores to the members of those crews?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does as to this bureau. Of course the Navy carries a commissary, and I think the Coast Guard Service. This is a new departure so far as the fisheries is concerned and for the purposes I have stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the provision that requires the clothing and stores should be sold at cost plus operation expense.

Mr. SHERLEY. No. That was not provided, but it was the understanding, and of course next year the committee would unquestionably make an inquiry as to the matter, and if we found an attempt to abuse it we would immediately check it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes that the language is permanent and will not very likely be included in next year's bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, but it is always included in the committee print in parenthesis. I have no objection to such a requirement. But the plain intent was simply that they should sell these stores at cost and reimburse the fund. And that is implied by the language that says, "to be sold to the employees of the said service and the appropriations reimbursed."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commutation of rations not to exceed 60 cents may be paid to officers and crews of vessels of the Bureau of Fisheries under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce.

Officers and crews of the several vessels belonging to the Bureau of Fisheries may be admitted to the benefits of the Public Health Service without charge upon the application of their respective commanding officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the purpose of this authorization authorizing the officers and crews to be admitted to the privileges of the Public Health Service?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I believe they are the only marine employees of the Government that are not admitted, and there did not seem to be any reason for the discrimination against them. All the members of the merchant marine and the members of the Coast Guard Service are eligible for admission into the hospitals of the Public Health Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. How extensive are the activities of the Bureau of Fisheries, so far as seagoing vessels or lake-going vessels are concerned?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall the number of vessels that that service has now. They have four that are carried in this bill. There are three that are now in the Navy, and there are some smaller boats. There is $95,000 carried here as maintenance charge for such vessels. So while the number of officers and the numbers of the crews under the Bureau of Fisheries are not large, still there must be quite a number of such men.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then under this paragraph I assume these men would have the benefit of the marine-hospital service?

Mr. SHERLEY. It means that they would be entitled to free hospital service at the public marine hospital.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inquiry respecting food fishes: For inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States, investigations and experiments in respect to the aquatic animals, plants, and waters, in the interests of fish culture and the fishery industries, including expenses of travel and preparation of reports, $50,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to that section to the effect that no part of this appropriation shall be expended on the investigation of streams that are impregnated with sulphur water from bituminous-coal mines.

Mr. CANNON. On what line?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CANNON. Report the line and page.

Mr. ROBBINS. On page 156, line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBBINS offers the following amendment: Page 156, line 21, after the figures "$50,000," insert:

"Provided, That no part of this inquiry shall apply to streams impregnated with water from bituminous-coal mines."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, the coal-mining industry of the United States necessarily discharges water into the streams that flow into the navigable rivers and necessarily destroys all fish that are in those streams. If this investigation is to lead to those streams and we are to get a report on it, it will be the basis, I fear, of legislation that will injure the coal-mining industry, whether it is intended to do so or not.

The coal-mining industry is the greatest of all the industries concerned in the prosecution of this war. In 1916 we mined 505,000,000 tons of bituminous coal; in 1917 we mined 540,000,000 tons of such coal. In 1918 we shall require 90,000,000 tons more of bituminous coal than was mined last year in order to prosecute this war. The first five months of this year we have fallen behind over 2,000,000 tons in producing sufficient to meet the requirements on the basis of last year's output. This investigation would be a distinct threat against the coal-mining industry, which has been more outrageously treated by this administration than any other great industry in the country. I am opposed to putting legislation in any bill passed by this Congress that even indirectly is a threat against the prosperity and increase of the output of bituminous coal; and this investigation, even though it is to be made here under the guise of protecting the fish life of the country, would lead right up into the bituminuous-coal mine sections of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio, each one of which is discharging large amounts of water impregnated with sulphur into the streams from the coal mines and thus destroying the fish life.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether any such investigation has been made, as feared by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, under existing appropriations?

Mr. ROBBINS. No; there has not been; but there is a bill pending in this Congress to make it, and I propose to forestall it and fight it just as vigorously as I will fight this.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows that the same language is carried in the existing law.

Mr. ROBBINS. In what bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the sundry civil bill of last year. It is the same.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am not familiar with that. No investigation was made. If such provision is there, I want to register my protest against an investigation leading into the streams of water in the bituminous-coal regions. That is all that this means. My amendment does not mean to prevent the investigation altogether, but it restricts it from going to those streams that are impregnated with sulphur by reason of the mining of coal from the land through which they flow.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. This language has been carried in the bills for more than 10 years, and the result of the gentleman's amendment would be to prevent some inquiries that might properly be made, and yet which would have nothing to do with and which would not look in the slightest degree to the curtailment of or the hampering of the coal industry in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. ROBBINS. It says "for inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States." All the food fishes in western Pennsylvania, in the streams impregnated with sulphur water, are killed, and the fish supply would therefore decrease to that extent.

Mr. SHERLEY. If everybody knows that that is the cause, there would be no reason for making this inquiry. This inquiry is not aimed at the practice of putting refuse of coal mines into streams. It has no relation to it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Under the wording of this amendment it could be made.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, it could be made; and the trouble with the gentleman's amendment is that it might stop a very proper inquiry. For instance, the Ohio River is the outlet of the waters of western Pennsylvania, all coming from the coal mines, and it also receives water from West Virginia and Kentucky. It might be construed that you could not make any inquiry as to the reasons for the decrease of the fish in the Ohio River. The gentleman's amendment does that out of fear that somebody is aiming at the coal mines of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's fear is not warranted.

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; it is warranted. I want to register a protest against any such proceeding as the gentleman suggests. The coal-mining industry of Pennsylvania—and the gentleman has it in Kentucky also—is very important; but the people who are agitating this investigation about the food fish destroyed by a great industry, known as the coal-mining industry, are simply trying to make a small interest overrule an immensely big business in this country.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is going on the assumption that anybody is so agitating. This item has been carried in this bill for 10 years, and has no relationship whatever to coal mines any more than, as I said the other day, sun spots do to war.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the gentleman's construction, but I beg leave to read it as it stands in the words of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBBINS. The bill says distinctly it is an inquiry into any "cause of the decrease of food fish in the waters of the United States." It would permit an investigation such as I protest against, foreshadowing an attempt to take water impregnated with sulphur out of the streams at this time. Coal mining has been going on for over 70 years in Pennsylvania. To take the mine water out of the streams would be impossible. The first mining was carried on in the veins that cropped out on the surface, but now they are going into deep-mining propositions. We have mines in my own district that lift six tons of water for every ton of coal removed from the mine. That water is necessarily impregnated with sulphur, which destroys the fish life in all the streams into which it flows. Therefore it is an absolute impossibility to carry on this industry without draining the water into the streams that flow into the navigable rivers and kill the fish life in them. For that reason I want to register a protest against investigating the "decrease of fish life" in any river where that fish life has been destroyed by the mining of coal. That is the reason I offer this amendment, because I do not want anybody to be misled, or this authorization to be misused, and made the basis of a threat against the coal-mining industry.

There is no use of appropriating $50,000 for this useless purpose, as is done by line 21, page 156, of this act.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is taking counsel of his fears. It is true, of course, that this language warrants an investigation of the causes for the decrease of the food-fish supply anywhere in the United States; but it was not created because of the situation growing out of the coal mines in Pennsylvania or elsewhere. It bears no relationship to that. So far as I know it was never thought of by anybody in connection with that until the gentleman himself became filled full of it. The limitation that he proposes is entirely too broad to be agreed to by the Congress. Why should there not be an examination, for instance, of the lower Ohio and of the Mississippi Rivers touching the decrease of food fishes there? The fact that water flows from the mines of Pennsylvania into those rivers ought not to prevent such an inquiry, and yet under the language the gentleman proposes it would have that practical effect.

Mr. ROBBINS. If the gentleman will yield, my amendment does not exclude an investigation of the lower Ohio, if there is coal water running into it, but it does exclude an investigation into the Monongahela, the Youghiogheny, and the Allegheny, in my district, all of which receive large quantities of coal water directly out of the mines.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement is that wherever there is a decrease of the supply of food fish as the result of water coming from the mines he does not want that investigated. Now, under his amendment they would have to make an inquiry to determine whether there should be an inquiry in each particular river, because there would have to be a determination to find out whether the water coming from the mines did in fact hurt the fish in the particular streams. I hope the committee will vote down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional for the acquisition of land described in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918, and for the acquisition of certain adjacent land required for the Bureau of Standards, $32,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 158 strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer this amendment is because of some statements and data brought to the attention of the House by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] the other day in connection with land purchased by the Bureau of Standards out of allotments made by the President, which land is near to the land that is proposed to be bought here. If the statements made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] are accurate—and I have no reason to question their accuracy—we ought not to pay $32,000 in addition to the $25,000 appropriated in a previous bill to purchase the land referred to here. I am not willing to vote money to buy land at twice its value; and if the statements of the gentleman are at all accurate as to the Chevy Chase Land Co.'s letter to the assessors touching the value of land adjoining and near this land, then we ought not to pay this amount. In the absence of information I am unwilling that my committee should stand sponsor for this appropriation, and, therefore, I move to strike it out.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is this the piece of land between the Bureau of Standards and Connecticut Avenue—right in front?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. Part of it is on the north, part of it to the south, and a little of it to the west. As to the little triangle on Connecticut Avenue that they wanted to buy, the price struck the committee as being so unreasonable that we dropped that out, but these three other pieces of land would be bought, if we appropriated this money in addition to the $25,000 available, at a price of $8,000 or $9,000 an acre, which, according to the letter that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] referred to, is away beyond the value of such land. I know of no more difficult thing that comes to the Committee on Appropriations than questions of land values. We are not experts in the value of lands. We are dependent upon the statements of the officials of the Government for the protection of the Government, and when they come to us saying that they can not acquire land except at a certain price, and that that price seems reasonable, we have the right, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to assume that they are attending to their business; but in view of the fact that evidence has been brought touching value of land in this neighborhood, I think the Committee of the Whole would be unwarranted in voting this money.

Mr. ROBBINS. I agree with the gentleman about the price of the land. There is a piece of land right in front of the Bureau of Standards which has been valued at $20,000. I saw this amount of $32,000, and I wondered if it was for the same piece of land.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is not. There is a little strip of land there that it was proposed to buy, but the price of that was very much too high, and I have never been in favor of buying front-foot land on Connecticut Avenue, which is very much more valuable than interior land; but this was to extend the property of the Bureau of Standards south to Van Ness Avenue and north to an avenue whose name I do not recall, and also the little triangular piece to the west. The amount of the previous appropriation was not sufficient, according to the statement made to us, and Dr. Stratton asked this additional money.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman explain why it is that the Bureau of Standards went into the middle of a block there and bought a piece of land that does not extend either to Connecticut Avenue or to the avenues or streets back of it? It seems to me that was a very remarkable transaction.

Mr. SHERLEY. The original piece of land was bought some distance back from Connecticut Avenue in order to be in a place that was quiet and away from the vibrations from the cars and from the trucks. Subsequently they needed more land, and the Committee on Appropriations had that matter under investigation. I think Mr. Tawney was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time. I remember the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], Mr. Fitzgerald, and myself, and one or two other Members went out and looked at some land. It was suggested then to buy land to Connecticut Avenue, but the cost of that land fronting on Connecticut Avenue was very much greater than the cost of the land behind it.

We did not feel warranted in buying high-priced residential land for purposes such as this when we could get the land necessary at the back. At that time the purchase of land was not extended to Connecticut Avenue, and I think the decision was wise, because it saved the Government money. But the trouble now is that they are asking for land, whether it is on Connecticut Avenue or anywhere else, at prices which, if the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is accurate, are indefensible and unconscionable. I am willing to let the purchase wait until we find out about the real values.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present emergency, to furnish such information and to render such assistance in the employment of wage earners throughout the United States as may be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the war, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, heat and light, telegraph and telephone service, supplies and equipment, and printing and binding, $1,500,000.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 162, line 13, after the figures "$1,500,000," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following words: "to enable the Secretary of Labor to investigate the subject of unemployment insurance with particular reference to the restoration to civil employment of soldiers discharged at the termination of the war."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith. During the discussion of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in March of this year the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, suggested during the discussion of a point of order that an amendment providing for an investigation of the subject of insurance against unemployment would be in order on the sundry civil bill. I have followed that suggestion, and offer it at this time.

Some time in January the House had before it a resolution unanimously reported from the Committee on Labor. The resolution provided for the appointment of a commission to study the problem of social insurance, including unemployment insurance. The principal argument used on the floor against that resolution was that war time was a very inappropriate time to study these things. Those who so argued disregarded the most vital fact that it is because of the present emergency, because of the present war, that this problem assumes an urgent character. Only a few days ago I received from England a very interesting volume, one of the Blue Books, which gives a report of the war cabinet for the year 1917. It appears that England has found it advisable to establish a special ministry of reconstruction.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that what we have practically done by the passage of the rehabilitation act?

Mr. LONDON. The rehabilitation act deals with the disabled soldiers only. We have so far taken no cognizance of the problem of the returning soldier, except to provide for an investigation of the opportunities that may be offered to the defenders of the country through the irrigation of arid lands and the recovery of swamp lands. The reconstruction ministry of England takes up the entire problem of industrial rehabilitation, such as the agricultural policy, demobilization of the army, demobilization of munition industries, housing, unemployment, the supply of raw materials, coal conservation, aliens, forestry, relations between employers and employed, and women's employment; in short, not only the restoration but the improvement of prewar conditions.

They lay particular stress upon the question of demobilization of the army and the restoration of the discharged soldier to his former employment under more advantageous terms than those he had prior to his entrance into the service.

European countries have recognized the necessity of preparing for the after-war period during the war. They have realized the necessity of taking up the question, assembling all the information that can possibly be had, and of benefiting by every experience the nations are undergoing to-day. It stands to reason that millions of men now in the Army, millions of men and women employed in the munitions industry, will find themselves out of employment at the close of the war; that it will be an impossible task in the absence of any accumulated data or any information gathered during the war—it will be impossible for the Nation to adapt itself to the task that it will then face. It should be the province of statesmen to grapple with these questions, to look into the future, and to prepare now for the inevitable.

In commenting on the creation of the special reconstruction ministry, the report of the war cabinet says:

The country for the first time is equipped with a department not devoted to research in the field of the physical sciences, but to research into questions of political science, and to the encouragement of action on the line of results ascertained.

This special ministry that I speak of was established in July, 1917, and was the result of two previous incomplete experiments made in the direction of the study of these problems through various boards and various committees. They were compelled to create a special ministry. In other words, they realized that now is the time to prepare for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think that if we are going to accomplish anything on the subject he suggests that the Secretary of Labor, having already more work than he can do, is not the one on which to put these activities?

Mr. LONDON. The Secretary of Labor is placed in the position where he has enlarged duties and functions.

His principal task now is to take care of the placement of labor. He knows how many workers have been taken out of ordinary industries and placed in munitions factories. He is in a position to know best how many places have been taken by women. He is in a position to know best how many places have been taken by children. All that is necessary for him to do is to assign to some special bureau the task of studying the mobility of labor to-day, so as to be able to reason out what will take place when the armies will be demobilized. Why should we not now begin to prepare for that day? We do not know when the war will end. It may collapse as suddenly as it started. We should not be found standing aghast and bewildered at the termination of the war. The statesmen of America should give thought to it to-day. The war preparations are being well taken care of. Let us now begin to prepare for the reconstruction period. That is the object of the amendment that I offer.

After the resolution providing for the study of unemployment insurance and old-age pensions and invalid pensions was defeated because of the argument that war time was a bad time to study it, and also because it provided for a commission, I introduced another resolution providing that the Secretary of Labor should make that investigation, and in connection with that second resolution there was submitted to the committee by the Bureau of Labor an estimate of the probable cost of it. It appears that the probable cost of an investigation of all these three subjects would be $400,000 and of unemployment insurance $175,000. That is why in this amendment I ask for $175,000, and confine it to the study of unemployment as it will affect the soldiers discharged from the service with the demobilization of the Army. Under leave granted me to incorporate the program of reconstruction of the British labor movement I submit the draft of the proposed "reconstruction" program of the British Labor Party. A careful study of this document will show what is in the minds of the British industrial masses. No wonder Parliament has created a reconstruction ministry.

DRAFT OF A PROGRAM OF THE BRITISH LABOR PARTY.

It behooves the Labor Party in formulating its own program for reconstruction after the war and in criticizing the various preparations and plans that are being made by the present Government to look at the problem as a whole. We have to make clear what it is that we wish to construct. It is important to emphasize the fact that, whatever may be the case with regard to other political parties, our detailed practical proposals proceed from definitely held principles.

SOCIETY TO BE REBUILT.

We need to beware of patchwork. The view of the Labor Party is that what has to be reconstructed after the war is not this or that Government department or this or that piece of social machinery, but, so far as Britain is concerned, society itself. The individual worker, or for that matter the individual statesman, immersed in daily routine, like the individual soldier in a battle, easily fails to understand the magnitude and far-reaching importance of what is taking place around him. How does it fit together as a whole? How does it look from a distance? Count Okuma, one of the oldest, most experienced, and ablest of the statesmen of Japan, watching the present conflict from the other side of the globe, declares it to be nothing less than the death of European civilization. Just as in the past the civilizations of Babylon, Egypt, Greece, Carthage, and the great Roman Empire have been successively destroyed, so, in the judgment of this detached observer, the civilization of all Europe is even now receiving its death blow. We of the Labor Party can so far agree in this estimate as to recognize in the present world catastrophe if not the death in Europe of civilization itself, at any rate the culmination and collapse of a distinctive industrial civilization, which the workers will not seek to reconstruct. At such times of crisis it is easier to slip into ruin than to progress into higher forms of organization. That is the problem as it presents itself to the Labor Party.

What this war is consuming is not merely the security, the homes, the livelihood, and the lives of millions of innocent families and an enormous proportion of all the accumulated wealth of the world, but also the very basis of the peculiar social order in which it has arisen. The individualist system of capitalist production, based on the private ownership and competitive administration of land and capital, with its reckless "profiteering" and wage slavery, with its glorification of the unhampered struggle for the means of life and its hypocritical pretense of the "survival of the fittest"; with the monstrous inequality of circumstances which it produces and the degradation and brutalization, both moral and spiritual, resulting therefrom, may, we hope, indeed have received a death blow. With it must go the political system and ideas in which it naturally found expression. We of the Labor Party, whether in opposition or in due time called upon to form an administration, will certainly lend no hand to its revival. On the contrary, we shall do our utmost to see that it is buried with the millions whom it has done to death. If we in Britain are to escape from the decay of civilization itself, which the Japanese statesman foresees, we must insure that what is presently to be built up is a new social order, based not on fighting but on fraternity; not on the competitive struggle for the means of bare life but on a deliberately planned cooperation in production and distribution for the benefit of all who participate by hand or by brain; not on the utmost possible inequality of riches but on a systematic approach toward a healthy equality of material circumstances for every person born into the world; not on an enforced dominion over subject nations, subject races, subject colonies, subject classes, or a subject sex, but, in industry as well as in government, on that equal freedom, that general consciousness of consent, and that widest possible participation in power, both economic and political, which is characteristic of democracy. We do not, of course, pretend that it is possible, even after the drastic clearing away that is now going on, to build society anew in a year or two of feverish "reconstruction." What the Labor Party intends to satisfy itself about is that each brick that it helps to lay shall go to erect the structure that it intends and no other.

We need not here recapitulate one by one the different items in the Labor Party's program, which successive party conferences have adopted. These proposals, some of them in various publications worked out in practical detail, are often carelessly derided as impracticable, even by the politicians who steal them piecemeal from us. The members of the Labor Party themselves actually working by hand or by brain in close contact with the facts have perhaps at all times a more accurate appreciation of what is practicable in industry, as in politics, than those who depend solely on academic instruction or are biased by great possessions. But to-day no man dares to say that anything is impracticable. The war, which has scared the old political parties right out of their dogmas, has taught every statesman and every Government official, to his enduring surprise, how very much more can be done along the lines that we have laid down than he had ever before thought possible. What we now promulgate as our policy, whether for opposition or for office, is not merely this or that specific reform but a deliberately thought out, systematic, and comprehensive plan for that immediate social rebuilding which any ministry, whether or not it desires to grapple with the problem, will be driven to undertake. The four pillars of the house that we propose to erect, resting upon the common foundation of the democratic control of society in all its activities, may be termed—

(a) The universal enforcement of the national minimum;
(b) The democratic control of industry;
(c) The revolution in national finance; and
(d) The surplus wealth for the common good.

THE UNIVERSAL ENFORCEMENT OF A NATIONAL MINIMUM.

The first principle of the Labor Party—in significant contrast with those of the capitalist system, whether expressed by the Liberal or by the Conservative Party—is the securing to every member of the community, in good times and bad alike (and not only to the strong and able, the well born, or the fortunate), of all the requisites of healthy life and worthy citizenship. This is in no sense a "class" proposal. Such an amount of social protection of the individual, however poor and lowly, from birth to death is, as the economist now knows, as indispensable to fruitful cooperation as it is to successful combination; and it affords the only complete safeguard against that insidious degradation of the standard of life which is the worst economic and social calamity to which any community can be subjected. We are members one of another. No man liveth to himself alone. If any, even the humblest, is made to suffer, the whole community and every one of us, whether or not we recognize the fact, is thereby injured. Generation after generation this has been the corner stone of the faith of labor. It will be the guiding principle of any labor government.

The legislative regulation of employment.

Thus it is that the Labor Party to-day stands for the universal application of the policy of the national minimum, to which (as embodied in the successive elaborations of the factory, mines, railways, shops, merchant shipping, and truck acts, the public health, housing, and education acts, and the minimum-wage act—all of them aiming at the enforcement of at least the prescribed minimum of leisure, health, education, and subsistence) the spokesmen of labor have already gained the support of the enlightened statesmen and economists of the world. All these laws purporting to protect against extreme degradation of the standard of life need considerable improvement and extension, whilst their administration leaves much to be desired. For instance, the workmen's compensation act fails shamefully, not merely to secure proper provision for all the victims of accident and industrial disease, but, what is much more important, does not succeed in preventing their continual increase. The amendment and consolidation of the factory and workshops acts, with their extension to all employed persons, is long overdue; and it will be the policy of labor greatly to strengthen the staff of inspectors, especially by the addition of more men and women of actual experience of the workshop and mine. The coal mines (minimum wage) act must certainly be maintained in force and suitably amended, so as both to insure greater uniformity of conditions among the several districts and to make the district minimum in all cases an effective reality. The same policy will, in the interests of the agricultural laborers, dictate the perpetuation of the legal wage clauses of the new corn law just passed for a term of five years, and the prompt amendment of any defects that may be revealed in their working; and, in view of the fact that many millions of wage earners, notably women and the less skilled workmen in various occupations, are unable by combination to obtain wages adequate for decent maintenance in health, the Labor Party intends to see to it that the trade-boards act is suitably amended and made to apply to all industrial employments in which any considerable number of those employed obtain less than 30 shillings per week. This minimum of not less than 30 shillings per week (which will need revision according to the level of prices) ought to be the very lowest statutory base line for the least skilled adult workers, men or women, in any occupation, in all parts of the United Kingdom.

The organization of demobilization.

But the coming industrial dislocation, which will inevitably follow the discharge from war service of half of all the working population, imposes new obligations upon the community. The demobilization and discharge of the 8,000,000 wage earners now being paid from public funds, either for service with the colors or in munition work and other war trades, will bring to the whole wage-earning class grave peril of unemployment, reduction of wages, and a lasting degradation of the standard of life, which can be prevented only by deliberate national organization.

The Labor Party has repeatedly called upon the present Government to formulate its plan and to make in advance all arrangements necessary for coping with so unparalled a dislocation. The policy to which the Labor Party commits itself is unhesitating and uncompromising. It is plain that regard should be had in stopping Government orders, reducing the staff of the national factories, and demobilizing the army to the actual state of employment in particular industries and in different districts, so as both to release first the kinds of labor most urgently required for the revival of peace production and to prevent any congestion of the market. It is no less imperative that suitable provision against being turned suddenly adrift without resources should be made, not only for the soldiers but also for the 3,000,000 operatives in munition work and other war trades, who will be discharged long before most of the army can be disbanded. On this important point, which is the most urgent of all, the present Government has, we believe, down to the present hour, formulated no plan, and come to no decision, and neither the Liberal nor the Conservative Party has apparently deemed the matter worthy of agitation. Any Government which should allow the discharged soldier or munition worker to fall into the clutches of charity or the poor law would have to be instantly driven from office by an outburst of popular indignation. What every one of them will look for is a situation in accordance with his capacity.

SECURING EMPLOYMENT FOR ALL.

The Labor Party insists—as no other political party has thought fit to do—that the obligation to find suitable employment in productive work for all these men and women rests upon the Government for the time being. The work of resettling the disbanded soldiers and discharged munition workers into new situations is a national obligation; and the Labor Party emphatically protests against its being regarded as a matter for private charity. It strongly objects to this public duty being handed over either to committees of philanthropists or benevolent societies, or to any of the military or recruiting authorities. The policy of the Labor Party in this matter is to make the utmost use of the trade-unions, and equally for the brain workers of the various professional associations. In view of the fact that in any trade the best organization for placing men in situations is a national trade-union having local branches throughout the kingdom, every soldier should be allowed, if he chooses, to have a duplicate of his industrial discharge notice sent, one month before the date fixed for his discharge, to the secretary of the trade-union to which he belongs or wishes to belong. Apart from this use of the trade-union (and a corresponding use of the professional association) the Government must, of course, avail itself of some such public machinery as that of the employment exchanges; but before the existing exchanges (which will need to be greatly extended) can receive the cooperation and support of the organized labor movement, without which their operations can never be fully successful, it is imperative that they should be drastically reformed on the lines laid down in the demobilization report of the "labor after the war" joint committee; and, in particular, that each exchange should be placed under the supervision and control of a joint committee of employers and trade-unionists in equal numbers.

The responsibility of the Government, for the time being, in the grave industrial crisis that demobilization will produce goes, however, far beyond the 8,000,000 men and women whom the various departments will suddenly discharge from their own service. The effect of this peremptory discharge on all the other workers has also to be taken into account. To the Labor Party it will seem the supreme concern of the Government of the day to see to it that there shall be as a result of the gigantic "general post" which it will itself have deliberately set going nowhere any degradation of the standard of life. The Government has pledged itself to restore the trade-union conditions and "prewar practices" of the workshop, which the trade-unions patriotically gave up at the direct request of the Government itself; and this solemn pledge must be fulfilled, of course, in the spirit as well as in the letter. The Labor Party, moreover, holds it to be the duty of the Government of the day to take all necessary steps to prevent the standard rates of wages, in any trade or occupation whatsoever, from suffering any reduction relatively to the contemporary cost of living. Unfortunately the present Government, like the Liberal and Conservative Parties, so far refuses to speak on this important matter with any clear voice. We claim that it should be a cardinal point of Government policy to make it plain to every capitalist employer that any attempt to reduce the customary rates of wages when peace comes, or to take advantage of the dislocation of demobilization to worsen the conditions of employment in any grade whatsoever will certainly lead to embittered industrial strife, which will be in the highest degree detrimental to the national interests; and that the Government of the day will not hesitate to take all necessary steps to avert such a calamity. In the great impending crisis the Government of the day should not only, as the greatest employer of both brain workers and manual workers, set a good example in this respect, but should also actively seek to influence private employers by proclaiming in advance that it will not itself attempt to lower the standard rates of conditions in public employment, by announcing that it will insist on the most rigorous observance of the fair-wages clause in all public contracts and by explicitly recommending every local authority to adopt the same policy.

But nothing is more dangerous to the standard of life, or so destructive of those minimum conditions of healthy existence, which must in the interests of the community be assured to every worker, than any widespread or continued unemployment. It has always been a fundamental principle of the Labor Party (a point on which, significantly enough, it has not been followed by either of the other political parties), that, in a modern industrial community it is one of the foremost obligations of the Government to find, for every willing worker, whether by hand or by brain, productive work at standard rates.

It is accordingly the duty of the Government to adopt a policy of deliberately and systematically preventing the occurrence of unemployment instead of, as heretofore, letting unemployment occur, and then seeking, vainly and expensively, to relieve the unemployed. It is now known that the Government can, if it chooses, arrange the public works and the orders of national departments and local authorities in such a way as to maintain the aggregate demand for labor in the whole kingdom (including that of capitalist employers) approximately at a uniform level from year to year; and it is therefore a primary obligation of the Government to prevent any considerable or widespread fluctuations in the total numbers employed in times of good or bad trade. But this is not all. In order to prepare for the possibility of there being any unemployment, either in the course of demobilization or in the first years of peace, it is essential that the Government should make all necessary preparations for putting instantly in hand, directly or through the local authorities, such urgently needed public works as (a) the rehousing of the population alike in rural districts, mining villages, and town slums, to the extent, possibly, of a million new cottages and an outlay of £300,000,000; (b) the immediate making good of the shortage of schools, training colleges, technical colleges, etc., and the engagement of the necessary additional teaching, clerical, and administrative staffs; (c) new roads; (d) light railways; (e) the unification and reorganization of the railway and canal system; (f) afforestation; (g) the reclamation of land; (h) the development and better equipment of our ports and harbors; (i) the opening up of access to land by cooperative small holdings and in other practicable ways. Moreover, in order to relieve any pressure of an overstocked labor market, the opportunity should be taken, if unemployment should threaten to become widespread, (a) immediately to raise the school-leaving age to 16; (b) greatly to increase the number of scholarships and bursaries for secondary and higher education; and (c) substantially to shorten the hours of labor of all young persons, even to a greater extent than the eight hours per week contemplated in the new education bill, in order to enable them to attend technical and other classes in the daytime. Finally, wherever practicable, the hours of adult labor should be reduced to not more than 48 per week, without reduction of the standard rates of wages. There can be no economic or other justification for keeping any man or woman to work for long hours, or at overtime, whilst others are unemployed.

SOCIAL INSURANCE AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT.

In so far as the Government fails to prevent unemployment—whenever it finds it impossible to discover for any willing worker, man or woman, a suitable situation at the standard rate—the Labor Party holds that the Government must, in the interest of the community as a whole, provide him or her with adequate maintenance, either with such arrangements for honorable employment or with such useful training as may be found practicable, according to age, health, and previous occupation. In many ways the best form of provision for those who must be unemployed, because the industrial organization of the community so far breaks down as to be temporarily unable to set them to work, is the out-of-work benefit afforded by a well-administered trade-union. This is a special tax on the trade-unionists themselves which they have voluntarily undertaken, but toward which they have a right to claim a public subvention—a subvention which was actually granted by Parliament (though only to the extent of a couple of shillings of so per week) under Part II of the insurance act.

The arbitrary withdrawal by the Government in 1915 of this statutory right of the trade-unions was one of the least excusable of the war economies; and the Labor Party must insist on the resumption of this subvention immediately the war ceases and on its increase to at least half the amount spent in out-of-work benefit. The extension of State unemployment insurance to other occupations may afford a convenient method of providing for such of the unemployed, especially in the case of badly paid women workers and the less skilled men, whom it is difficult to organize in trade-unions. But the weekly rate of the State unemployment benefit needs, in these days of high prices, to be considerably raised, whilst no industry ought to be compulsorily brought within its scope against the declared will of the workers concerned, and especially of their trade-unions.

In the twentieth century there must be no question of driving the unemployed to anything so obsolete and discredited as either private charity, with its haphazard and ill-considered doles, or the poor law, with the futilities and barbarities of its "stone yard," or its "able-bodied test workhouse." Only on the basis of a universal application of the policy of the national minimum, affording complete security against destitution, in sickness and health, in good times and bad alike, to every member of the community can any worthy social order be built up.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONTROL OF INDUSTRY.

The universal application of the policy of the national minimum is, of course, only the first of the pillars of the house that the Labor Party intends to see built. What marks off this party most distinctly from any of the other political parties is its demand for the full and genuine adoption of the principle of democracy. The first condition of democracy is effective personal freedom. This has suffered so many encroachments during the war that it is necessary to state with clearness that the complete removal of all the war-time restrictions on freedom of speech, freedom of publication, freedom of the press, freedom of travel, and freedom of choice of place of residence and kind of employment must take place the day after peace is declared. The Labor Party declares emphatically against any continuance of the military service acts a moment longer than the imperative requirements of the war excuse. But individual freedom is of little use without complete political rights. The Labor Party sees its repeated demands largely conceded in the present representation of the people act, but not yet wholly satisfied. The party stands, as heretofore, for complete adult suffrage, with not more than a three months' residential qualification, for effective provision for absent electors to vote, for absolutely equal rights for both sexes, for the same freedom to exercise civic rights for the "common soldier" as for the officer, for shorter parliaments, for the complete abolition of the House of Lords, and for a most strenuous opposition to any new second chamber, whether elected or not, having in it any element of heredity or privilege, or of the control of the House of Commons by any party or class. But unlike the Conservative and Liberal Parties, the Labor Party insists on democracy in industry as well as in government. It demands the progressive elimination from the control of industry of the private capitalist, individual or joint stock; and the setting free of all who work, whether by hand or by brain, for the service of the community, and of the community only. And the Labor Party refuses absolutely to believe that the British people will permanently tolerate any reconstruction or perpetuation of the disorganization, waste, and inefficiency involved in the abandonment of British industry to a jostling crowd of separate private employers, with their minds bent, not on the service of the community, but—by the very law of their being—only on the utmost possible profiteering. What the nation needs is undoubtedly a great bound onward in its aggregate productivity. But this can not be secured merely by pressing the manual workers to more strenuous toil, or even by encouraging the "captains of industry" to a less wasteful organization of their several enterprises on a profit-making basis. What the Labor Party looks to is a genuinely scientific reorganization of the nation's industry, no longer deflected by individual profiteering, on the basis of the common ownership of the means of production; the equitable sharing of the proceeds among all who participate in any capacity and only among these, and the adoption, in particular services and occupations, of those systems and methods of administration and control that may be found in practice best to promote the public interest.

Immediate nationalization.

The Labor Party stands not merely for the principle of the common ownership of the nation's land, to be applied as suitable opportunities occur, but also, specifically, for the immediate nationalization of railways, mines, and the production of electrical power. We hold that the very foundation of any successful reorganization of British industry must necessarily be found in the provision of the utmost facilities for transport and communication, the production of power at the cheapest possible rate and the most economical supply of both electrical energy and coal to every corner of the kingdom. Hence the Labor Party stands, unhesitatingly, for the national ownership and administration of the railways and canals, and their union, along with harbors and roads, and the posts and telegraphs—not to say also the great lines of steamers which could at once be owned, if not immediately directly managed in detail, by the government—in a united national service of communication and transport; to be worked, unhampered by capitalists, private or purely local interests (and with a steadily increasing participation of the organized workers in the management, both central and local), exclusively for the common good. If any government should be so misguided as to propose when peace comes to hand the railways back to the shareholders, or should show itself so spendthrift of the nation's property as to give these shareholders any enlarged franchise by presenting them with the economies of unification or the profits of increased railway rates, or so extravagant as to bestow public funds on the reequipment of privately owned lines—all of which things are now being privately intrigued for by the railway interests—the Labor Party will offer any such project the most strenuous opposition. The railways and canals, like the roads, must henceforth belong to the public.

In the production of electricity, for cheap power, light, and heating this country has so far failed because of hampering private interests to take advantage of science. Even in the largest cities we still "peddle" our electricity on a contemptibly small scale. What is called for immediately after the war is the erection of a score of gigantic "super-power stations" which could generate, at incredibly cheap rates, enough electricity for the use of every industrial establishment and every private household in Great Britain, the present municipal and joint-stock electrical plants being universally linked up and used for local distribution. This is inevitably the future of electricity. It is plain that so great and so powerful an enterprise, effecting every industrial enterprise and eventually every household, must not be allowed to pass into the hands of private capitalists. They are already pressing the government for the concession, and neither the Liberal nor the Conservative Party has yet made up its mind to a refusal of such a new endowment of profiteering in what will presently be the life blood of modern porductive industry. The Labor Party demands that the production of electricity on the necessary gigantic scale shall be made from the start (with suitable arrangements for municipal cooperation in local distribution) a national enterprise, to be worked exclusively with the object of supplying the whole kingdom with the cheapest possible power, light, and heat.

But with railways and the generation of electricity in the hands of the public it would be criminal folly to leave to the present 1,500 colliery companies the power of "holding up" the coal supply. These are now all working under public control on terms that virtually afford to their shareholders a statutory guaranty of their swollen incomes. The Labor Party demands the immediate nationalization of mines, the extraction of coal and iron being worked as a public service (with a steadily increasing participation in the management, both central and local, of the various grades of persons employed), and the whole business of the retail distribution of household coal being undertaken as a local public service by the elected municipal or county councils. And there is no reason why coal should fluctuate in price any more than railway fares, or why the consumer should be made to pay more in winter than in summer, or in one town than another. What the Labor Party would aim at is for household coal of standard quality a fixed and uniform price for the whole kingdom, payable by rich and poor alike, as unalterable as the penny postage stamp.

But the sphere of immediate nationalization is not restricted to these great industries. We shall never succeed in putting the gigantic system of health insurance on a proper footing or secure a clear field for the beneficent work of the friendly societies or gain a free hand for the necessary development of the urgently called for ministry of health and the local public-health service, until the nation expropriates the profit-making industrial insurance companies which now so tyrannously exploit the people with their wasteful house-to-house industrial life assurance. Only by such an expropriation of life assurance companies can we secure the universal provision, free from the burdensome toll of weekly pence, of the indispensable funeral benefit. Nor is it in any sense a "class" measure. Only by the assumption by a State department of the whole business of life assurance can the millions of policyholders of all classes be completely protected against the possibly calamitous results of the depreciation of securities and suspension of bonuses which the war is causing. Only by this means can the great staff of insurance agents find their proper place as civil servants, with equitable conditions of employment, compensation for any disturbance, and security of tenure in a nationally organized public service for the discharge of the steadily increasing functions of the government in vital statistics and social insurance.

In quite another sphere the Labor Party sees the key to temperance reform in taking the entire manufacture and retailing of alcoholic drink out of the hands of those who find profit in promoting the utmost possible consumption. This is essentially a case in which the people, as a whole, must deal with the licensing question in accordance with local opinion. For this purpose localities should have conferred upon them facilities: (a) To prohibit the sale of liquor within their boundaries; (b) to reduce the number of licenses and regulate the conditions under which they may be held; and (c) if a locality decides that licenses are to be granted, to determine whether such licenses shall be under private or any form of public control.

Other main industries, especially those now becoming monopolized, should be nationalized as opportunity offers. Moreover, the Labor Party holds that the municipalities should not confine their activities to the necessarily costly services of education, sanitation, and police, nor yet rest content with acquiring control of the local water, gas, electricity, and tramways; but that every facility should be afforded to them to acquire (easily, quickly, and cheaply) all the land they require, and to extend their enterprises in housing and town planning, parks, and public libraries, the provision of music and the organization of recreation; and also to undertake, besides the retailing of coal, other services of common utility, particularly the local supply of milk, wherever this is not already fully organized by a cooperative society.

Control of capitalist industry.

Meanwhile, however, we ought not to throw away the valuable experience now gained by the Government in its assumption of the importation of wheat, wool, metals, and other commodities, and in its control of the shipping, woolen, leather, clothing, boot and shoe, milling, baking, butchering, and other industries. The Labor Party holds that, whatever may have been the shortcomings of this Government importation and control, it has demonstrably prevented a lot of "profiteering." Nor can it end immediately on the declaration of peace. The people will be extremely foolish if they ever allow their indispensable industries to slip back into the unfettered control of private capitalists, who are, actually at the instance of the Government itself, now rapidly combining, trade by trade, into monopolist trusts, which may presently become as ruthless in their extortion as the worst American examples. Standing as it does for the democratic control of industry, the Labor Party would think twice before it sanctioned any abandonment of the present profitable centralization of purchase of raw material; of the present carefully organized "rationing," by joint committees of the trades concerned, of the several establishments with the materials they require; of the present elaborate system of "costing" and public audit of manufacturers' accounts so as to stop the waste heretofore caused by the mechanical inefficiency of the more backward firms; of the present salutary publicity of manufacturing processes and expenses thereby insured; and, on the information thus obtained (in order never again to revert to the old-time profiteering) of the present rigid fixing, for standardized products, of maximum prices at the factory, at the warehouse of the wholesale trader, and in the retail shop. This question of the retail prices of household commodities is emphatically the most practical of all political issues to the woman elector. The male politicians have too long neglected the grievances of the small household, which is the prey of every profiteering combination; and neither the Liberal nor the Conservative Party promises, in this respect, any amendment. This, too, is in no sense a "class" measure. It is, so the Labor Party holds, just as much the function of government, and just as necessary a part of the democratic regulation of industry, to safeguard the interests of the community as a whole, and those of all grades and sections of private consumers in the matter of prices as it is, by the factory and trade board acts, to protect the rights of the wage-earning producers in the matter of wages, hours of labor, and sanitation.

A REVOLUTION IN NATIONAL FINANCE.

In taxation also the interests of the professional and housekeeping classes are at one with those of the manual workers. Too long has our national finance been regulated, contrary to the teaching of political economy, according to the wishes of the possessing classes and the profits of the financiers. The colossal expenditure involved in the present war (of which, against the protest of the Labor Party, only a quarter has been raised by taxation, whilst three-quarters have been borrowed at onerous rates of interest to be a burden on the nation's future) brings things to a crisis. When peace comes, capital will be needed for all sorts of social enterprises, and the resources of government will necessarily have to be vastly greater than they were before the war. Meanwhile innumerable new private fortunes are being heaped up by those who have taken advantage of the nation's needs; and the one-tenth of the population which owns nine-tenths of the riches of the United Kingdom, far from being made poorer, will find itself in the aggregate, as a result of the war, drawing in rent and interest and dividends a larger nominal income than ever before. Such a position demands a revolution in national finance. How are we to discharge a public debt that may well reach the almost incredible figure of seven thousand million pounds sterling, and at the same time raise an annual revenue which, for local as well as central government, must probably reach one thousand millions a year? It is over this problem of taxation that the various political parties will be found to be most sharply divided.

The Labor Party stands for such a system of taxation as will yield all the necessary revenue to the Government without encroaching on the prescribed national minimum standard of life of any family whatsoever; without hampering production or discouraging any useful personal effort, and with the nearest possible approximation to equality of sacrifice. We definitely repudiate all proposals for a protective tariff, in whatever specious guise they may be cloaked, as a device for burdening the consumer with unnecessarily enhanced prices, to the profit of the capitalist employer or landed proprietor, who avowedly expects his profit or rent to be increased thereby. We shall strenuously oppose any taxation of whatever kind which would increase the price of food or of any other necessary of life. We hold that indirect taxation on commodities, whether by customs or excise, should be strictly limited to luxuries, and concentrated principally on those of which it is socially desirable that the consumption should be actually discouraged. We are at one with the manufacturer, the farmer, and the trader in objecting to taxes interfering with production or commerce or hampering transport and communications. In all these matters—once more in contrast with the other political parties, and by no means in the interests of the wage earners alone—the Labor Party demands that the very definite teachings of economic science should no longer be disregarded as they have been in the past.

For the raising of the greater part of the revenue now required the Labor Party looks to the direct taxation of the incomes above the necessary cost of family maintenance; and for the requisite effort to pay off the national debt to the direct taxation of private fortunes both during life and at death. The income tax and supertax ought at once to be thoroughly reformed in assessment and collection, in abatements and allowances and in graduation and differentiation, so as to levy the required total sum in such a way as to make the real sacrifice of all the taxpayers as nearly as possible equal. This would involve assessment by families instead of by individual persons, so that the burden is alleviated in proportion to the number of persons to be maintained. It would involve the raising of the present unduly low minimum income assessable to the tax, and the lightening of the present unfair burden on the great mass of professional and small trading classes by a new scale of graduation, rising from a penny in the pound on the smallest assessable income up to 16 or even 19 shillings in the pound on the highest income of the millionaires. It would involve bringing into assessment the numerous windfalls of profit that now escape, and a further differentiation between essentially different kinds of income. The excess-profits tax might well be retained in an appropriate form, whilst so long as mining royalties exist the mineral rights duty ought to be increased. The steadily rising unearned increment of urban and mineral land ought, by an appropriate direct taxation of land values, to be wholly brought into the public exchequer. At the same time, for the service and redemption of the national debt, the death duties ought to be regraduated, much more strictly collected, and greatly increased. In this matter we need, in fact, completely to reverse our point of view, and to rearrange the whole taxation of inheritance from the standpoint of asking what is the maximum amount that any rich man should be permitted at death to divert by his will from the national exchequer, which should normally be the heir to all private riches in excess of a quite moderate amount by way of family provision. But all this will not suffice. It will be imperative at the earliest possible moment to free the nation from at any rate the greater part of its new load of interest-bearing debt for loans which ought to have been levied as taxation; and the Labor Party stands for a special capital levy to pay off, if not the whole, a very substantial part of the entire national debt—a capital levy chargeable like the death duties on all property, but (in order to secure approximate equality of sacrifice) with exemption of the smallest savings, and for the rest at rates very steeply graduated, so as to take only a small contribution from the little people and a very much larger percentage from the millionaires.

Over this issue of how the financial burden of the war is to be borne, and how the necessary revenue is to be raised, the greatest political battles will be fought. In this matter the Labor Party claims the support of four-fifths of the whole nation, for the interests of the clerk, the teacher, the doctor, the minister of religion, the average retail shopkeeper and trader, and all the mass of those living on small incomes are identical with those of the artisan. The landlords, the financial magnates, the possessors of great fortunes will not, as a class, willingly forego the relative immunity that they have hitherto enjoyed. The present unfair subjection of the cooperative society to an excess-profits tax on the "profits" which it has never made—specially dangerous as "the thin end of the wedge" of penal taxation of this laudable form of democratic enterprise—will not be abandoned without a struggle. Every possible effort will be made to juggle with the taxes, so as to place upon the shoulders of the mass of laboring folk and upon the struggling households of the professional men and small traders (as was done after every previous war)—whether by customs or excise duties, by industrial monopolies, by unnecessarily high rates of postage and railway fares, or by a thousand and one other ingenious devices—an unfair share of the national burden. Against these efforts the Labor Party will take the firmest stand.

THE SURPLUS FOR THE COMMON GOOD.

In the disposal of the surplus above the standard of life society has hitherto gone as far wrong as in its neglect to secure the necessary basis of any genuine industrial efficiency or decent social order. We have allowed the riches of our mines, the rental value of the lands superior to the margin of cultivation, the extra profits of the fortunate capitalists, even the material outcome of scientific discoveries—which ought by now to have made this Britain of ours immune from class poverty or from any widespread destitution—to be absorbed by individual proprietors; and then devoted very largely to the senseless luxury of an idle rich class. Against this misappropriation of the wealth of the community, the Labor Party—speaking in the interests not of the wage earners alone but of every grade and section of producers by hand or by brain, not to mention also those of the generations that are to succeed us, and of the permanent welfare of the community—emphatically protests. One main pillar of the house that the Labor Party intends to build is the future appropriation of the surplus, not to the enlargement of any individual fortune, but to the common good. It is from this constantly arising surplus (to be secured, on the one hand, by nationalization and municipalization and, on the other, by the steeply graduated taxation of private income and riches) that will have to be found the new capital which the community day by day needs for the perpetual improvement and increase of its various enterprises, for which we shall decline to be dependent on the usury-exacting financiers. It is from the same source that has to be defrayed the public provision for the sick and infirm of all kinds (including that for maternity and infancy) which is still so scandalously insufficient; for the aged and those prematurely incapacitated by accident or disease, now in many ways so imperfectly cared for; for the education alike of children, of adolescents, and of adults, in which the Labor Party demands a genuine equality of opportunity, overcoming all differences of material circumstances; and for the organization of public improvements of all kinds, including the brightening of the lives of those now condemned to almost ceaseless toil, and a great development of the means of recreation. From the same source must come the greatly increased public provision that the Labor Party will insist on being made for scientific investigation and original research, in every branch of knowledge, not to say also for the promotion of music, literature, and fine art, which have been under capitalism so greatly neglected, and upon which, so the Labor Party holds, any real development of civilization fundamentally depends. Society, like the individual, does not live by bread alone—does not exist only for perpetual wealth production. It is in the proposal for this appropriation of every surplus for the common good—in the vision of its resolute use for the building up of the community as a whole instead of for the magnification of individual fortunes—that the Labor Party, as the party of the producers by hand or by brain, most distinctively marks itself off from the older political parties, standing, as these do, essentially for the maintenance, unimpaired, of the perpetual private mortgage upon the annual product of the nation that is involved in the individual ownership of land and capital.

THE STREET OF TO-MORROW.

The house which the Labor Party intends to build, the four pillars of which have now been described, does not stand alone in the world. Where will it be in the street of to-morrow? If we repudiate, on the one hand, the imperialism that seeks to dominate other races, or to impose our own will on other parts of the British Empire, so we disclaim equally any conception of a selfish and insular "noninterventionism," unregarding of our special obligations to our fellow citizens overseas; of the corporate duties of one nation to another; of the moral claims upon us of the nonadult races, and of our own indebtedness to the world of which we are part. We look for an ever-increasing intercourse, a constantly developing exchange of commodities, a continually expanding friendly cooperation among all the peoples of the world. With regard to that great commonwealth of all races, all colors, all religions, and all degrees of civilization that we call the British Empire, the Labor Party stands for its maintenance and its progressive development on the lines of local autonomy and "home rule all round"; the fullest respect for the rights of each people, whatever its color, to all the democratic self-government of which it is capable, and to the proceeds of its own toil upon the resources of its own territorial home; and the closest possible cooperation among all the various members of what has become essentially not an empire in the old sense, but a Britannic alliance.

We desire to maintain the most intimate relations with the labor parties overseas. Like them, we have no sympathy with the projects of "imperial federation," in so far as these imply the subjection to a common imperial legislature wielding coercive power (including dangerous facilities for coercive imperial taxation and for enforced military service), either of the existing self-governing dominions, whose autonomy would be thereby invaded, or of the United Kingdom, whose freedom of democratic self-development would be thereby hampered; or of India and the colonial dependencies, which would thereby run the risk of being further exploited for the benefit of a "white empire." We do not intend by any such "imperial senate" either to bring the plutocracy of Canada and South Africa to the aid of the British aristocracy or to enable the landlords and financiers of the mother country to unite in controlling the growing popular democracies overseas. The autonomy of each self-governing part of the empire must be intact.

What we look for, besides a constant progress in democratic self-government of every part of the Britannic alliance, and especially in India, is a continuous participation of the ministers of the Dominions, of India, and eventually of other dependencies (perhaps by means of their own ministers specially resident in London for this purpose) in the most confidential deliberations of the cabinet, so far as foreign policy and imperial affairs are concerned; and the annual assembly of an imperial council, representing all constituents of the Britannic alliance and all parties in their local legislatures, which should discuss all matters of common interest, but only in order to make recommendations for the simultaneous consideration of the various autonomous local legislatures of what should increasingly take the constitutional form of an alliance of free nations. And we carry the idea further. As regards our relations to foreign countries, we disavow and disclaim any desire or intention to dispossess or to impoverish any other State or Nation. We seek no increase of territory. We disclaim all idea of "economic war." We ourselves object to all protective customs tariffs, but we hold that each nation must be left free to do what it things best for its own economic development, without thought of injuring others. We believe that nations are in no way damaged by each other's economic prosperity or commercial progress; but, on the contrary, that they are actually themselves mutually enriched thereby. We would therefore put an end to the old entanglements and mystifications of secret diplomacy and the formation of leagues against leagues. We stand for the immediate establishment, actually as a part of the treaty of peace with which the present war will end, of a universal league or society of nations, a supernational authority, with an international high court to try all justiciable issues between nations; an international legislature to enact such common laws as can be mutually agreed upon, and an international council of mediation to endeavor to settle without ultimate conflict even those disputes which are not justiciable. We would have all the nations of the world most solemnly undertake and promise to make common cause against any one of them that broke away from this fundamental agreement. The world has suffered too much from war for the Labor Party to have any other policy than that of lasting peace.

MORE LIGHT, BUT ALSO MORE WARMTH.

The Labor Party is far from assuming that it possesses a key to open all locks, or that any policy which it can formulate will solve all the problems that beset us. But we deem it important to ourselves as well as to those who may, on the one hand, wish to join the party, or, on the other, to take up arms against it, to make quite clear and definite our aim and purpose. The Labor Party wants that aim and purpose, as set forth in the preceding pages, with all its might. It calls for more warmth in politics, for much less apathetic acquiescence in the miseries that exist, for none of the cynicism that saps the life of leisure. On the other hand, the Labor Party has no belief in any of the problems of the world being solved by good will alone. Good will without knowledge is warmth without light. Especially in all the complexities of politics, in the still undeveloped science of society, the Labor Party stands for increased study, for the scientific investigation of each succeeding problem, for the deliberate organization of research, and for a much more rapid dissemination among the whole people of all the science that exists. And it is perhaps specially the Labor Party that has the duty of placing this advancement of science in the forefront of its political program. What the Labor Party stands for in all fields of life is essentially democratic cooperation; and cooperation involves a common purpose which can be agreed to; a common plan which can be explained and discussed; and such a measure of success in the adaptation of means to ends as will insure a common satisfaction. An autocratic sultan may govern without science if his whim is law. A plutocratic party may choose to ignore science, if it is heedless whether its pretended solutions of social problems that may win political triumphs ultimately succeed or fail; but no labor party can hope to maintain its position unless its proposals are, in fact, the outcome of the best political science of its time, or to fulfill its purpose unless that science is continually wresting new fields from human ignorance. Hence although the purpose of the Labor Party must, by the law of its being, remain for all time unchanged, its policy and its program will, we hope, undergo a perpetual development, as knowledge grows and as new phases of the social problem present themselves, in a continually finer adjustment of our measures to our ends. If law is the mother of freedom, science, to the Labor Party, must be the parent of law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken in his assertion that I in connection with the previous amendment offered by him on the legislative bill said it would be in order on this bill. What I said was that it was not in order on that bill, and assuming that the fundamental law touching the Department of Labor warranted the amendment it would be in order on the sundry civil appropriation bill; but he overlooked the statement I made as to the assumption.

I do not care, however, to press the point of order, because I think it ought to be voted down upon its merits, and I will say frankly why. The gentleman's own statement in the last two or three minutes is the best possible argument why the thing should not be done now in this way. He says that certain statements were submitted by the Department of Labor in connection with the resolution which he introduced as to the cost of such an investigation. Congress ought not to appropriate moneys and considerable moneys simply upon ex parte statements of departments as to what an activity will cost. Assuming we have not already covered the field as far as we ought to cover it by virtue of the legislation recently passed in this House touching the rehabilitation of soldiers returning from the war, assuming that a broader inquiry ought to be made, it ought not to be made simply as the result of the few lines which the gentleman has suggested on an appropriation bill without any previous inquiry as to its scope and character, and who is to make it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it ought to be comprehensibly stated in whatever legislation we pass just what the scope should be.

Mr. SHERLEY. Absolutely, and for us to undertake now in such an ad captandum way to shoot at the moon would be very unwise. The committee has dealt very liberally with the Labor Department, and in a few moments I hope to have something to say touching its new activities. For us in this way to pass legislation of this character would be to say that we are not seriously considering matters of the first importance. With respect to what the gentleman has said in regard to England, the situation that confronts England and the situation that confronts this country are not in any sense parallel, nor is the need for the inquiry acute here, as it is in England.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to inquire whether the Department of Labor has requested this legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have not of the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $250,000 "to enable the Secretary of Labor to advance to wage earners transportation to such places as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of securing employment in connection with the prosecution of the war," contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 28, 1918, is continued and made available for the same purposes and under the same conditions for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Official Bulletin a few days ago contained a statement with regard to the necessity for workmen, especially in munitions plants and in the shipyards, and the article indicated that a new employment agency was to be established. It was a very recent statement and was drawn to my attention because the Department of Labor, through Mr. Densmore, at the head of the employment bureau, is advertising extensively for labor which is to be distributed when found. I make the inquiry now, whether the suggestion of a new agency to be created is correct?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I assume that it referred to the existing agency of which Mr. Densmore is the head. Certainly I should hope that there would not be the creation of an additional agency. One of the difficulties with the labor problem has been that a great many people have undertaken to enter into the field on their own particular initiative without regard to the needs of other departments, and the result has been that they have only added to the confusion. This is true. Mr. Densmore's department has just recently been getting under way so as to occupy the field for which it was created, and I assume that the reference was to that department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman would not stand for a duplication of appropriations for the same work, and I called his attention to the publication for that reason.

I would not have arisen at all except it did appear in the Official Bulletin that a new agency was to be created. If the Shipping Board is to have a separate agency and the Department of Agriculture is to have one, and the Department of the Interior is to have one, and various other war activities are to have separate agencies, and we have to pay for all of them, perhaps it is fair to suggest that they might be consolidated in the Department of Labor.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not only fair to raise the question, but it is fair to hope we will get an answer to the question after it is raised. I have been raising the question not only as to labor, but as to a lot of other things for a good many months past with the hope of preventing just that sort of duplication. But here is a curious fact. Every man who comes pleading for his particular appropriation has some reason to show why he lies just outside the field that the other fellow is occupying, and why, if he is not favored to that extent, the work will go unattended to or little attended to, and then he may tell you aside off the record that he would be very glad if the other fellow should do it, but he does not and can not, and he has been forced into it. I took occasion to say in connection with the Overman bill that the power had been given to the administrative offices to make such changes as were necessary to prevent duplication, and if the changes are not made the fault will lie with the administration and not with the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Labor, but have not yet heard from them. While I am on my feet and have the time I would like to ask the gentleman if provision is made in this appropriation to the Department of Labor for the payment of the expenses of the Wage Commission, of which Mr. Taft and Mr. Walsh are members?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; in the very next item is carried an appropriation of $1,335,000, which represents the committee's recommendation touching the proposal for war activities by the Department of Labor. If the gentleman will permit, there was a committee created as an advisory council, composed of Mr. Lind, as chairman; Mr. Casey, a former Member of this House; Mr. Waddill Catchings; Mr. Landon; Mr. Lennon; Mr. Marshall; and Miss Agnes Nestor, to advise the Secretary of Labor touching war activities of the Department of Labor and the organization or reorganization of that department to meet the needs that confronted the country growing out of the war. They made a very interesting report, and if the gentleman will take the trouble to read the hearings, beginning on page 1613 of the volume, he will find a statement by Dr. Marshall, who is a professor in the Chicago University, outlining just the scope of activities which is to be covered by the various bureaus that they propose to have created. Instead of creating these bureaus as such, and thereby giving them a certain status of law and permanency, we have provided for their activities under language that is found in the next paragraph and for a lump sum of $1,335,000, which, while it does not represent all that is asked for by the Department of Labor, does represent a sum that, in the judgment of the committee, would amply take care of their activities. Now, if the gentleman will glance at the bottom of page 162 of the bill he will notice language of this sort:

To carry on the work of the war-labor administration, including mediation and conciliation in labor disputes.

That refers to the activities of Mr. Taft and Mr. Walsh and other gentlemen. Then follows:

The working conditions of wage earners in the most essential war industries, the acquiring and diffusing of information on subjects connected with labor, the employment of women in industry, and the training and dilution of labor.

All of these represent divisions that are established in the Department of Labor, and they are all carrying on the work that the language in each instance indicates.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will permit, what is the real meaning of the word "dilution"?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will be through in a moment and then I will yield to the gentleman from New York to propound his inquiry. I want to know if the expenses particularly of the commission to which I have referred are covered by "commissioners of conciliation, $300,000"?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do these commissioners have power to determine labor disputes? The same Official Bulletin to which I referred stated that this board would have power to do so. In other words——

Mr. SHERLEY. They have no statutory compulsory power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that to be the position of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. It can not finally determine disputes. It can investigate and report, but there is no final power.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have no compulsory-arbitration law that I know of outside of that which pertains to the courts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the statement that the findings of the Taft Commission are to be final was erroneous?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was erroneous in the sense that it is legally binding and compulsory upon the parties in dispute. It is probably accurate in that there has been a general disposition on the part of capital and labor to acquiesce in such final arbitration, and it is not expected that, when they shall finally determine, appeals will be undertaken to other persons for further arbitration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us get this right. If the two parties to the dispute submit their cases to the Taft-Walsh Commission and agree to be bound by the findings of that commission, then their findings would be final?

Mr. SHERLEY. They would be final as long as the gentlemen held to the agreement they entered into, but not final in the sense of any legal finality.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, that commission has no power of its own volition to make a finding which settles a dispute. It is a matter of mediation.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have no power to enforce their decree.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. LONDON. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee the meaning of the expression "dilution of labor."

Mr. SHERLEY. The meaning of the words "dilution of labor" used herein is the substitution by new methods and new persons for old methods and regular persons in manufacturing or laboring processes. For instance, there has had to take place in this country and in England a substitution of woman labor for man labor, due to the shortage that has grown out of the war. The substitution of machinery for hand labor and the problems arising out of it are also involved in the language "dilution of labor." Also the problem of apprenticeship and of feeding in untrained labor in greater proportion to trained labor than is usual in normal peace times.

Mr. LONDON. Can the gentleman take the time to state the origin of that expression? I only caught it for the first time when I read the report of the British war cabinet.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know the genealogy of it, but I think it is much more ancient than the war.

Mr. LONDON. The dilution of labor——

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. In the sense of the distribution of labor?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present emergency, to carry on the work of war-labor administration, including mediation and conciliation in labor disputes, the working conditions of wage earners in the most essential war industries, the acquiring and diffusing of information on subjects connected with labor, the employment of women in industry, and the training and dilution of labor, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and in the field, per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, supplies and equipment, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, in amounts not exceeding the following: Commissioners of conciliation, $300,000; working conditions service, $45,000; information and education service, $225,000; woman in industry service, $40,000; investigation and inspection service, $300,000; personnel service, $15,000; training and dilution service, $150,000; Secretary's office, $110,000; printing and binding for all services, $150,000; in all, $1,335,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before leaving the Department of Labor I want to make a brief statement in reference to an extension of remarks made by my friend from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] a couple of days ago in connection with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He filed, under extension of remarks, a statement prepared by some one whom he did not name in connection with the action of the Committee on Appriations relative to an increase in the amount of money for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and which article undertook to show that we had not allowed enough money to permit the raising of the wages of the women employees there to a minimum of $2.24 a day. I desire just in passing to say that, as an evidence of the accuracy with which the statement was prepared—it contains the remark that we had increased for payment of wages the appropriations for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing just $100,000—that it happens to be about 100 per cent wrong. We have increased the appropriations nearly $200,000. It is also equally accurate in another regard, that it totally ignores the work that is done by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and which is paid for out of the funds allotted for the work from appropriations made to other bureaus, and which constitutes a large part of the work of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. If the gentleman or lady who prepared that article had had these facts, together with quite a number of others, and had re-formed the article in a great many particulars, it would have been reasonably accurate. For the benefit of the committee I thought I ought to make that statement.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, with those few changes, it is all right?

Miss RANKIN. The first paragraph has to do with pay of those plate printers and plate printers' assistants. What was the sum that was increased over and above the sum required for the extra help? Was it not $91,000 and some cents?

Mr. SHERLEY. Ninety-three thousand dollars, as I recall.

Miss RANKIN. And there are some 1,341 operatives there getting $2.24. You did not intend to increase them at all?

Mr. SHERLEY. We gave money enough, with the money that will come to the bureau from work that is given it by other departments, and which is paid for out of their funds, to pay every employee there—every woman employed there—a minimum of $2.24 a day if the business is economically and properly run.

Miss RANKIN. Does that——

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not make it plainer than that. That was the purpose, and that is what I think we accomplished.

Miss RANKIN. Is that repay work on the basis of the women receiving $2.24 a day or on the basis of their own pay?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is repay work that will be done in the future and not work in the past, although "repay" is the wrong expression. It is payment for work that will be given to it from outside bureaus of the Government, and who will pay for it out of their funds, and it will be on the basis of the cost, and the cost will include many other items.

Miss RANKIN. On a wage based at $2.24 a day or a wage that is paid to-day?

Mr. SHERLEY. Based on the wage that is paid at the time the work is done.

Miss RANKIN. The estimates are made for this next year. We have not the real figures. The estimates are on the basis of the cost of last year?

Mr. SHERLEY. The estimates are not made at all touching such character of work. Such work comes without estimate, because it does not come out of the funds we supply directly to the bureau. For instance, the Treasury Department may, out of its money in connection with its issue of bonds, give a certain amount of work to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to do, and it will pay the cost of that; the Federal Reserve Board will do the same touching bank notes; the Post Office Department will do the same in regard to postage stamps. Now, the money that is paid for that work will be money that will pay for the cost of labor and materials and other things, and that cost will be the actual cost that is paid at the time the work is done.

Miss RANKIN. I have just had word that the women in the Government Printing Office are going to receive $2.20, and added to that will be 10 per cent and $120 a year.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the first place, the 10 per cent and the $120 do not exist contemporaneously. The 10 per cent relates to this year and the $120 relates to the next fiscal year. Your information, I fear, is not correct, although I have had no personal information about it.

Miss RANKIN. Do you think the girls in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are going to be paid in proportion to the other women?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know, and I do not know that it is material. I think we will pay them at least $2.24 as the result of the legislation in this bill, with $120 a year additional as carried in the legislative bill, and I am satisfied that if we put some machinery down there and not insist upon doing a lot of things according to antiquated methods we will reduce the cost of printing and help to pay higher wages to those who are employed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the remarks I made I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating the reconstruction policy of British labor. That is quite a lengthy document and I ask for special permission to insert it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman has stated that it is rather a lengthy article. Is it a magazine article?

Mr. LONDON. No; it is the reconstruction program of British labor. It is in connection with the statement I made about the action of the British Parliament in connection with reconstruction.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much space will the article cover?

Mr. MADDEN. It is a book, is it not?

Mr. LONDON. No. It is several pages long. It would cover about three columns of the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish the gentleman to offend, as a former gentleman did, by incorporating Henry George's "Progress and Poverty" under leave to print.

Mr. LONDON. It is nothing like that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is the gentleman's intention to print the whole pamphlet?

Mr. LONDON. It is the program of the British labor reconstruction—not a whole book. It simply covers the reconstruction program of the labor of Great Britain.

Mr. CANNON. Great Britain is a little bit of an island compared with the United States. You can stand in the middle of it and throw a stone into the ocean, whereas you could not throw one very far in our great domain. Does the gentleman think it will serve any useful purpose for us to undertake to pattern after the English Government or that it will give us any useful knowledge?

Mr. LONDON. I want to say that we can not afford to pattern upon anybody. My hope is that every other nation will pattern after the good things in the United States. But I do think that American statesmen may benefit by the experience of other countries, particularly those that have suffered in the war, and that we may benefit by reading and knowing of their experience.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, does this publication show that Great Britain, notwithstanding the exigencies of war, is preparing for the future and looking out for trade and commerce?

Mr. LONDON. No; it has nothing to do with trade and commerce. This program was published in a periodical called the New Republic as a supplement a couple of months ago, I believe, and I have intended for some time to incorporate it in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it a Government publication?

Mr. LONDON. No; it is not. It is the program of the British labor movement, adopted some time ago. It deals with reconstruction problems. The book from which I read is a public document, published by the British Government under the authority of Parliament.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has nothing to do with Great Britain's efforts to retain its hold upon trade, notwithstanding war?

Mr. LONDON. It has nothing to do with that phase of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR EMERGENCY SERVICES.

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present emergency, to furnish such information and to render such assistance in the employment of wage earners throughout the United States as may be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the war, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, heat and light, telegraph and telephone service, supplies and equipment, and printing and binding, $1,500,000.

The appropriation of $250,000 "to enable the Secretary of Labor to advance to wage earners transportation to such places as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of securing employment in connection with the prosecution of the war," contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 28, 1918, is continued and made available for the same purposes and under the same conditions for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago, in connection with the consideration of a bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture of the House, an item proposing an appropriation of $500,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in securing and providing agricultural labor was stricken from the bill. At that time I made the statement that an organization was being perfected in the Department of Labor that proposed to take over all governmental activities in the matter of the distribution of labor throughout the country, particularly in the war industries, and also in connection with necessary agricultural activities. We have just passed items to provide for the activities that were then referred to.

We provide $1,500,000 to enable the Secretary of Labor to furnish information and render such assistance in the employment of wage earners throughout this country as may be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the war, and so forth, and we also reappropriate an appropriation of $250,000 made in a former bill to enable the Secretary of Labor to advance to wage earners transportation to such places as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of securing employment in connection with the prosecution of the war. I believe that the placing of all Federal activities in connection with the procurement and distribution of labor under one head in the Department of Labor is wise, and I have faith in the organization that has been perfected in the Department of Labor for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman think about the attempt on the part of the Department of Agriculture to duplicate the work that we have already appropriated to be done by the Department of Labor?

Mr. MONDELL. I expressed my opinion in regard to that matter at the time I opposed the appropriation in the Agricultural bill, and it was not a favorable opinion.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's opinion is so highly appreciated by the people throughout the country that the reiteration of his opinion is always gladly received.

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that the Department of Agriculture was probably not so much to blame for that particular item as were some gentlemen whose usual place of usefulness and activity is not very far from this room.

However, the Agricultural Department did encourage it, as departments have a way of encouraging any movement that will result in increasing their activities, and I have no doubt they believed that they could do good work. But this class of work and activity so far as the Government may properly participate in it should be under one head, one jurisdiction and direction, and it seems appropriate that it should be in the Department of Labor. In the hearings before the committee our attention was called to very unfortunate conditions that have arisen by reason of the bidding of the various Government activities against one another in the attempt to secure labor. We hope that this bureau organized in the Department of Labor will take into consideration the needs of all the Government and private activities essential to the conduct of the war, including agriculture, and will endeavor to bring about, so far as that can be done by public agencies, a distribution of labor in the localities and in the industries where it is most needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All clerical assistants required by section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906, as amended, to be provided by clerks of courts exercising naturalization jurisdiction, whether compensated by the Secretary of Labor from appropriations or from naturalization fees, or from both sources, are placed within the competitive classified civil service in the Naturalization Service under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Naturalization, and the clerks heretofore appointed and employed in these positions may be reappointed, and all appointments to these positions shall be in accordance with the foregoing, and by the Secretary of Labor upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Naturalization.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, this language is subject to a point of order, but in support of the paragraph I desire to make this very brief statement in the hope that if we can not have the legislation we may at least have a reform.

In a number of the larger cities where there is a great deal of naturalization work a practice has grown up in connection with naturalization that is anything but creditable to the people engaged in it. Certain hangers-on of the clerks' offices have taken advantage of the ignorance of men of foreign birth who were applying for naturalization in order to get money from them and to control them in connection with their naturalization, without justification of any sort. The clerks who have been hired and paid for out of the naturalization fees, as addition to the regular force in the clerk's office, are not governmental employees in any way and are not subject to governmental discipline. It has been difficult to get any sort of discipline from the clerks of the courts and from the State courts themselves to correct some of the abuses, and it was hoped that by providing that these people should be subject to civil-service regulations a higher grade of employees might be secured who would not permit the abuses to grow up in connection with naturalization proceedings. For that reason this language was carried in the bill.

My understanding is that the objection of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is an objection to the Federal Government undertaking to control in any way the appointment or removal of State officials. I should be more in sympathy with his view if I felt that these clerks, who are employed and paid for out of fees in excess of $6,000 that may be taken in by any clerk's office, were really State employees in any true sense of the term. They are not. They are Federal employees, in the sense that they are engaged exclusively upon Federal work and are paid out of the Federal Treasury, and while they get their appointment through a State official and serve in a State clerk's office it is only for the doing of national work. I am sorry that the gentleman feels it necessary to make the point of order, and I call attention to the abuse, which could be described in terms very much more severe than I have used, in the hope that the State courts that deal in naturalization matters in some of the larger cities may see to it that what amounts to a scandal in the clerks' offices of some of these State courts may be corrected, as it can be corrected by proper publicity and by action by the courts.

I admit the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to discuss the matter further. The chairman of the committee correctly states my position. The State courts are not compelled to hear naturalization cases, but the Federal statute permits them to do it. The fact that this provision would subject the clerks in the Sate courts to a Federal civil-service examination is my only reason for making the point of order. I think the existence of the evil spoken of by the chairman of the committee is fully borne out by the testimony before the committee, but I insist on the point of order for the reason just stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky admits the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement of appropriations: For preparation, under the direction of the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the statements for the first and second sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress, showing appropriations made, new offices created, offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced, indefinite appropriations, and contracts authorized, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills, as required by law, $4,000, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairmen of said committees to do said work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to a typographical error in line 21 on page 166, where the word "indefinite" is misspelled.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the spelling may be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction of the spelling will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For public printing, public binding, and paper for public printing and binding, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, the International Bureau of American Republics, the Executive Office, and the departments; for salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary employees additional to those herein specifically appropriated for, including the compensation of the foreman of binding and the foreman of printing; rents, fuel, gas, electric current, gas and electric fixtures; bicycles, electrical vehicles for the carriage of printing and printing supplies, and the maintenance, repair, and operation of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer (not exceeding $1,500); freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses, stationery, postage, and advertising; directories, technical books, and books of reference, not exceeding $500; adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; machinery (not exceeding $100,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work, $7,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 169, line 2, by striking out the words "Federal Trade Commission," as their provision for printing is carried otherwise.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 169, line 2, strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Patent Office: For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, exclusive of illustrations; and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices, $585,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask about the item of $585,000. My experience with the Patent Office is that you have to pay for a great deal of printing that you get down there in the shape of blue prints, filing applications, plans, and diagrams for proposed patents. What is this item of $585,000 for?

Mr. SHERLEY. What the gentleman is referring to is copies of patents. This is to pay for the original work of all the printing in connection with the Patent Office.

Mr. ROBBINS. And it has nothing to do with any applications at all?

Mr. SHERLEY. It has to do with the printing for the office—that pertaining to patents, trade-marks, labels, and so forth, and the weekly reports.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman correct in that last statement?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think this is true, that they do require the public to pay for such matters, and the money which they receive goes into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, so that it is paid for in the first instance out of this fund, and the Treasury is reimbursed out of receipts received from applicants.

Mr. ROBBINS. If that is true, what is the necessity for this large sum?

Mr. SHERLEY. Because the moneys are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and are not available for use in the Patent Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the Patent Office has for several years past been self-sustaining.

Mr. SHERLEY. More than self-sustaining; it has made a profit.

Mr. STAFFORD. And, as stated by the chairman of the committee, it is a question of bookkeeping. The moneys from fees which the Government exacts on the filing of applications in granting letters patent are turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous funds. It is necessary to have a separate appropriation to care for the bureau.

Mr. SHERLEY. The value of that lies in this: If they were given the receipts to spend, there would be no check or accountability to Congress, and in this way they have to come and show cause for the need of money. The money that they get in the way of receipts goes into the Treasury.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may be authorized to correct the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. ROBBINS, and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina were given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12441, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RUSSELL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for two days, on account of illness.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11692, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 4724) to incorporate the Mothers of Democracy of the United States of America; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 4725) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia," approved April 28, 1914; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4726) to prohibit "cost-plus" Government contracts, and to prohibit the payment of commissions for the awarding of Government contracts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the Army appropriation bill. It is the one I had inserted in the Military Academy appropriation bill providing for the supply of officers with uniforms by the Government. I wish to express the hope that the Committee on Military Affairs will put this amendment in the Army appropriation bill when they report it and see if we can not get it adopted in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and printed.

Mr. KNOX (for Mr. PENROSE) submitted an amendment proposing that the pay clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, now on the retired list, shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowance of a second lieutenant, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also (for Mr. PENROSE) submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint officers of volunteers, who have served five years in the Regular Army, officers in the National Army at one grade above the grade held by such persons while officers in the Volunteer Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12441. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SPANISH WAR AND PHILIPPINE INSURRECTION PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4444) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in the Boxer rebellion in China.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, it is a short bill, and there are but few amendments proposed by the committee. I ask that the bill may be read and that the amendments of the committee may be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the bill and the amendments proposed by the committee will be first considered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 9, after the word "discharge," to strike out "including all furloughs"; on page 2, line 4, after the word "insurrection," to strike out "or in China"; and on page 2, line 6, after the word "inclusive," to insert "or as a participant in the Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign between June 16, 1900, and October 1, 1900," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act if any volunteer officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, or any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Establishment who rendered 90 days or more actual military or naval service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, or as a participant in the Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign between June 16, 1900, and October 1, 1900, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and shall commence from the date of application therefor after the passage of this act: Provided further, That said widow shall have married said officer or enlisted man previous to the passage of this act: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill having been concluded,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is tied up in a committee meeting for the present, and he did not expect the bill to come up at this time. While I am in favor of the bill, I do not want to take advantage of the absence of any Senator. I do know that the Senator from Georgia desires to speak upon it, he tells me, not in a way to prolong the consideration of the measure, but he wishes to address the Senate on the bill. Therefore, for that reason, and that only, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Jones, Wash.	Martin
Bankhead	Gerry	Kendrick	Myers
Beckham	Gronna	King	Nelson
Brandegee	Guion	Kirby	Norris
Calder	Hale	Lenroot	Nugent
Chamberlain	Harding	Lewis	Overman
Culberson	Hardwick	Lodge	Page
Curtis	Henderson	McCumber	Phelan
Dillingham	Hitchcock	McKellar	Pittman
Fall	Johnson, Cal.	McLean	Poindexter
France	Johnson, S. D.	McNary	Pomerene
Ransdell	Shields	Sutherland	Warren
Robinson	Smith, Ariz.	Thompson	Watson
Saulsbury	Smith, Md.	Townsend	Willey
Shafroth	Smith, S. C.	Trammell
Sheppard	Smoot	Vardaman
Sherman	Sterling	Wadsworth

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on official business.

I wish also to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I will make this announcement for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My colleague [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on official business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], occasioned by personal illness, and the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], occasioned by illness in his family. I ask to have this announcement remain for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and subject to amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is a feature in connection with these amendments I desire briefly to refer to, and that is that the amendment just read, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is quite cognizant of the fact, and he will recall it and refresh the mind of Senators, is an exact copy of the provisions in what is known as the Smoot bill and the Sherwood bill, and of the provisions in the soldiers' war-risk bill. Therefore it is important for Senators not acquainted with those amendments to know that they have been copied literally from the bill which has already passed, so far as their phraseology is concerned. I have been active and industriously trying to overcome opposition of Senators who have not favored this bill, and to those I have made the statement in private that I do now in the Senate. As certain of the Senators have taken my word on this as their reason for withholding their objections to this measure, I am anxious that my private statements be vindicated in the open Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have proposed an amendment, but I understand there is some opposition to it, and I will withdraw it, because I do not want to put anything in the way of the passage of this bill for the benefit of the widows and families of the Spanish War veterans, and I hope there may be no delay in its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendements were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to delay the passage of this bill. I merely wish to say that it has my heartiest approval. It is the policy of the Government to pension the men who offer their lives in defense of the Nation's flag, and certainly the Government will not do more for the soldier living than it would for his indigent wife and helpless children after he is taken from them by the cruel hand of death.

It was my good fortune during the War with Spain to serve with some of the men who volunteered to give their all in defense of the Nation's cause in a foreign land. I know how well they performed their duty, and I should think less of the Congress, the lawmaking body of this Republic, if it should refuse to extend a helping hand to the widows and orphans of those soldiers. This was a play war when compared to the enormous suffering and sacrifices that are being made in the present war across the waters and the War between the States of a half century ago. But the will was just as heroic and the hearts as patriotic which pulsated in the breasts of the Spanish-American War veterans as those which beat in the bosoms of the American soldiers in other wars, and I shall take great pleasure in giving my vote to this measure, and I trust that it may pass the Senate without a dissenting vote.

The bill was passed.

MINING FOR MINERALS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. ASHURST. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] proposed an amendment the other day when the bill was pending. I ask that the Secretary may state that amendment at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, after the word "lands," insert the words "or such portion thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senate to consider now page 5 of the bill, line 9.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, on line 8, page 5, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out the word "five" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "one," so that it will read:

A royalty which shall not be less than 1 per cent of the gross value of the output of the minerals at the mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move, on line 10, page 1 of the bill, after the word "reservation," to insert the words "within the States of Arizona and New Mexico." In other words, the amendment confines the operation of the bill to the States of Arizona and Mexico.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, its purpose is that this bill shall relate simply, solely, and only to the States of Arizona and New Mexico. I will, however, merely content myself with voting against the amendment. That is all I care now to say about it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] by including the State of Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. My amendment would exclude Montana.

Mr. MYERS. But I want Montana included. I therefore move to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah by including Montana, so as to have the proposed law apply to Arizona, New Mexico, and Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to have my amendment so amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill; but I understand it is general, applying to all the States.

Mr. SMOOT. As originally drawn it applied to all the States.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But it applies merely to the leasing of Indian lands?

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to Indian lands, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think I want the State of Washington included in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Any Senator may have any State he desires included in the bill, so far as I am concerned. I will also accept an amendment including the State of Washington.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Washington understand that this bill includes gold and silver mines and the leasing of mines containing precious metals, which has never hitherto been the policy of our Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This bill does not propose to deal with Government lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But it proposes to deal with lands that have always been considered as to be open at some time to exploration. Lands in almost every part of the United States have at some time been in reserves, and we are now proposing to open these lands under a leasing system that never in the world will develop them.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, Mr. President, to including the State of Washington in my amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Just a moment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I thought my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] was here. I know that he is interested in a matter of this kind. My recollection is that he introduced a measure some time ago, or urged a measure, providing for the leasing of Indian lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the junior Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Washington offer this amendment—I do not ask the question in an offensive way, but merely for information—for the purpose of trying to kill the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT]?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not at all. I am offering it in perfect good faith in order to have the State of Washington covered by the terms of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, Mr. President, to including the State of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I will ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah may be amended to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Would it not satisfy the object of the Senator if he should simply move to exclude the State of Utah from the operation of this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I know that there are other States that desire to be included, and I thought my amendment provided the easiest way to do that.

Mr. FALL. Very well; then, I have no objection to this method of dealing with it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there has been considerable confusion in the Chamber, and I was unable to hear precisely what the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] was. I should like to have it again stated.

Mr. FALL. I have offered two amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Arizona refers to the first amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator from Arizona mean the first amendment which was adopted?

Mr. ASHURST. I refer to the amendment the Senator from New Mexico offered to the bill to come in on page 5.

Mr. FALL. I understand the Senator from Arizona refers to my amendment to strike out "five" and to insert "one" before the words "per centum." As I understood that amendment was adopted. However, I will explain it to the Senator from Arizona if he desires me to do so.

I will simply illustrate, Mr. President, by saying that we have now pending in conference a bill which has been approved by the department and passed by both Houses of Congress providing for a royalty of 2 cents per ton on coal which is mined. The minimum price for coal in our State has been fixed at $3 per ton. Five per cent royalty, as provided in this bill, would be 15 cents per ton royalty on coal mined in an Indian reservation, while outside of an Indian reservation on public lands it would be 2 cents. Fifteen cents per ton would be absolutely prohibitive upon the mining of coal upon the Indian reserves, except for purely local use.

The same argument applies, Mr. President, to the mining of any mineral whatsoever. The great production of copper and manganese, iron ores, lead ores, zinc ores, and all other ores of that character is from very low grade mines. We are now producing the greater portion of the copper which is produced in the United States from ores carrying only from 15 to 40 pounds of metal to every ton of rock which is mined. The 5 per cent, or if the amendment which I have proposed is finally adopted the 1 per cent, as now provided in this bill, applies to the gross value of the ore; in other words, if the ore is said to be worth $10 per ton and it costs $10.50 to mine it, to reduce it and produce the metal for use, which it generally does, 5 per cent would be 50 cents a ton, and one would receive $9.50 per ton for ore that cost him $10 per ton to mine and to reduce.

The present amendment still leaves the matter entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, reducing merely the minimum.

It may be perfectly feasible and just for the Secretary of the Interior to require as to a particular mine containing rich ores of gold or silver, running several thousand dollars per ton, a 50 per cent royalty, for example, while as to the great mass of low-grade ores 5 per cent royalty upon the gross value of the metal itself after paying all the costs of mining and of reduction and transportation and marketing would be absolutely prohibitive. I can say to the Senator who has charge of the bill that, in my judgment, if he leaves in this bill a 5 per cent minimum instead of reaching the object which he has in view—namely, the production, for instance, of manganese and other ores of that character—he will in fact place a prohibitive legislative bar which will prevent the carrying out of the purposes of his bill. For that reason I have moved to insert "one" in lieu of "five."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the amendment has already been adopted, and I am very glad the Senator from New Mexico has made this statement. I certainly agree with him that there would be no use of passing a bill under which no leases would be made. I call the attention of Senators especially to the fact that the amendment merely strikes out "five," in line 8, page 5, and inserts "one," so as to provide that the lessee shall pay, for the benefit of the Indians, not less than 1 per cent of the gross value. The Secretary of the Interior, if he saw fit and thought it was just and equitable, could even demand and extract 10 per cent gross, although that would be unreasonable, of course. So I do not see any harm in the amendment, and I am glad it has been adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that the royalty ought to be computed on net value? For instance, in some sections of the country the smelting charges are exceedingly high, and why anyone should ask a royalty on what it costs to treat the ore I can not understand.

Mr. ASHURST. Well, there is some force in the Senator's statement; there is no doubt about that; and yet this bill has had a perilous course. This very amendment has been a bone of contention among two opposing factions, both very earnest in their views; and, while as a matter of personal preference I would prefer the computation on net value, yet with an amendment providing that the royalty shall not be less than 1 per cent of the gross I can see that no harm would come, and leases would probably be made. The present amendment will not prevent any leases being made, in my opinion, while with a minimum royalty of 5 per cent on the gross, I think, in all probability no leases would be acquired. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] suggests that he knows there would not be, and I agree with him; but I think we may try the 1 per cent gross provision, and if no leases are made in the course of a year or so, then we can fix the net value as the basis. I suggest that this bill must pass another body of Congress and, therefore, that gross value at this time be left as the basis.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, take, for instance, iron ore in any State of the Union. The Senator knows that if the mine owner can secure 50 cents a ton net on iron ore it is considered a good profit. I can say to the Senator that in my State we have millions and millions of tons of iron ore which the mine owner would be delighted to mine and deliver to the smelter at a profit of only 50 cents a ton. Now, if we are going to base the royalty upon gross value, that will include the cost of mining the ore, hauling it and putting it upon the railroad, the railroad charges, and whatever charges there may be at the smelter, and if we require that even 1 per cent shall be paid on the gross we will never get any development under the bill. It seems to me whatever percentage we determine upon ought to be based upon the net value of the ore, because that is the real value of the ore taken from the ground. I move, Mr. President, to strike out the word "gross," in line 9, page 5, and insert the word "net."

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask a question there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator from Arizona understand that the Secretary of the Interior has recommended that the minimum royalty be reduced from 5 per cent to 1 per cent?

Mr. ASHURST. No; the Secretary of the Interior has made no such recommendation, but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Secretary would have the power under the bill to demand, take, and extract a royalty of 10 or 15 per cent, because the bill, with the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, simply provides that a royalty of not less than 1 per cent shall be paid, and there is no limit to what the Secretary of the Interior may fix as a maximum.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that, but has it not been represented here that this bill was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRBY. Now, the royalty to be paid is by the amendment reduced 4 per cent below his recommendation, so far as the minimum royalty is concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. Hardly. The Senator is earnestly groping for the facts, but that is hardly the situation. As the bill was drawn it provided that not less than 5 per cent of the gross value of the output of the minerals at the mine should be paid to the Indian tribes. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] simply provides that not less than 1 per cent shall be paid. If the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his sound discretion and by computations, ascertains that the mine can not pay 5 per cent on the gross, but can pay 1 per cent or 2 per cent on the gross and allow a fair profit to the miner, he may make such a contract. He may, however, make a contract or execute a lease requiring and demanding 15 per cent of the gross. There is no limitation on the maximum.

Mr. KIRBY. Then I wish to ask another question. If the amount of royalty is fixed at a certain percentage on the net, and the miner manages to make a statement of his condition, showing that he does not make anything net, he gets the Indian land and gets the metal, and does not pay anything. Is that the idea?

Mr. ASHURST. Well, I have not urged that the amendment just proposed by the Senator from Utah be adopted. I have had no opportunity to address myself to the question.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Arkansas has suggested that the miner would get the Indian land and the minerals for nothing. There is a further provision, to which I will call the Senator's attention, with reference to the surface area of the land which the royalty upon the extraction of the minerals does not cover. For the first calendar year 25 cents an acre is to be paid; for the second, third, fourth, and fifth calendar years 50 cents per acre; and thereafter $1 per acre rental for the land for any area which may be used. So that the Indians get rental for the surface area in addition to any royalty which they may get from the minerals extracted.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I wish to say that, as a practical miner, I have had experience in mining low-grade ores and in mining high-grade ores. I have known a royalty to be paid all the way up to 50 per cent even on the gross value, but that was where practically solid metal was being taken out.

Mr. ASHURST. And, if the Senator will pardon me, doubtless very near to transportation facilities.

Mr. FALL. Yes; and upon the surface of the ground, where it was taken out by simply breaking the ground and extracting the metal with a mortar and pestle.

But, Mr. President, the interests of the Indians, as the Senator has said, are absolutely safeguarded so long as the Secretary of the Interior has discretion. Then he can fix the royalty upon the basis of the value of the ore, precisely as we have always been paying freight rates under the old rule pertaining in mining States upon the value of the ore. If the same freight rate that is applied to ore $50 in value were applied to ore five or ten dollars in value, it would be impossible to ship the low-grade ore; and if the same rate of royalty is applied to the low-grade ore that is applied to the high-grade ore it will, as I have said—and I speak from practical knowledge—in my judgment, prohibit the opening up of the very metals which it is desired to produce for war purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the Indians themselves by their representatives are satisfied with the provisions of this act?

Mr. ASHURST. Well, Mr. President, I trust I am speaking with accuracy; and if I do not state the facts I hope some member of the committee will call my attention to it. The bill, as I said, has been pending before the committee for a long time—a couple of years. I do not at this time recall any protest from any tribe of Indians; in fact, the only expressions upon the subject we have heard were favorable, so long as the recapture clause of the leases was carefully guarded and so long as some royalty was paid; and reverting to what the Senator from New Mexico has said, in addition to the royalty there is a stipulated rental per acre payable each year and credited on the royalty if there be one paid. So, in answer to the Senator from California directly, I do not recall at this moment that any tribe of Indians, I do not recall that even one Indian, has ever protested to our committee against the bill. I call upon other members of the committee, and ask them if they remember any Indian ever protesting? I do not.

Mr. PHELAN. There are 436,000 acres in reserves in the State of California.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. PHELAN. And if in order I should like to move that California be included among the States which will receive the benefits of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. PHELAN. Very well; I will submit the amendment when that is disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I am convinced the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is right in this matter. I appreciate the difficulties which have confronted my colleague in trying to secure the passage of this bill, and I realize that there is a theory held by some that the Indian is being assailed from every side; but the fact is that this is no attempt to rob poor Lo; it is the only opportunity to do the Indian any good on earth. He will stay where he now is for the next 50 years, with more than 19,000,000 acres of land in my State alone, without any hope of ever getting a nickel from it. These mines, as every man knows, are usually on lands that are worthless for anything in the world excepting mines, in those volcanic, rocky countries where there is nothing but a sparse growth, and sometimes none at all; and this land is included in an Indian reservation. Here is an opportunity for giving the Indian, in the case of the low-grade ores, 1 per cent of the net; and under the bill, wherever the ores are easily obtained, wherever the expenses are less than we thought—wherever the profit is greater, in other words—the Secretary of the Interior has power to raise the limit. Having that power, and his purpose being to protect the Indian, as we all know from all our relations with him, it gives him an absolute security, greater than he can possibly have under the existing conditions.

Looking at the matter from the Indian's standpoint alone, eliminating every other question from it, there is nothing that will add as much to his education and his enlightenment and his financial advantage as the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am exceedingly sorry that the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] was adopted; and I want to say, for the information of the Senator from Arkansas, that our action is not in accordance with the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior. If the Senator will read the report on this bill, and read the letter from Secretary Lane, he will find that the Secretary suggested that we strike out the words "2 per cent" and insert the words "a minimum of 5 per cent."

Mr. President, my State is not included in this bill as it is now pending before the Senate. We have practically no Indian reservations left in North Dakota; but I think it is our duty to protect the Indian's property, whether there are any reservations in our State or not.

The Senator from Utah is now proposing to still further limit the royalty to the Indians. Instead of making the royalty 1 per cent on the gross tonnage he wants to limit it to 1 per cent on the net. I say to you, Senators, let us be fair with the Indians. Rather than make this provision of 1 per cent on the net, let us say that we will take it away from the Indian without any royalty whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator does not want to misstate the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. GRONNA. No.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment of the Senator from Utah did not say "net tonnage" but "net value." There is quite a difference between net tonnage and net value when it comes to royalties.

Mr. GRONNA. The only difference is that it makes it so much worse for the Indian; that is all. I am glad the Senator called attention to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, I do not see why anyone would claim a royalty on a lot of worthless rock. I do not see how anyone could pay a fixed royalty on a tonnage basis the value of which can not be determined until finally disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You must do that for the Indian; you must make him pay for the rock, waste, gang matter, and everything else.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows very much more about mining than I do—I know practically nothing about it—but suppose that ore containing manganese is mined on an Indian reservation, is not the estimate made at the mines of the amount of manganese in each ton of ore?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, it is estimated; but nobody knows what it will be until it passes through the smelter; and if the Senator had been used to mining he would know that the mining sample, or the sample assayed at the mine, is assayed from hand-picked samples. A man goes and picks up a sample here, and he picks up a sample there, and the same from each class of ore, and he puts those samples together, and he has the same assayed; but to find out what is in the ore it has to go to the sampler and then to the smelter. After the ore is grounded at the sampler it is first divided in half, and then the half is divided into a quarter, and then the quarter is divided into an eighth, and the eighth is divided into a sixteenth, and the sixteenth into a thirty-second, until it gets down to a sample that you can hold in your hand. Then the assayers assay that sample, and sometimes there is 50 per cent difference between the actual assay after it has gone through the sampler and the assay that the man at the mine reported from the hand-picked samples. That is the situation.

Mr. GRONNA. Let us suppose, now, that there is agreement between the owners of the mine and the miner as to the value of that ore, but that you wait until it has been ascertained after it has been smelted: The Senator wants the Indian to pay for the transportation of his ore. Instead of paying him what his ore is worth at the mine, the Senators' amendment makes it so that the Indian will simply get his royalty upon the net.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, no; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want anything except simply to treat the Indian the way that the railroad is treated, and the way the miner is treated, and the way that everybody else connected with the mine is treated. The miner does not know anything about what the railroad charges upon his ore will be until after it has passed through the sampler. The value of the ore is ascertained by the sampling and smelting of it, and the freight rate is determined by its value.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, may I ask the Senator, why does he wish to strike out the word "gross" and insert the word "net"? Why does he want that if it is not an advantage to the miner?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator, why does the Senator want to pay the Indian a percentage upon the cost of smelting and the cost of sampling and the cost of railroad transportation? He ought to be content with whatever royalty he receives upon the actual value of the ore that is taken from the ground.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I just want to say that this is not, of course, a new question, and this very proposition as to whether the word "net" or "gross" should be used has been the stumbling block that has gotten in the pathway of this bill. I do not feel that it would be entirely good faith on my part toward the remaining members of the committee for me to support the amendment of the Senator from Utah. If we should insert the word "net," I do not believe we would ever get this bill into law. What I seek is a fairly good working law, one that will function. A bill that would not function, one that we could not work under, would be of no use. For that reason I am going to adhere to the views of the committee, especially in view of the amendment that has been proposed by the Senator from New Mexico and adopted, reducing the royalty to 1 per cent of the gross.

Mr. SMOOT. It is "not less than 1 per cent."

Mr. ASHURST. "Not less than 1 per cent."

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is customary to use the word "gross" in fixing a royalty in metalliferous mining, but they generally say that they will pay a certain per cent of royalty on the gross value of the ore after deducting certain charges. That makes it definite.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be all right.

Mr. PITTMAN. This bill attempts to fix a royalty on the gross value of the ore at the mine. If you want to make it in perfect harmony with all leasing of metalliferous ores throughout the West, you will put in there, after the word "mine," on line 10, the following:

The gross value of the output of the mineral at the mine after deducting the actual cost of mining.

Then you will have something definite.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator think we ought to reduce the minimum, then, to 1 per cent?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say to the Senator that that would make no difference, in my opinion, as far as the mining of gold and silver is concerned. Whether or not it would make any difference in the mining of iron I do not know, as I know nothing about that. I understand that the cost of mining iron is frequently very close to its value at the mine, but I do not know that. The only thing that appeals to me in this matter is that it is a minimum, and my experience with various departments where they have a discretion in fixing a royalty is that the minimum is in no danger. They generally fix the royalty so high that if there is no maximum there are no leases issued; and possibly that would be the case here.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota, of course, is thoroughly and sincerely interested in protecting the rights of the Indians. I beg that the Senator will not fall into the common error, and think that those of us in the mining States who know something about mining have any desire in any way to deprive the Indians of profits upon ores which will yield a profit. The sole object of this bill is to make it possible to extract minerals upon an Indian reservation.

The Senator of course knows, from his experience, that no Indian in the United States has ever been a miner. The Senator probably knows that the Indians of every tribe have a superstition concerning mining, and that you can not persuade them to mine for precious metals or others, except as they may find them upon the surface of the ground. The only exception has been with the Pueblo, Zuni, or Hopi Indians in the mining of turquoise. These are facts which are known to all of us; so that unless there is some provision by which an American miner may be allowed to extract these minerals they will remain unextracted, they will add nothing to the wealth of the United States, and they will add nothing to the wealth of the Indian. We want some practical method by which we can protect the Indian, give him some revenue from the extraction of these minerals, and at the same time offer some inducement to some one to go in and extract the minerals.

The Senator must understand that these minerals are not lying upon the surface of the ground, ready to be picked up in chunks and put in your pocket and sold at the nearest store or mint, but that in order to secure the minerals an investment of thousands of dollars is necessary. For instance, in the operation of a copper mine, I will say to the Senator that at one of the mining camps in my State now regarded as one of the big camps of the world, the Tyrone camp, belonging to the Phelps-Dodge Co., in the Burro Mountains, for eight or ten years this company has been expending not thousands but hundreds of thousand and millions of dollars without extracting one cent in return.

A copper mine, as we say, is not found. A copper mine is made. You must have ore reserves back of you for two or three or four or five years after you have discovered the ore before you are justified in putting in a concentrator and a smelter. In order to work the 2 per cent porphyritic ore now principally used in mining copper, your first expenditure will never be less than $1,000,000, and from that to $5,000,000, in machinery alone; and before you are justified in expending a dollar on the machinery you must have ore reserves, which simply means that you must sink shafts and run tunnels and block out your ore and have ore reserves in sight to justify the operation of your mill night and day for at least three years. That is the average basis upon which miners work. That means this: If I am trespassing upon the Senator's time, I will not do so.

Mr. GRONNA. No; go ahead.

Mr. FALL. I want to place this matter fairly and frankly before him, however. It means, under this bill, that first a prospector must discover the mine. Second, he must obtain money from some source with which to open it to a sufficient depth to interest some one with capital to finally develop the mine. This must all be done first. I can say frankly to the Senator that for every 1,000 mining prospects ever located or opened or attempted to be opened in the United States there has not been more than one running, developing, paying mine; and the money expended on the other 999 mining prospects has been an absolute loss to those putting it in, even when they had mineral in sight. All of these matters must be taken into consideration.

The object of this bill is to develop mining upon the mineral lands and the Indian reserves. That is the object. If you place the royalty so high that the value of the ore extracted is not equal to the cost of extraction, the loss by wear and tear of the machinery, if it does not pay, nobody will undertake to open up the mine, and there will be no minerals developed, and the Indians will get no income of any kind or character whatsoever.

Metalliferous mining is not like an oil proposition. So long as it is left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior that he may fix the royalty at anything from 1 per cent up to 100 per cent the Indian is absolutely protected. The object of the amendment of the Senator from Utah is to provide that instead of fixing the royalty upon the gross value it will be fixed upon the net value. If you fix the royalty upon the net value so high that the difference between the cost and the sale value of the mineral can not be covered, you are not going to have a producing mine. No one is going into a losing proposition of this character, irrespective of the question as to whether the royalty is fixed upon the net or upon the gross value. But if you fix it upon the gross value—if you leave it as it is in the bill, and fix it upon the gross value, with a minimum of 1 per cent—even if that is fixed, in the majority of instances it will be twice as much as the minimum of 5 per cent as it was originally carried in the bill. The only sensible, practical, reasonable, proper, just method of fixing a royalty upon the extraction of minerals is to fix it upon the net value, which is easily ascertainable.

For instance, the Secretary of the Interior would have access to the miners' books, he would have access to the railroads' books to check up with the freight rates, he would have access to the smelter or the reduction books, and finally he would have access to the books of the metal-selling companies. The Senator must understand that copper, for instance, is not sold by the smelter, or even by those owning their own smelters, reduction works, and mines, but it goes to the metal-selling companies. It generally goes to the metal-reduction companies or refining companies, because nearly all copper, for instance, carries as a by-product some silver and some gold or some other metal.

All these must go to the refining company and be refined. Under this bill the Indian would get this percentage of every fraction of a dollar of silver, every fraction of a dollar of gold, every fraction of a dollar of any other metal whatever, even if it carried copper or manganese.

The proper, practical, just method is to have it fixed upon the next net value. I shall move to strike out "gross value" and insert "net value" in the amendment which I offered, because of the statement made now by the chairman of the committee that he thought some who did not understand the subject of mining were so opposed to it that it would not be practicable to pass the bill through the Senate, and I want to have something done. But I say to the Senator frankly, unless you think that the Secretary of the Interior would not protect the rights of the Indian he would be as amply and fully protected under the proposition to fix a royalty upon the net value as if we would fix it upon the gross value. In fact, how are you going to discover the gross value of ore? You must still go finally to the metals refining company in New Jersey, or wherever it may be, before you can even ascertain the gross value of the ore. You can not ascertain it at the mine. That is not feasible. That is never done and it can not be done unless you just simply agree that we will say the gross value of this metal is so much per ton. But no mining man will do that.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, as I understand the Senator from New Mexico, he believes we ought to fix it at 1 per cent on the net value.

Mr. FALL. Certainly; that is, the minimum. I think that is fair, because I believe it will help to open up the mines, and if that is not the purpose we should not be wasting our time on this bill.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. GRONNA. If I may have an opportunity to say just a few words——

Mr. KING. Let me make one observation, which relates to what the Senator said, and the Senator from North Dakota can reply to it at the same time.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. KING. The Senator will understand that when ore is taken from the mine and placed upon the dump, as we say, it is absolutely impossible to determine what its value is. You could not fix the gross value of ore. One man might say that it was worth $5 a ton, and yet he could not determine until, as the Senator from New Mexico said, it had been reduced and had been placed upon the market. There might be base ores. A given ton of ore carrying 5 per cent copper might be worth very much more than another ton carrying 6 per cent, because in one instance there would be base metals; and the cost of reduction would be very much greater with a 6 per cent copper ore than with a 5 per cent copper ore. Six per cent copper ore might be worth less by reason of that fact than 5 per cent copper ore. So it is absolutely impossible to determine what the gross value of the ore is. You could not sell ore upon the dump unless it was some particular grade of ore that was free from the manifold complexities that surround the determination of the value of ores. So you must say the net value, or else you are in the field of speculation and uncertainty, and you never could reach any definite conclusion.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am obliged to both Senators for the information. Answering the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] first, I do not particularly care where the estimate is made, whether it is after the ores have been smelted or not; but I do object to the Indian paying for the smelting and paying for all these expenses and simply getting 1 per cent net after the product has been taken out of the ore.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion to him, with the discretion left in the Secretary of the Interior to fix the royalty the Indian will not pay for the freight or for the extraction expenses or reduction expenses or any other expenses whatsoever. The Secretary is not compelled to fix a minimum of only 1 per cent. What I mean is that if the Secretary would be justified in placing a royalty of 1 per cent upon the gross value he will know whether he is justifiable in placing a royalty of 25 per cent upon the net value, and if he is, he will place 25 per cent upon the net value, leaving the miner 25 per cent of the value and inducing him to continue mining, while in many instances if he undertook to assess even a royalty of 1 per cent upon the gross value the miner will not mine the ore.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, answering the Senator from New Mexico, and answering his first question, I am sure he is just as much interested in the Indian as I am. That has been my experience with him in serving upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have had no doubt about that whatever. But there is such a thing as being mistaken, even if we are quite well versed on certain subjects. I think I am pretty well versed in the growing of wheat, and yet I have at times been mistaken along that line.

Mr. FALL. I have often been mistaken on the subject of mining—very often.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GRONNA. After I answer the Senator from New Mexico, I will yield. The proposition is this: We are the custodians of the Indian property. The committee of the Senate and the committee of the House have this property especially in charge. We are the guardians of the Indians. The Indians are not here to speak for themselves. This land belongs absolutely to the Indians; it does not belong to the Government, as indicated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] the other day.

Mr. FALL. The Senator does not want to make as broad a statement as that. In New Mexico and Arizona, with the exception of the Navajo Tribe of Indians, every Indian reservation belongs to the United States. It is purely an Executive reservation and not a treaty reservation. The Navajo is the only treaty reservation.

Mr. GRONNA. The Indian reservations in the United States, outside of a few, have been set aside for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. FALL. That is by Executive order; just as I explained yesterday, 54,000 acres last year were set aside.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not care to be led into that. I want to tell the Senator from New Mexico why I am saying that I believe this royalty is too low. While I do not myself know anything about mining, I confess, yet I want to read the letter of Secretary Lane addressed to Hon. John H. Stephens, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, under date of April 10, 1916:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 10, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I have your request for report upon H. R. 12426, which proposes to permit prospecting for and leasing of metalliferous mineral deposits within Indian reservations in the State of Arizona for 50-year periods upon a flat royalty of 2 per cent of the gross value of the output at the mine, the proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians.

I favor the enactment of this measure. I find that 5 per cent is the ordinary commercial leasing rate, and would suggest that in lieu of 2 per cent. It also appears that there is a public demand that mineral deposits in Indian reservations in other States be opened to development, and I therefore suggest that the words "in the State of Arizona," in line 11, page 1, be stricken out, making the bill applicable to such deposits in all Indian reservations. It is also suggested that lines 5 to 11, page 2, be eliminated, and the following substituted therefor:

"That after the passage and approval of this act unallotted lands within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for and discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be."

The latter amendment is suggested for the reason that there may be cases where the opening of all lands within a given Indian reservation to exploration and prospecting would be destructive to the rights and interests of the Indians or inadvisable from the standpoint of public policy, and the proposed amendment gives some discretion to the officers of the United States in that connection.

In line 14, page 6, the word "carry" should be "carrying."

With these amendments, I recommend the bill be enacted.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

That is the statement of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FALL. Does he say 5 per cent gross or 5 per cent net, or does he differentiate?

Mr. GRONNA. He does not seem to say anything about that.

Mr. FALL. Five per cent net is the ordinary percentage.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, the bill when it was drawn——

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator agree to strike out "gross" and reinsert "5 per cent net"?

Mr. GRONNA. I certainly would rather insert "5 per cent net" than to make it 1 per cent net, as indicated by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. FALL. What is the difference, so long as the Secretary can make it 1 per cent or 25 per cent?

Mr. GRONNA. Well, for one, Mr. President—of course, I have only one vote, but I shall never agree to vote for the bill limiting it to 1 per cent, because the Secretary of the Interior has indicated that it ought to be not less than 5 per cent. The bill was in the same form, I think, then that it is now. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. Does the Senator understand that the demand for this legislation comes from the Indian or from the miner?

Mr. GRONNA. I think there is a demand for this legislation from the Interior Department, I will say to the Senator. I think the Government is anxious to have this bill passed, because much of this mineral is needed in the manufacture of explosives and in the manufacture of steel, and so forth. If the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Mexico will agree to a minimum of 5 per cent net, I shall not object to it.

Mr. FALL. I accept the proposition very gratefully in the name of the people of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. I think that is a very fair compromise, and I trust the amendment will be agreed to, making it 5 per cent net instead of gross. It is all right.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] wishes to take the floor, and I shall not occupy the time further. I know unless the bill is passed before 2 o'clock we may have some difficulty in passing it, and I am exceedingly anxious to have it passed. But I am also anxious to see that the property of the Indians is protected and that their rights are protected, and it is my sworn duty to see that they are protected. I do not believe that 1 per cent of the net value is a sufficient royalty to pay anyone, whether an Indian or anyone else, who may possess lands that contain minerals.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, every Senator has sworn to do his duty, to uphold the Constitution, and there is not a Senator in this body who does not want to protect the rights of the Indians just as much as the Senator from North Dakota. I have just as much interest in the welfare of the Indians as any living man, and I think that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will bear me out in that statement.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota seems to think that if the bill provides for not less than 1 per cent that is all that can be charged by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GRONNA. No; the Senator must not put me in that position, because I do not think any such thing, nor have I said any such thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Then all the Senator said as to the royalty that the Indian will get falls by the wayside.

Mr. GRONNA. It does not.

Mr. SMOOT. Under this provision the Secretary of the Interior can impose 50 per cent royalty if he desires.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the amendment is adopted, also he could impose 1 per cent, could he not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and I will say to the Senator from Washington that 1 per cent in some cases would be higher than 50 per cent in others; I mean as far as allowing the development of the mining industry is concerned. I can tell the Senator——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator is going to tell me, I should like him to tell me of a case and the circumstances in which he thinks that 1 per cent would be an adequate rental.

Mr. SMOOT. One per cent on the gross value of nearly all the iron that is mined in the Western country would be almost prohibitive. I want to say to the Senator, as I stated before, there are millions and tens of millions of tons of iron ore in the State of Utah that the owner of the mines would be delighted to sell for 50 cents a ton.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will yield, in reply to the Senator from Washington, I will say that since the new freight schedules have been promulgated, if they are enforced, it will close down a large number of lead and silver and low-grade mines not only in Utah but other Western States, and 1 per cent in many instances is the maximum profit. If you compel the miner to pay 1 per cent I know of many mines that will close down.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is proposed to make 1 per cent the net value of the ore.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody has proposed that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is it exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that has not been proposed by anyone on the floor of the Senate. Even with the word "gross" out and the word "net" inserted, it would not be 1 per cent in any case, in my opinion. I do not think the Secretary of the Interior would ever impose 1 per cent, unless they were just such cases as I am going now to tell the Senate about.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will permit me, merely to justify myself, the Senator, I believe, is mistaken when he says that the proposition to make it net instead of gross has not been proposed. It has been proposed, and it has been suggested here with the apparent prospect of success, that it be adjusted on the basis of not less than 5 per cent upon the net value of the ore.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when I offered that amendment I had no idea whatever that the Secretary of the Interior was going to impose 1 per cent on the general run of ore that may be mined on Indian reservations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not so much a question of the faith and confidence the Senator may have in the varying successive incumbents of the office of the Secretary of the Interior, whom we do not know anything about. It is a question of the Senate, when it is acting upon this proposition, not to transfer the responsibility to some executive officer, but to impose reasonable safeguards in the legislation so that it will not be dependent upon the discretion or upon the uncertainty of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not like local legislation, and I want to ask the Senator why it would not be fair for Utah if fair for the other Western States? Why do we cut Utah out?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say it was a fair law. I do not believe in the pirnciple, and I do not believe the people of Utah believe in it. I think the western Senators who vote for this bill will rue the day they ever voted for it. I want to say that much to the Senator and to the Senate——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Let me answer the Senator from Washington and then I will yield.

In the Deep Creek country in my own State there are found ores carrying arsenic and other base metals. On every unit of those base metals the smelters impose a penalty of 20 cents a unit. If a royalty is charged upon the gross value, it would simply prohibit the use of that kind of ore.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, let us take some of the business which has been transacted with the Indians in the past. I have been upon the Committee on Indian Affairs for a number of years. I know that in nearly every instance in the leasing of oil lands the minimum royalty has been applied.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not seem to think that there is any difference between leasing oil lands and lands containing metalliferous minerals. The oil gushes out of the ground and is run directly into barrels and is ready for sale and everybody knows just what it is. That is an entirely different proposition from the one where you mine metalliferous ores, where you are a thousand feet underground, running tunnels for thousands of feet, with not an ounce of ore in sight. You strike a body of it, and you do not know how long you are going to run in it. It may continue 10 feet or it may continue 100 feet; it may develop into a body of ore or it may run into useless gang matter.

Mr. GRONNA. I was not speaking of mining. I was speaking of the application of these leases.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator was, and the application must apply to oil and it must apply to ore. It does not apply in one case, nor could it apply the same as it does in the other.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield a moment, I just ask for information, could we not reach some compromise on 5 per cent net?

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing. I think the Indians ought to have 5 per cent. I am perfectly willing to put in a 5 per cent limit, and to put in the word "net" value.

Mr. ASHURST. All contending factions seem to agree on 5 per cent. It seems to me if we could agree on that an amendment would be appropriate on page 5, line 9, to strike out the word "gross" and insert the word "net."

Mr. SMOOT. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. What is the exact parliamentary situation?

Mr. SMOOT. That is already before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the question is on striking out the word "gross" and inserting "net" in line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). The Chair understands that to be the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KENDRICK. We have one of the largest Indian reservations in the country in our State, and I therefore move to have Wyoming included in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Wyoming that there is an amendment pending at this time and that his amendment is not germane as an amendment to the amendment. It will be in order after the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah is disposed of.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is making the percentage net instead of gross 5 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. Now, Mr. President, I ask that a vote be taken on my amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I think the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Utah making the royalty 1 per cent was agreed to ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. It will be.

Mr. GRONNA. I move that that vote be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition of the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 5, line 8, striking out the word "five," before the words "per centum," and inserting "one," was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. Now, Mr. President, I ask that my amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana moves to include in the amendment the State of Wyoming. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment as amended was agreed to is reconsidered, and without objection the State of Wyoming will be included in the amendment. The Chair hears none; and the amendment is agreed to as amended.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 15. That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as Indian reservations except by act of Congress.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have offered that amendment at this time because, unless such an amendment is adopted, I should not desire this bill to apply to my State. I certainly do not want it to be within the power of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to place all the public lands in my State within a nominal Indian reserve, and then proceed to leave all of our minerals. I am willing that the present Indian reserves shall be included in this bill, and I want it to apply to my State if it goes no further; but if there is going to be no limit, and all the public lands of my State are to be included in it, I will not vote for it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it seems to me that logically this amendment ought to be adopted. Since those of us who have been urging this bill have contended that we are not going to commit Congress by this proposed act to the leasing system on the public domain, we can not logically escape voting for the amendment. Otherwise a mere stroke of the pen would include large and boundless tracts of public domain and apply the leasing system to them. So, in good faith, I am bound to vote for this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. FALL. I shall vote for this amendment cheerfully. However, it does not apply to Nevada or to any other State except those States that are included in the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. It applies to all public lands. I am going to ask to include my State if the amendment is adopted, but without it I shall not.

Mr. FALL. I am perfectly willing to so apply it, but the Senator will by his amendment have limited the operation of this bill to certain States named in it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is a very radical and far-reaching proposition involved in this amendment; one of far more consequence than the bill itself—ten times more. It affects the entire public-land policy of the United States. It involves a repeal of a number of existing laws under which certain discretion is vested in the President. The amendment has not been discussed; it has not been referred to a committee; there is no report on it, and there has been no statement here as to the existing laws and as to the extent of the changes proposed to be made in them by the amendment. It seems to me it would not only be contrary to the custom of the Senate, but would be a preposterous thing to do now, with only a handful of Senators present, with two minutes' consideration to change the public-land policy of the United States because the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] otherwise does not want this bill to apply to his State. I certainly am not in favor of the amendment, and if the amendment is adopted, much as I am interested in the opening up of mining in the Indian reservation, I shall be compelled to oppose the bill and vote against it. I am very sorry to see the passage of this bill obstructed by the proposition to insert here a new principle, a new question, which has not been considered by the Senate or by one of its committees.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, there has always been very great discontent in the Congress of the United States that the public lands should be disposed of by the mere ipse dixit of the President. The State of the Senator from Washington was released from it; so was Idaho, and so were three or four other States when Mr. Roosevelt was President. In connection with the release, we all know that with the bill before him, which had been passed by both Houses of Congress, he did not sign it until he had spread reserves over our western country which have stood in the way of their progress and success from that day to this. If the Senator from Washington will think a moment, he will admit that the Congress of the United States ought to dispose of the public lands of the United States; that no President should have the power to sit in the White House and arbitrarily set aside land as Indian reserves, running from mountain peak to mountain peak.

A little while ago in my own State lands were set aside, covering millions of acres, for Indians, though those Indians had thousands and thousands of acres of land of their own on another Indian reservation.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Washington, in whose judgment in these matters I have such confidence, will not stand here and contend that the Congress of the United States shall waive all its right as to what disposition shall be made of the public domain, and confer that right on any Executive. That would be absolute ruin to the States; and any President who so pleased could make their further progress absolutely impossible with such power in his hands. I know the Senator from Washington, when he considers the matter, will admit that Congress itself should make disposition of the public lands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in the first place, the proposition of the Senator from Arizona is based on an entirely erroneous assumption of the fundamental effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. Whether the amendment of the Senator from Nevada should be adopted or not adopted, whether or not the President of the United States under existing laws has the authority to create reservations in the public lands, still the authority of Congress over the public lands, whether they are reserved by the President or not reserved, remains.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just a moment, if the Senator please.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just at that point——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will give me an opportunity, I desire to answer his own proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is only a suggestion which I desire to make to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The only suggestion I desire to make is, that when the President makes a reservation, the only way we can possibly get away from it is for Congress to pass a bill; but then the President has the power to veto it. We are surrendering our rights on the pretense of a claim that amounts to nothing in the end. That is the suggestion I desired to make.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, the Senator from Arizona has made his statement anyway, so I have forgotten what I was about to say; but I will answer this new statement of the Senator, and say that on such a perfectly elementary matter it is not necessary, or it ought not to be necessary, to call attention to the fact that the Senator's proposition that the power of the President to veto bills deprives Congress of its power over legislation would lead to the conclusion that Congress has no legislative power at all, because the President can veto any bill that is passed by Congress, whether it relates to a reservation of the public land or not. That is a part of the legislative machinery of the country. All the legislative power of Congress is subject to the veto power of the Executive, and whether this bill is passed or not passed it remains the same afterwards as it was before.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am opposed to the bill under consideration. It proposes to open up Indian reservations for the leasing of mineral lands, including gold and silver mines, instead of permitting the entry system of locations which has prevailed ever since the discovery of gold in California, and which has produced such a wonderful development of our natural resources.

THE RELATION OF INDIANS TO THEIR RESERVATIONS.

I think the bill is predicated upon a mistaken theory of the administration and disposition of public and Indian lands. Indian lands never were reserved to give the Indians the right to lease them or to sell them at such prices as they could get. The lands were set aside for the purpose of concentrating the Indians on reservations for governmental purposes, to save them from conflict with the whites, to encourage them to exercise certain governmental functions of a minor nature through their chiefs and councils, and to provide for them hunting grounds. It was intended that these uses should be temporary, for we hoped that by aid of the schools which we established the Indians would come to adopt the ways of our civilization and finally abandon the tribal relation. It was then expected that allotments of land for agricultural purposes would be made to the individual Indians, and all necessary farm implements, work horses, and so forth, would be provided by the Government, so they could become self-sustaining, civilized citizens of the United States. * * *

Whenever settlements of whites crowded around the Indian reserves it was soon found that difficulties arose between the settlers and the Indians. It was desirable that the Indians should be transferred to more distant reserves, so that this conflict of interest and of arms would not occur. For that reason we put them in reservations in the far West. The object was also to encourage them in maintaining a government of their own, preserving order and punishing minor offenses, and in order to prevent difficulties the white man was not permitted to go onto the Indian reserves. A permit was required before a white man could go onto a reservation, and a permit was also required before Indians could leave their reservations. The object was to segregate the Indians, to keep them on reservations so that they would not interfere with the whites, and to prevent the whites from interfering with them. No one expected the Indians to develop mines. No statesman contemplated locking up forever the mineral resources in Indian reservations. It was expected that every one of these reservations would be opened to settlement and exploration under the public-land laws of the United States upon terms that would be fair and just. That has been the policy of the Government, and satisfactory adjustments have always been made with the Indians before opening up the reservations to settlement.

One of the largest reserves—I think even larger than any embraced within the State of Arizona—was the Ute Indian Reservation in my State, and that was so opened to settlement. In that case there was a provision that the Indians should move to certain other lands. The white population had settled close to them. Differences arose, bad feeling developed, and massacres followed. At the end it was deemed best for the Indians and for the white men that the Indians should be moved to another reservation. The result was we agreed to give to their fund, upon which the Government pays interest for their benefit, $1.25 per acre for the land as it was taken up and to give them $5 per acre for the mineral land when patented, whether it contained minerals in paying quantity or not. This was satisfactory to the Indians, and it made a better remuneration to them than could have been obtained under a leasing system.

Everyone is in favor of treating the Indians fairly, and I am willing right now, in preference to this bill, to have the Government make a deed to every foot of this land to the individual Indians and let them sell or dispose of it as they see fit, so it will not be held perpetually by the Government exempt from taxation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Indian now owns the equitable title, and the Senator must know—for he is a practical legislator and a man of vast experience—that if we gave the Indian the fee, Anglo-Saxon domination and the land hunger of our race would soon result in overthrowing the Indian, and he would have no land left, and he would be at the doors of Congress petitioning for land upon which to live.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, barring the question of whether the Indians are capable of managing their own affairs, I would be willing that the United States Government should sell this land at the highest price it could get for it and turn the money over to the Indian fund to be used for their benefit. I do not want the Indians to be treated in any way that is not fair. In the past after allotments of lands to individual Indians for farming purposes have been made nearly all other lands of Indian reservations have been opened to settlement under the entry system both for farming and for mining purposes, the Government paying into the Indian fund a sum agreed upon with the Indians or the amounts realized by the Government in its sales of the lands at Government prices at not less than $1.25 per acre. If the price is too low, double or triple the Government prices but preserve the entry system. If the lands are not opened under that system, we are not going to get development. No great development can be made under a leasing system.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] said a little while ago it costs to open up a low-grade copper mine from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000. How can that money be obtained? The Senator knows very well that the capitalist never goes out upon the public domain and locates a mining claim. The man who locates a claim under the leasing system is obliged to go to a financial center for the purpose of getting the project financed; that is what they all do; and it is what they have got to do, especially in the case of a low-grade property. Whenever a locator goes to Wall Street and presents the matter to capitalists there and says, "I want a loan of $3,000,000 or $5,000,000," he is met with the question, "What is your title?" The answer is, "My title is a lease." "A lease that can be forfeited?" "Yes." The final answer then follows, "We can not lend money on a lease that can be forfeited and our security thereby destroyed." What man is going to lend any considerable sum of money under such circumstances? If some person of a speculative nature wants to go in and take chances, he will offer his money at such a high rate of interest as to make development impossible.

Mr. President, the difficulty with the leasing system is that development on a large scale can not be made under it; it is impossible under it to finance big projects. That has been demonstrated by our experience in Alaska. We enacted a law providing for the leasing of coal lands in Alaska, but no development has followed there. There is less population in Alaska today than there was 15 years ago. When men interested in Alaskan coal projects have gone to New York, as I have been informed, and have presented the matter to bankers there, they have been told, "We will not lend any money on a lease, but we will lend the money if you have a title to your coal lands."

Under the leasing system, I repeat, it is impossible to finance a mining enterprise that requires a large development fund and if the miner or prospector can not finance the mining scheme no extensive development can take place. Mr. President, it was never intended that a foot of land outside of that which is retained for governmental purposes, should be held exempt from all taxation forever.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is aware of the fact, is he not, that oil lands on Indian reservations in the State of Oklahoma are being leased now?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Sometime in the past some leasing measure of a local nature has been proposed, and under the so-called senatorial courtesy of this body, the Senator in whose State the lands are located would be asked, "Is it satisfactory to you?" The reply would be, "Yes"; and the measure would go through. I understand that; but I can see that there is a distinction between the leasing of oil lands and the leasing of coal and mineral lands. In the case of oil lands, the development is not financed through loans as a rule. It does not require large capital to sink an oil well. People of a speculative nature may undertake it; but such a thing as taking a long-time mortgage on oil lands does not exist.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon another interruption there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator knows that about a year ago people were here by the hundreds, it might be said, anxious to have extended oil leases upon Indian lands in the State of Oklahoma; not only were they anxious to have the leases extended, but they paid double the amount of royalty which they had been paying in the past.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be.

Mr. GRONNA. Which shows that they have made a success of the business. So it is hardly fair for the Senator to say that the business of leasing land in Indian reservations has not been successful.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, I have not any doubt that where oil has been discovered in Oklahoma and wells have been sunk that leases can be obtained on adjacent property and some development can be obtained. The Senate passed a bill about six months ago providing for the leasing of oil lands; but when you come to the matter of leasing coal lands or copper lands or lands containing any of the base or precious metals, extensive development is not going to take place under a leasing system, because it is impossible to finance such projects. Why is it that in Alaska no coal leases have been made? Why is it that the Alaskan coal lands, which were said to be the richest in the world, have not been made use of at all? Because in order to develop a coal mine which can compete with the large coal producers it takes capital of a million or more to buy the modern machinery and equipment, and perhaps another million dollars or so to build a railroad to connect with a main line. This is always done by a mortgage loan, and no one will make such a loan upon a lease which can be forfeited on many grounds.

The Senator is a banker. Suppose a man should come to him with a lease and say, "I want to borrow some money on my lease." The Senator would look at his title and would ask, "Can the lease be forfeited?" If the answer were "Yes," the Senator would say, "I can not lend money on that title. It would not pay me to do so. The lease may be forfeited to-morrow; you may fail to pay your royalty, or some of your employees may combine and confederate for the purpose of cheating the landlord, and that will absolutely vitiate the lease."

For that reason the banker-capitalist would say: "No; I am not in the coal business, I am not in the copper business; I am in the lending business; and I want to lend this money at a reasonable rate of interest; but I can not risk any such forfeiture as might be declared."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to me. Let me say, for the Senator's information, that it developed in our hearings that the Standard Oil Co. had loaned one single corporation over $3,000,000 on oil leases in Oklahoma.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, with a large area and a great many thousand wells, especially where there is some company that has an idea of acquiring the wells for itself, it might be that it would do it as a speculative venture, and I can see that perhaps that would be the case; but when you go into the open market to borrow money upon a lease made by the Government, you can not find persons that will lend money for that purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota, in response to what he has just stated, that the Standard Oil Co. and other large companies of the United States, because of the great losses which they sustained in boring for oil, in trying to discover oil, have almost entirely abandoned that sort of enterprise. They have encouraged the poor man to go out and spend his money and find the oil, and then they have come along and put in the pipe line and have taken the oil; but the Standard Oil Co. and the other large corporations of the United States engaged in the refining business have almost entirely gone out of the business of discovering and mining for the oil, preferring that other people shall run the risks. Then, when the oil is discovered, they come in with their pipe line and control the price.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that his statement is exactly in accordance with the testimony before our committee.

Mr. KING. Then, if the Senator from Colorado will still pardon me, the announcement just made by my distinguished friend corroborates the position taken by the Senator from Colorado, that corporations, that bankers, that men who have money, do not want to loan it upon an uncertain title. Indeed, they ought not to. The Senator from North Dakota would be committing a wrong against the depositors of his bank if he should loan their money to me or to the Senator from Colorado or to anybody else engaged in mining where we did not have a good title, if our title was subject to forfeiture if we committed waste or if some of our employees neglected to timber the mine as they ought to timber it. The Senator will see that if he should loan money to us with such a precarious title as that he would subject himself to censure. Indeed, he might subject himself to prosecution.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not want to disturb the Senator from Colorado; but while it is true that in the particular instance to which I have referred the Standard Oil Co. had loaned money to this party, it is also true that in many instances very prominent banks had loaned money to men who were operating these oil leases.

Mr. President, I have not any doubt that individual signatures upon paper are acceptable at banks; I have not any doubt about that; and if a man is known to have wealth or a number of oil wells yielding a great flow of oil, banks would probably lend him money on 90-day paper. But in order to finance a great, big property, such as was cited by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], one that would involve the borrowing of from three to five million dollars, where is the individual that would think of lending money upon a title that might be forfeited? Why, he would be insane to do it. Men are not going to make such loans unless they are to get a part of the profits, and usually men who have these large sums do not go into these speculative enterprises.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this bill is predicated on a wrong theory, and I predict that you are not going to have any large development under it. You may have some oil development. You may have some placer production, because it takes very little capital to operate a placer mine on a limited scale. If there is a discovery of oil in some locality close to an Indian reserve and it is also found on the Indian reserve, you will find, perhaps, that some men with a venturesome spirit will sink wells there and perhaps make some development in that way; but as to financing any enterprise such as the Utah Copper Co., which has probably taken out of the earth from three to five hundred million dollars in copper, it is impossible. Governor Spry, of that State, in an examination before the Public Lands Committee about two years ago, made the following statement:

> We have the Utah Copper Co. out there in Salt Lake Valley, operating at Bingham Canyon, about 20 miles from the city. There is a company that went in there and solely because of confidence in that dirt spent $30,000,000 before they had $1 returned to them from profits. * * * If we had put that proposition—> up to the Utah Copper Co. they would have laughed at it.

Referring to the leasing system—

It is clear to my mind that under a leasing system it will be impossible to produce development on a large scale of the natural resources of our public lands.

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD NEVER BECOME A LANDLORD TO ITS CITIZENS.

Mr. President, the Government is not the best landlord. There is a natural conflict of interest between a tenant and his landlord, and therefore that relation should not exist between a Government and its citizens. The enforcement of forfeiture provisions creates dissatisfaction and discontent upon the part of citizens, when contentment and loyalty ought to exist. People are afraid of Government landlordism administered by a distant bureau. We know that public officials are human; that they are afraid of public criticism. If they waive forfeiture provisions they are apt to be severely censured for so doing. The opposite political party is likely to regard such acts as detrimental to the Government, as gifts of the Government's property, whereas in the case of a private landlord no criticism can be made for waiving or reducing royalties and for other causes of forfeiture, because the property is his own and the public is not interested in it. The public official knows that if he insists on the letter of the contract he will get no censure from the general public, but if he waives provisions of the lease he may be regarded as having sold out the interest of the Government. Under those circumstances he is almost compelled to be a harsh and severe landlord. Tenants know that if they have a dispute with the Government officials as to the terms of the lease they can not afford to fight the Government.

For these reasons the citizens generally would refuse to enter into leases with the Government as to undeveloped mines.

WRONG TO PREVENT STATE FROM TAXING LANDS SITUATE THEREIN.

Mr. President, it was never intended that the Indians should be located on lands the title to which should forever remain in the Indians or in the Government for the use of the Indians, because that necessarily would mean perpetual ownership in the Government, which carries along with it the law that no taxes can be levied thereon for State, county, or school purposes.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. Does he think it is right that land should be held by the Government in perpetuity, free and exempt from taxation for school purposes, for county purposes, and for State purposes? Does he not recognize that whenever you pass a leasing bill it means perpetual ownership in the Government, either as trustee for the Indians or for the United States itself, and is that fair?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator, has asked me a question, and I feel that I ought to answer it.

I agree with the Senator from Colorado that these vast areas of land which at times have been set aside perhaps have not been justified. If reservations have been set aside that were larger than they ought to have been, of course I do not justify that; but the Senator from Colorado knows as well as I do, and much better, that lands which have been actually set aside for the Indians will be deeded to the Indians whenever they become competent, and that when those lands will be assessed and will be taxed the same as the lands of other individuals. The Senator knows that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I know that that is the case after the agricultural land is allotted and goes to the Indians. That is all true; but the danger is that under this leasing system there will never be any sale of the mineral lands. Leases will be extended year after year, and there will never be any revenue from such lands for the State or county or schools. There never was an intention upon the part of the founders of our Government that any area contained within the limits of any State, unless it was for governmental purposes, should be permanently exempt from taxation. The power to tax is the power to destroy, and the power to exempt from taxation, is the power to take away the revenues necessary for the maintenance of State government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator believe that the opening up of a mine on an Indian reservation will reduce the revenues of either the State or the Federal Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It may depend upon the size of the reservation. Of course, where States have small amounts of reserved lands it may be that it will not seriously affect the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would it not, as a matter of fact, affect it? It would bring into the light of day the metals, many of them precious metals, which are now hidden in the depths of the ground and reduce them to possession and to use and make them the subject of taxation and consequently increase the revenues of the government of the States and of the Federal Government and the prosperity of the community.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, as a matter of fact, to a limited extent that is true; but it is not true to the extent necessary. These ores would be shipped and, of course, they would get into industries, and they would aid and assist commerce generally; but, so far as Arizona is concerned, in this case it would not get as much relatively as if the land were in private ownership, subject to taxation. A factory is some benefit to a community, but who would think of exempting from taxation forever the factory?

Mr. President, it can readily be seen, if an extreme case is taken, just what a hardship it is; and right here I want to direct attention to the fact that taxation is an enormous burden. I mean by that that in the course of 30 years the taxes upon property in a State, with reasonable interest on each yearly payment, ordinarily equal the value of the property taxed. In other words, every 30 years the State, county, and schools will lose the value of the property when it is exempt from taxation. Exemption from taxation will make the balance of the inhabitants of the State pay for maintaining the Government that share which the exempted lands would pay; and consequently it is doing a great wrong to the inhabitants of the States that have to make up this deficiency by increased taxation upon their own property.

Mr. President, down East perhaps exemption from taxation might not be so serious a matter; it may be that you have lower taxes here; but I know that out in my country to exempt a piece of property from taxation for 30 years means that the State is making a present of the value of that property to the person in whose favor it is exempted, not once only but every 30 years. That being the case, it can not be fair to the other inhabitants of the State who pay the school taxes, the State taxes, and the county taxes for the purpose of maintaining government over the very lands opened up under this bill under a leasing system.

Mr. President, it never was the intention of the framers of our Government that any land should be perpetually exempt from taxation for State, county, or school purposes. I think so because you can not maintain a republican form of government, which our Constitution requires, in a State without having power to tax; you can not maintain your schools, you can not maintain your county government, you can not maintain your State government; and consequently, it is wrong to pass any law here that will deprive a State perpetually of the taxes that are necessary to be raised in order to maintain a government in the State.

That being the case, I do not think it is right. To my mind, it is clearly an invasion of the rights of the State.

THE LEASING SYSTEM SHOULD NEVER BE APPLIED TO PRECIOUS-METAL MINES.

Mr. President, gold and silver have always been regarded as the most essential of all the metals because they have formed the basis upon which all moneys and credits of the world have been founded. They have universally been recognized as the life blood of commerce. All governments have at all times regarded the production or importation of the precious metals as indispensable to the advancement and prosperity of their peoples and have formed the greatest of all the factors in the advancement of the civilization of the world. The United States Government, recognizing this supreme importance, passed liberal laws to encourage the discovery and production of these metals.

Mr. President, this is the first time any serious attempt has been made in our country to extend the leasing system to gold and silver mines and thereby discourage the production of these metals. Tremendous development has been made under the present entry system by which title is obtained by the prospector as a reward for his discovery. The patent to the mine is issued upon the payment to the Government of $5 per acre and the performance of $500 worth of development work. Under this system in the United States more than $3,000,000,000 in these precious metals have been produced and poured into the channels of trade and industry. While the areas of the Indian reservations are small compared to the total public domain, yet the passage of this bill will be claimed as a precedent for extending the leasing system to all the mineral lands of our country. The so-called conservationists have for years advocated the extension of the leasing system to the precious-metal mines on the public domain. Now is the time of all others when the precious metals should be produced in large quantities, in order to maintain specie payments of the enormous paper currencies which have been issued by all nations since the commencement of the present war.

Mr. President, this bill is wrong, wrong in its conception, wrong in its principle. It, in my judgment, violates the rights of the States in curtailing their taxing power. It will become ineffective, because you can not finance these enterprises without borrowing money. Men will not lend money on a leasehold estate that might be forfeited the next day. It therefore will discourage production and if extended to the public domain will produce havoc in the Rocky Mountain region and general depression throughout the Union.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is not here. I trust that a page will notify him. However, I will say something to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] in the meantime. I have a high regard for his opinion concerning the development of the public domain. In fact, I agree with him in regard to the ineffectiveness of the leasing system by comparison with the ownership system. It will be my effort at all times, while acting in a legislative capacity, to attempt to prevent the extension of the leasing system to metalliferous ores on the public domain. I have time and time again stated my reasons for such position. I think when you do that you are going to cease to find metalliferous ores on the public domain. I do not believe that to-day we would be known in the West as a great mining country if it were not for the inducement held out to the prospector. I have a very high regard for mining engineers and mining geologists, yet I do not know that I ever heard that they discovered anything at all until after the prospector had discovered it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me state to the Senator that the geological authorities in the United States agreed unanimously that in the formation around Cripple Creek, Colo., it was impossible to find any gold ore, and it has produced over $300,000,000 in gold.

Mr. PITTMAN. The same is true with regard to a great many other great mining sections as that of which the Senator from Colorado has just spoken. Nearly every great metalliferous mine is found almost, you might say, by accident. It is hidden away in the mountain or in the desert. It is in places where the ordinary man will not go. It requires a peculiarly hopeful disposition. It requires a man who can isolate himself from society; who can go out and live alone for months and months in the wintertime and in the burning heat, who can endure every manner of deprivation that can be known to man; and the reason why he goes is because of the opportunity it gives to a poor man to make a great fortune. Take that incentive away and he will cease to find your gold and silver, lead, copper, and zinc mines. Oil will possibly be found by geologists, great coal fields may be found by geologists, but we are dealing now with metalliferous mines, and they will not be found by them.

I am willing to vote for this bill provided it is limited in its scope to Indian reservations, and the reason why I am forced to do that is because the Government controls those lands to-day for the benefit of the Indians. It controls the minerals in that land just as much as it controls the surface of the land, and it is going to maintain that control, and no matter what we may do or what we may say the minerals will lie undeveloped in those Indians reservations forever unless we continue to allow the Government to continue control of the development of such minerals.

Now, then, I desire to have the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. The Senator from Washington objects to my amendment on the ground that it is the attempted establishment of a new and radical policy with regard to our public domains. I can not agree with the Senator from Washington in that view. If it were, I would readily understand why with this attendance and at this late hour we might object to the consideration of it. But the amendment does not announce a new policy. I have simply introduced an amendment to this bill stating that hereafter the President of the United States shall not be allowed, by word of mouth or writen proclamation, to throw all the public lands in my State into an Indian reserve; and yet he now has that power, under the peculiar construction of the existing statutes. Of course such an act would only be done for one purpose, and that would be to perpetuate control over the minerals in public lands. Why? Because the Indian reserves in my State are to-day larger than are required for the Indians there. As a matter of fact, instead of increasing those reservations in past years they have been decreased, and that is true, I believe, with regard to nearly all the West. There is no necessity to increase them unless it be for the purpose of subverting this bill to a general leasing system with regard to gold and silver, lead and copper, throughout all the public domain of the country, and that is not the purpose of the framers of the bill or the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. Why is it that he is favorable to limiting this leasing proposition to Indian reservations? I understood him to say that it is because they are under the control of the Government. The thought has occurred to me, are not all the public lands equally under the control of the Government?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is a very natural thought, I must say. There was a time when we believed that the Government was synonymous with the people of the country. Development in recent years has caused us to realize our mistake. Everything on the public lands is in control of the people of the United States, but the Government has segregated from its control of the public lands for the benefit of all the people of a portion for the special use and benefit of the Indians. The Government recognizes that it is the special guardian of the Indians. It recognizes that it should retain the control of everything the Indian owns for the benefit of the Indian. That is the guardianship established by reason of the unfortunate ignorance of the Indian.

Now the Government wishes to extend that same guardianship to all the people of this country when the same ignorance and the cause do not exist. That is what I am fighting, and I must fight it at all times. At the present time the Commissioner of Indian Affairs could recommend to the President of the United States that 60,000,000 acres of public land in our State should be taken into an Indian reserve, and if that order were made and this bill became a law, every prospector would be driven out of Nevada and the hope of discovering new gold and silver mines would be forever ended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate the object which the Senator has in view, and it seems to me that there might be considerable merit in it if the Senator's amendment were confined to that object. It could be accomplished by a proviso "that this act shall not apply to any land hereafter withdrawn without a special enactment of Congress." It is not necessary to interfere with all kinds of public-land withdrawals, forest reserves, the modification of the boundaries of forest reserves and reserves for special purposes in order to avoid the application of the leasing principle to mineral lands on them. That may be taken care of by a proviso.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am certain now that the Senator from Washington misunderstands the exact language of the amendment. The amendment that I offered only limits the President in his power of withdrawal by Executive order to Indian reservations. It does not affect the power of the President to reserve any quantity of land for military purposes or for forest reserves or for any other public purpose except for Indian reservations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did misunderstand the amendment, if that is the language. My understanding of it was that it prohibited all, but if it relates only to Indian reservations, why, without submitting the matter to a committee and opportunity for consideration and for an examination of the policy upon which the present law is founded, should we change the existing law, when it is not necessary to do so in order to accomplish the object which the Senator from Nevada has in view? Why interfere with the Executive authority as it is established under existing law, in cases where it may be wise to do it, to set aside land for an Indian reserve in order to prevent the application of the leasing of mineral lands upon such reservations as may hereafter be established, when the object may be accomplished in the manner I suggested a moment ago by a proviso that this act, which is an act confined to the matter of leasing mineral lands, shall not apply to lands withdrawn hereafter? I am not advised, I am perfectly willing to confess, of the extent of the authority which the Executive now has, as the Senator from Nevada has just stated, to set aside portions of the public land for Indian reservations. I should like to be better advised about that before voting on it. I should like to have the question submitted to the committee. It ought to be submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we should have a report upon that question. I am perfectly willing to support the Senator from Nevada in his proposition that this law shall not apply to such lands as that.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Committee on Indian Affairs had not considered such a matter as this, there might be something in the suggestion the Senator has made, but the Committee on Indian Affairs has just adopted the policy with regard to these matters in entire accord with the amendment that the Senator from Nevada has offered. Not only has the committee recommended that policy to both Houses of Congress, but Congress has adopted it. The last Indian appropriation bill contained a provision to this effect, that hereafter no further public lands shall be reserved for the purpose of Indian reservations without an act of Congress. That was considered by the committees of both Houses, it passed both bodies, and I am simply extending to the State of Nevada what Congress has seen wise to extend to the States of New Mexico and Arizona; that is all. It is not a new policy.

Until 1909 I do not believe there was a Senator in this body who believed for one moment that the President of the United States had any control whatever over the public domain or any authority to withdraw it from use or occupation for any particular purpose without the authority of Congress.

Mr. Taft, then President of the United States, in 1909 did withdraw a great deal of land for reservations of various kinds, and at that time on the floor of this body nearly every Senator concurred in the opinion that he had no constitutional authority to do it. But the Supreme Court of the United States sustained that authority, and since that time what has happened? Since that time Congress has enacted a law that in a number of the Western States—in fact, in every Western State—where the request was made for the limitation, the President should have no authority to withdraw any land for forest reserves without an express act of Congress. That was following right after the Supreme Court decision. The Congress of the United States having established such policy, they went on further in the Indian appropriation bill and stated expressly that the President of the United States could withdraw no further lands in New Mexico and Arizona for Indian purposes without express act of Congress. We went further than that in the general leasing bill which is now in conference between the two Houses and which has passed both bodies. We find the proviso, section 34 of the Senate bill, provided:

> That hereafter no public lands of the United States containing minerals shall be withdrawn by Executive proclamation or otherwise, and no reserve of any character or description covering or including within its limits any mineral lands of the United States shall be created or established except by acts of Congress.

In other words, Congress time and time again since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States sustaining the right of the President to withdraw land without authority of Congress under existing laws has established as the policy of the Government that Congress shall have exclusive control over the public domain, and I am simply proposing here to reenact a policy that has been established time and time again.

I want to say this: I am anxious to have my State included in this bill, not because I believe that leasing is the proper policy to extend to metalliferous ores, but because in Indian reservations now existing it is the only way those minerals can ever be developed. It is the only way that Congress will ever authorize them to be developed, and I know it; and I want everything in the West developed that can be developed. I shall vote for this bill. I want Nevada in this bill; I want the minerals of the Indian reservations developed under this bill, but at the same time I want this very act to say that it is the policy of this Government, established by Congress, that no more of these lands shall be treated as the chattel of any department or bureau, and that they shall not be withdrawn for any purpose whatever with regard to which this bill deals as Indian reserves without an express act of Congress. If this amendment of mine carries, I then will ask, without objection, to include Nevada in the bill as other States have been included. If it is not agreed to, then I do not want Nevada in the bill and, as a Senator of the United States as well as a Senator from my State, I will do everything in my power to prevent the subjection of the public lands of the West to any such institution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question? I am not sure whether the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from Colorado stated a moment ago that there was no occasion, in his judgment, for the establishment of further Indian reservations. Does the Senator from Nevada apprehend that there are going to be established in Nevada by an Executive order any additional reservations, and is the question of any practical importance from that standpoint?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am perfectly confident that there will not be any additional reservations established; nor should they ever be established, in my opinion. On the contrary, they would be reduced, unless there be an incentive to increase the area of those reserved by reason of the power granted in this bill to lease minerals. I do not hesitate to say that, in my opinion, the departments have ambitions, and those ambitions very frequently lead them to stretch their powers beyond that which Congress intended that they should exercise. I would not want to trust to any department the power to extend any system over which they had control in my State without consideration by Congress, and I know they can do it under this bill. Of course, I can stay out of the bill on behalf of my State, I imagine. Still, I have considerable regard for those States which are included, particularly the State of Montana, whose Senators are now absent, and I must oppose the bill unless the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can not entertain the same fear expressed by the Senators who have spoken upon the policy of this bill. The bill does not change the policy of the Government, because there has been no policy which has allowed mining upon Indian reservations. This does establish a policy that there should be or may be mining on Indian reservations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. The policy which the Senator from Washington charges us with changing is the policy of prohibiting the President from withdrawing lands without an act of Congress.

Mr. FALL. I referred to the statement of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, I thought the Senator was referring to what the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] said.

Mr. FALL. No; I do not think I would have been correct in making that statement, in view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, which is pending.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is not here, and life is too short, anyhow, to undertake to go into a general discussion of the departure which this Government has made from the old policy of individual initiative. That has been going on for a great many years, and I think it is going along very much more rapidly at the present time. I am one of those who have always been rather insistent that the State lands and minerals in the States should be developed not only with reference to the best interests of the people of the United States but with particular reference to the population of the State in which the lands or minerals were situated.

I want to remove one fear that has been expressed by the Senator from Colorado, that we will not be able to handle these lands, by simply calling attention to the fact that all the mines which have been developed by American capital in Mexico have been developed under practically a system similar to that proposed here; in other words, there is a lease provision, a forfeiture provision, in every mining title that has been granted in Mexico to people of the United States; and, as shown by the record, there were $500,000,000 invested in Mexico upon just such titles.

Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is an amendment similar to that which was adopted on the Indian appropriation bill, as he has stated, when it passed this body a short time ago, in reference to Arizona and New Mexico. I do think myself that the power of the Executive should be limited in the matter of withdrawals of public land. The President of the United States, irrespective of his great ability, of his great learning, whoever he may be, can not attend to all matters individually. Some clerk in the Indian Bureau or the Interior Department draws up a proclamation of withdrawal; it goes through the routine, and is finally approved and sent to the President of the United States as a message from the Secretary of the Interior, with his recommendation. We know exactly how those things come about. In the ordinary routine of business the President of the United States affixes his signature to a proclamation withdrawing from entry, either mineral or otherwise, large portions of our domain. We have undertaken to stop it, and Congress has stopped it in the States of New Mexico and Arizona. I can not see any force in the arguments that the Senator's amendment should not be adopted. I shall vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRAMMELL in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have submitted an amendment, which I desire to call up, adding the word "California" to the list of States.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have offered an amendment to the amendment, to include the State of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "reservation," the amendment heretofore agreed to reads as follows:

Within the States of Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, or Washington.

Mr. PHELAN. Strike out "or" and add "California or Nevada."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered and the amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "Washington" and after the word "Wyoming" insert the words "California, Nevada," so as to read:

Within the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Montana, Wyoming, California, Nevada, or Washington.

Mr. ASHURST. I suggest that the Secretary be authorized to put the States alphabetically following the usual order in which States are named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have read again the amendment just adopted offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I have not seen it in writing and I do not understand distinctly just what its exact terms are.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada proposed to add a new section as section 4, to read as follows:

That hereafter no public land of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on the bill except that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] stated to me a few moments ago that he wishes to address the Senate on the measure. I dislike to call for a quorum. I will ask one of the pages to notify the Senator from Utah. I should like to have all the amendments read again. I will not ask for a reading of the bill, but that the amendments be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 10, after the word "reservation," to insert the words "within the States of Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, Wyoming, California, Nevada, or Washington."

On page 2, line 8, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offered the following amendment:

or such portions thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine.

On page 5, line 9, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] offered the following amendment:

Strike out the word "gross" and insert the word "net."

The amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 15. That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as I understand, section 8 now remains as it was reported from the committee, with the exception of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] inserting the word "net" instead of the word "gross," in line 9, on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that at one time the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] was adopted, to strike out the word "five" before the words "per centum," and to insert "one," but that the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to was reconsidered. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct, as the Chair is informed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill as amended be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill as passed is as follows:

A bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Washington, or Wyoming, heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

SEC. 2. That after the passage and approval of this act, unallotted lands, or such portion thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for the discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be located by such citizens in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the locators of all such mining claims, or their heirs, successors, or assigns, shall have a preference right to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease, under the terms and conditions of this act, within one year after the date of the location of any mining claim, and any such locator who shall fail to apply for a lease within one year from the date of location shall forfeit all rights to such mining claim: Provided further, That duplicate copies of the location notice shall be filed within 60 days with the superintendent in charge of the reservation on which the mining claim is located, and that application for a lease under this act may be filed with such superintendent for transmission through official channels to the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That lands containing springs, water holes, or other bodies of water needed or used by the Indians for watering live stock, irrigation, or water-power purposes shall not be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under this act.

SEC. 3. That leases under this act shall be for a period of 30 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

SEC. 4. That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 80 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

SEC. 6. That any successor in interest or assignee of any lease granted under this act, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

SEC. 7. That any lease granted under this act may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

SEC. 8. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the mineral deposits in the ground covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, a royalty which shall not be less than 5 per cent of the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the minerals from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease, at the rate of 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year thereafter; 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year.

SEC. 9. That in addition to the payment of the royalties and rentals as herein provided the lessee shall expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as an annual expenditure for labor or improvements is required to be made under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the lessee shall also agree to pay all damages occasioned by reason of his mining operations to the land or allotment of any Indian or to the crops or improvements thereon: And provided further, That no timber shall be cut upon the reservation by the lessee except after first obtaining a permit from the superintendent of the reservation and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of mining, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

SEC. 11. That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservation where the leased land is located, which moneys shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their education, support, and civilization.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the protection of the interests of the Indians and for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the right of the State or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee.

SEC. 13. That mining locations, under the terms of this act, may be made on unallotted lands within Indian reservations by Indians who have heretofore or may hereafter be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to lease such lands to such Indians in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit other Indians to make locations and obtain leases under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in regard to the working, developing, disposition, and selling of the products, and the disposition of the proceeds thereof of any such mine by such Indians.

SEC. 14. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes and Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma.

SEC. 15. That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or otherwise, for or as an Indian reservation, except by act of Congress.

INCREASE OF SALARIES OF BOILER INSPECTORS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10297, to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let the title of the bill be read before we vote on the motion to proceed to its consideration. I did not understand the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 10297) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will state for the information of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that the bill proposes to increase the compensation of the chief inspector, the assistant inspectors, and the district inspectors serving under the locomotive-inspection acts.

Mr. SMOOT. How much is it proposed to increase those salaries?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is proposed to increase the chief inspector's salary from $4,000 to $5,000, the assistant inspectors' salaries from $3,000 to $4,000, and the district inspectors' salaries from $1,800 to $3,000. It effects a total annual increase of $63,000.

The measure is very earnestly recommended by members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, particularly by Mr. McChord, and is also advocated by others connected with the railroad administration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Arkansas think that the bill proposes an exceedingly large increase in salary of the district inspectors—from $1,800 to $3,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I will state to the Senator from Utah that this matter was very carefully investigated by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Hearings were had and the subject was gone into very fully. Those hearings were reviewed by members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, and the conclusion was reached that these increases are necessary and proper. As I have stated, they are recommended by representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission and by some others connected with the administration of the railroads.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an increase of nearly 70 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true; but these salaries were first fixed by the act of 1911 providing for the inspection of boilers. Subsequently the act of 1915 was passed, requiring the inspection of tenders and locomotives as a whole. In addition to that, these men are now performing the service, under the Federal control of railroads, of keeping the locomotives in good condition, or of seeing that this is done. The service is a very important and a very arduous one, and has paid for itself thousands of times over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like also to state to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that when the original law was passed not only were these salaries low but the positions were considered of doubtful importance. It was a question as to whether or not they were going to be of any benefit to the operation of railroads in this country. It has now been demonstrated that there is nothing which has been done in the way of railroad regulations which has been more effective in conserving life and saving life than the passage of this particular measure. A salary of $3,000 a year under existing circumstances for these men, who are qualified as they must be to perform the service they are now performing, was not regarded by the committee as at all exorbitant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to corroborate what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who has charge of this bill, has said. I do not think there is a more important function in connection with all the railroad service than the one for the performance of which this very small increase of salary is asked.

As to the inspection of boilers, as has been indicated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], at first there was some doubt in the minds of the people about it; but when it got into operation that doubt disappeared. There is not a railroad in my home town, which happens to be a railroad center, and there is not a railroad in this country the efficiency of which has not been vastly improved by the service. Hundreds of lives have been saved by this expert boiler inspection, which is detached from the railroads themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911, as amended, be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

"Amend section 3 so as to provide that the salary of the chief inspector shall be $5,000 per year; the salary of each assistant inspector shall be $4,000 per year.

"Amend section 4 so as to provide that the salary of each district inspector shall be $3,000 per year."

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as amending, altering, or repealing any of the other provisions of said sections.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas, in view of the fact, as I understood from my colleague [Mr. SMOOT], that this increase of salary was an increase of 70 per cent, whether it is fair and wise and just to make it permanent? I can see that in the light of the increase in living expenses, and in view of the fact that there is a very material increase in compensation in nearly every department of labor, there should be some increase in this case in the compensation allowed; but we have proceeded in much of our legislation increasing salaries upon the theory that the compensation was only to be for the period of the war. Where we have allowed employees of the Government here increased compensation it has been fixed for one year. There may be instances where the increase of compensation has been continued, but with such a large increase it seems to me, at least with the information that I now possess, it would be unjust to fasten this large increase upon the country as a permanent thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has asked me whether or not this increase in compensation to these inspectors should be made permanent. In reply I say that it should; and I am prepared to demonstrate that the proposition is a fair and a just one, and that this subject has no intimate relationship to the war, and, for that matter, the so-called high cost of living is not the sole or even the principal justification for the proposed increases.

In the first place, the increase in the salaries provided is not exactly as stated by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. It is proposed by this bill to increase the salary of the chief inspector from $4,000 to $5,000; it is also proposed to increase the salaries of the assistant inspectors from $3,000 to $4,000 and to increase the salaries of the district inspectors from $1,800 to $3,000.

The senior Senator from Utah a few moments ago made the suggestion that the proposed increase of the salaries of the district inspectors—that is, the increase from $1,800 to $3,000—is a very large increase. That is true; but the salary, as stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], in the first instance was entirely too low; it was inadequate for the service performed and is totally inadequate for the service to be performed.

Now, I propose to show from the record something of what this service has been doing. Take the years 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915. In 1912 there were 74,234 locomotives inspected; in 1913 there were 90,346 inspected; in 1914 there were 92,716 inspected; and in 1915 there were 73,463 inspected. The number found defective for those respective years was, in round numbers, 48,000, 54,000, 49,000, and 32,000. The percentage found defective was, in round numbers, 65, 60, 52, and 44 for the same years. The number ordered out of service was 3,377, 4,676, 3,365, and 2,027 for the respective years mentioned.

Now, if you will take the results actually accomplished, you will find that this service has resulted in a very gratifying reduction as to the number of accidents, the number of persons injured, and the number of persons killed. For instance, in 1912 the number of persons killed was 22, the number injured 310; in 1913 the number killed was 12, the number injured was 268; in 1914 the number killed was 8, the number injured 187; and in 1915 the number killed was only 5, while the number injured was 150. It will be found that that ratio holds good as to all classes of employees.

This service has resulted in a reduction of the number of accidents occurring on the railroads of the United States by more than one-half; in a reduction of the number of persons killed to approximately one-fourth; and in the number of persons injured to about one-half compared with the number killed and injured prior to the establishment of the inspection. In addition to the service which these inspectors are now required to perform under the original act of 1911, which fixed their salaries, and under the act of 1915, which more than doubled the amount of work to be done, they are now keeping the locomotives in good condition. The chief inspector is performing that service as a sort of war obligation, and the inspectors are loyally cooperating with him in this work. As a matter of fact, the total number of inspectors in the service is insufficient to do the work required. They are working an excessive number of hours, and under a very great strain.

The increased work which has been put upon the railroad companies incident to the war makes it of imperative necessity that this inspection service be improved in every important particular; and I respectfully submit, in view of the fact that these inspectors can secure in private employment higher compensation than is carried by this bill, if they choose to quit the Government service, the salary of $3,000 a year for the district inspectors is reasonable, certainly not excessive. The other salaries are of a like character as to reasonableness. They are all fair and just.

The total increase which this bill, if passed, will impose upon the Treasury of the United States is $63,000 a year, a comparatively insignificant sum. It is true that if it is excessive in any particular the increase ought not to be granted; but, in my judgment, based upon the investigations of those who are experienced in the subject of the inspection of locomotives, the salaries are very reasonable and in every sense just.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator what is the average salary?

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, there are three classes of salaries provided for in the bill. The district inspectors now receive $1,800, which is totally inadequate. This bill proposes to increase their salaries to $3,000 a year. It is of that increase, as I understand, that some complaint has been made by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and perhaps also by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. The other increases, namely, those affecting the assistant inspectors, are from $3,000 to $4,000, and the increase in the salary of the chief inspector, as contemplated by this bill, is from $4,000 to $5,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think, if the Senator will permit me, considering the character of the work to be done and the responsibility imposed upon these men, together with the high cost of living, that the salaries provided in the bill are at all excessive. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and the Government of the United States can not afford to accept the services of faithful, honest, patriotic men without giving to those men ample and just compensation. To do this work properly the highest mechanical skill and a lofty sense of duty and obligation to the public is necessary. I have the same views on the subject of the Government's obligation to these men that I have regarding the steamboat-boiler inspectors. Not only is in their keeping valuable physical properties, but the protection of human life is also involved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have called attention to the increase in the salaries of these officials, because when I compared them with the salaries paid other officers of the Government, they seemed exceedingly high. I know, of course, that the bill will pass; I know that it would be idle to ask that there be a change made in the bill, nor would I ask that there be a change if the rates of compensation named in the bill are just. We are proposing to pay the chief inspector, Mr. President, if this bill passes, $5,000 a year. That is the same amount that is paid the Assistant Treasurers of the United States, the same that is paid to the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to other officials some of them the most efficient executive officers of the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But does the Senator think——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator think that the duties and functions performed by either of the men who fill the offices to which he has just referred are more important and require a higher degree of intelligence and prudence than the duties performed by the chief inspector?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say frankly to the Senator that I do. I think that the men holding the positions to which I have referred require a great deal more intelligence to direct the affairs of those great departments of the Government than is required for the chief inspector of boilers.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They are simply performing routine duties prescribed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator makes that statement, but I know that there are heads of departments who direct a great many matters of importance to the Government and to the people, and who work more hours than the boiler inspectors are called upon to work. I know that they are at their offices early and late; and I know that the responsibility upon them is great. I do not say that the responsibility of a boiler inspector is not of great importance, and I know that the work to which reference has been made ought to be attended to, and ought to be attended to properly, but the figures show that for the last seven years it has been attended to properly and at the salaries which have been paid in the past.

What I should like to have done, Mr. President, is this: If there is to be a general increase in salaries made by the Government, the increase ought to be equalized as nearly as possible. We should not pick out a few men here and a few men there, and then come to the Senate and say, "These increases do not amount to very much, not to exceed $63,000." Why, Mr. President, if we increase the salaries of the poor laborer who is getting $400 a year and all other Government employees 70 per cent, as in the case of some of these inspectors we would have to impose additional taxes to meet that expense of some $300,000,000.

I know that the salaries of nearly all of the employees of the Government ought to be increased. It is true that there has been a partial agreement reached, I will say, by the conferees on the legislative appropriation bill providing that there shall be an increase of $120 a year in all salaries ranging from $400 up to and including salaries of $2,500, and where a salary is below $400, as in the case of charwomen who work only a few hours each day, the increase will be 30 per cent.

We have a bill on the calendar now to increase the compensation of printers and compositors and other employees of the Printing Office who are provided for by statute. We know that their salaries ought to be increased, and the Committee on Printing has reported an increase, which, in round numbers, will amount to 30 per cent. That was considered a rather large increase but was given partially to meet the demand which has been created in this time of war for printers in the District of Columbia and other parts of the country. In that bill, however, it is provided that the increase shall apply only during the war and six months thereafter. I say to the Senator from Arkansas that if we pass this bill and these increases are made the present salaries will never be restored.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will state frankly to the Senator from Utah that, in my opinion, this measure is designed as permanent legislation. The salaries heretofore paid have been inadequate, and the importance of the service justifies this increase, without regard to temporary or emergent conditions. I stated that frankly.

Mr. SMOOT. I heard the Senator make that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not know whether or not the Senator understood me.

Mr. SMOOT. I heard the Senator make that statement. Let me now in passing call attention to what is going to happen after this war is over——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, as a member of the Committee on Printing, what particular reason the Senator has for declining to favor an increase up to 75 cents, when it has been recommended by the Public Printer and by other officials of the Government? Will the Senator be kind enough to let me know his reason?

Mr. SMOOT. I will be brief in answering the question; but when the bill providing the increases of compensation for employees of the Printing Office is before the Senate I will discuss the question more fully.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg the Senator's pardon, I thought that was the bill under discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have merely referred to it in connection with the increases proposed by the pending measure for boiler inspectors.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I will not press the Senator at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say this much to the Senator in answer to his question: The bill as reported to the Senate provides for 65 cents an hour. The printers to-day are getting 55 cents an hour. That is an increase of virtually 20 per cent. Then on top of that increase of 20 per cent we are going to give them $120 a year additional, which virtually is another increase of 5 cents an hour, or of 10 per cent, which makes 30 per cent; and then, Mr. President, on top of that, all the printers in the printing office receive a leave of absence of 30 days a year. No other establishment outside of the Government grants such leave, and that would amount to about 10 per cent more, making a total in excess of what they would receive outside.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a little later, when that bill comes up, I shall be glad to discuss the question.

Mr. SMOOT. When that bill comes up I will say to the Senator we will go into the details and tell the Senate exactly what it will cost, what is being paid outside, why the committee submitted the report it did, and why the Senate Committee on Printing could not report the bill with a recommendation for an increase to 75 cents straight.

Mr. President, as I was about to say, I wanted simply to call the attention of the Senate to what I think is going to happen after this war is over. We are aware, of course, of the present high cost of living, and we know that men can go anywhere in the United States and secure employment almost at the wage they ask; it is not a question of how much the employer will give, but it is a question of how much the employee demands. When the war ceases the millions of men who are now engaged in war activities will have to seek employment, for the concerns which are now crowded with war work, engaged in the manufacture of war materials, will have to turn to the manufacture of other articles, as the market for war supplies will cease almost as soon as the war ends.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator, as I understand him, is willing to raise the salaries at this time sufficient to meet the increased cost of living?

Mr. SMOOT. I am.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Would the Senator be in favor, under the new dispensation which he has just pictured——

Mr. SMOOT. No; I have not had time to do that as yet.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But the Senator, then, would be in favor, when conditions change, to go back to a reasonable salary?

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly my position.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, if the Senator is willing to do that, and he desires to do it, does not the able Senator think it a fair presumption to indulge that other Senators and Members of the House will be guided by the same lofty motives and ideals which prompt the Senator from Utah in the performance of his duty now?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has only the past to judge by. I will say now to the Senator from Mississippi that during the 16 years that I have been a Member of this body I have never seen a salary fixed by statute decreased.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator ever attempted to decrease a salary raised above what he thought proper or an adequate salary? In other words, has the Senator ever undertaken to correct a wrong of that character after time and trial have demonstrated the error?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. Older Senators than I am have advised me that their experience has been that salaries have never been decreased.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, I wish to say to the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. And there is no earthly need of trying it, because the Senator knows that they would not be decreased, particularly in the case of the salary of an employee who belonged to an organization.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say that, following the Senator's patriotic lead, I think he can safely indulge the presumption that all Senators are going to do the right thing under all circumstances, and when salaries are too high they are going to reduce them, as they will raise them and ought to raise them when the salaries are too low.

Mr. SMOOT. If the time ever comes when there is a statutory salary decreased I think I will have heart failure. I will say now to the Senator that he can not get it decreased, nor can any other Senator get it decreased, judging from the past.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to say to the Senator that I may not be able to accomplish it; the Senator may be right in his judgment of his fellow Senators; but I am not going to say that Senators will not do the right thing until we try them out and they prove themselves recreant. When I think a certain thing is right I always indulge the presumption that my fellow citizen is going to do that which I think ought to be done. I think that a safe rule to live by.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will remain in the Senate long enough, and when times are normal again, and when men are seeking employment, as they will be doing, I hope the Senator will undertake to see that a salary fixed by statute is decreased, but I promise him now that he will not be successful. That is why I think salaries that are raised as some salaries have been proposed to be raised should be fixed so as to apply only during the time of war, and then that the salary of men whose salary has been greatly increased during the time of war will automatically revert to the regular salary, or I might say the normal salary, and they will be paid the same salary that they were paid before the present conditions were upon us.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to say to the Senator that I agree absolutely to that proposition. I am interested in doing justice, simple and exact justice, to all. If I had my way about it, I would limit all the laws that are being enacted at this time to the war period. The vote that I cast to-day will in no way influence the vote that I shall cast to-morrow. I want to do right at this time. If conditions shall change to-morrow, I shall vote for laws that will insure absolute justice. To limit this provision to the length of the war would be a prudent and provident provision. All I desire is that these men shall be properly paid for their labor and service to the public.

Mr. SMOOT. And I think it ought to be the practice.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What I desire to say and maintain is that Congress has no right to demand from any class of citizens service without giving them adequate remuneration.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say further that the question of what a man is doing and the character of work he is performing should be considered. It is my judgment that one of the most important offices or functions performed by anybody in all the industrial economy of this country is that of the locomotive engineer. No man is fit to be an engineer who is not cool, conscientious, and capable and willing to consecrate his very life to the service of the public in his important place. And they all usually do that.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. And I think the work that these men in this bill are doing is quite as important and imposes quite as much responsibility, greater, in fact, than the soft-handed gentleman in an office in the Treasury Department, who is receiving a salary equal to that of a chief inspector.

Mr. SMOOT. I need not stop at the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, nor the Commissioner of the General Land Office, nor the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, nor the Commissioner of Pensions, and so forth. I need not have stopped there. I could have gone farther down the list and taken men receiving $4,000 and holding most important places in the State Department, in the Interior Department, and in each and every department of our Government. In fact, some of those men who are getting $3,500 and $4,000 virtually do the work of the departments, and a great deal of the responsibilities rests upon their shoulders.

I was interrupted at a time when I was undertaking to say what I thought would happen not only in this country but in all the world after the close of this war. There will be a changed condition, Mr. President, and there will be thousands and millions of men seeking employment, and I should like to see our Government pass laws to-day to take care of the situation that we all know will come. What are we providing by way of legislation that will take care of the great industries and businesses of this country at the close of the war? We have not even a commission to examine into what changes will take place in the reconstruction. England has, France has, Italy has, Germany has. They are studying the future from every standpoint. The war will not have closed 30 days before the English ships and the German ships and the French ships will be plowing the seas for materials for the purposes of manufacturing goods with a view of controlling the commerce of the world, or as much of it as possible. A program is being mapped out for the immediate conversion of plants manufacturing munitions of war to factories to manufacture goods required in time of peace. We are doing nothing, and if something is not done soon along the line of preparation, just as surely as we live there will be millions of men walking the streets in this country without employment, and it will be then that such wages as are provided here will seem large, and there will be dissatisfaction among the other employees of the Government, and particularly among employees doing the same class of work in the States and in the large cities of this country, who will not be compelled to pay such salaries.

What I should like to see done is to pass this bill as it is now and limit it to the duration of the war; or, if the Senator would prefer, I would even go so far as to say six months after the close of the war, and then let the salaries go back to the salaries now provided by law, and if they are too low, consider them at that time and advance the wage according to the conditions then existing in this country. I believe that that is the proper way to proceed, and I can not see why the Senator from Arkansas, having the bill in charge, will not agree to such a proposition.

That is all I care to say about the matter now, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the last observation of the Senator from Utah respecting our negligence in failing to look forward to the time after the war shall have ceased ought to challenge the attention of every thoughtful man.

A few days ago I introduced a resolution which declared, as the sense of the Senate, that there ought to be an agreement made between ourselves and our allies now, which, in effect, would be that at the end of the war, no matter when that may be, the shipping of all the allies shall be at the disposal of the various countries for the return of the troops and war material in Europe. Otherwise, if we have four or five million men in Europe, and a corresponding amount of war material, during the two or three or four years that will be required for our shipping—if we have no aid from our allies in that respect—to return our troops and our materials to our own shores, the other countries of the world will be using their shipping for the purpose of expanding and enlarging their international commerce. I can not understand why the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which the resolution was referred, does not make some report upon it, because I regard it as of infinite importance.

So much I say in approval of the suggestions of the Senator from Utah; but with regard to the limitation upon this bill I must emphatically dissent, and I think the moment I point out the situation, if it has not already been done, he will agree with me.

I had the honor to introduce the bill which established the Bureau of Inspection of Locomotive Boilers. It was very bitterly contested by the railroad companies as being unnecessary, but finally it was adopted, and the salaries of the chief and his assistants and the inspectors were fixed in the bill. It must be remembered that when the bill was originally passed the work sought to be done related only to the inspection of the boiler itself. It did not cover the inspection of the entire machine known as a locomotive. The work, while exceedingly valuable, was not at all commensurate with the work which is now being done. I thought the salaries then fixed—and those were normal times—were too low for the men who must necessarily be employed in the service.

The experience that we had under the act as it was originally passed was a very fortunate and happy one. A year or two went by, and the decrease in the number of accidents was so marked and the value of the inspection so obvious that the railway companies themselves frankly and candidly admitted their mistake, and were the loudest in their expressions of appreciation and commendation of the work that had been performed.

Guided by that experience I introduced a bill to enlarge the work of the bureau so that the inspectors would be authorized and required to inspect and pass upon the entire locomotive, for there seemed to be no very good reason for limiting the governmental supervision to the boiler itself. The bill passed, and for the last two and a half years the bureau has had supervision and control over the entire motive power of the railroads of the United States; and I think I can say without any exaggeration that the country has found the work of the bureau with regard to the locomotive just as important and just as valuable as the work it originally did with regard to the boiler. I wanted very much at that time to advance the salaries of the chief of the bureau and his two assistants and the various inspectors. It was a distinct wrong that we failed at that time to do it, and those were normal times, too. The act was amended in the respect I have mentioned long before we entered the war.

Mr. President, there is hardly a more important place in the Government than that of the chief of the bureau whose employees pass upon the efficiency and the safety of the motive power of the United States so far as it relates to railroads; and I think the salary provided in this bill is low enough. I really think it is too low, even in the times of peace; and in granting this increase we are not taking into consideration at all the increase in the cost of living brought about by the existence of the war. I realize that we are raising some salaries, that some wages are being increased, because of the abnormal conditions brought about by the war; but that is not true, I beg the Senator from Utah to believe, with regard to the compensation of the officers who are provided for in this bill, and I very earnestly hope that it will receive the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 130, Order of Business 409.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 130) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harding	Lewis	Sheppard
Borah	Hardwick	McLean	Sherman
Brandegee	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Md.
Calder	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Smoot

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on official business.

I wish also to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only 47 Senators having responded to the roll call, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. GRONNA, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WOLCOTT answered to their names when called.

Mr. GALLINGER entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We invoke Thy blessing, Almighty God our Father, upon the Members of this House, that in all their deliberations they may be worthy of the honor and dignity bestowed upon them by an intelligent and patriotic people, whose interests, whose rights, whose honor, they are here to maintain, uphold, and further, in the name of Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RAILWAY MAIL PAY.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Postmaster General, Mr. Burleson, upon the subject of railway mail pay, in which some criticism was passed upon remarks of mine made the previous Thursday. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and extracts are as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 15, 1918, p. 7844.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM A. AYRES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. AYRES: Referring to your inquiry as to the economy effected in the transportation of the mails through the establishment of the space basis of pay, which economy has been brought into question by Representative STEENERSON in his speech on June 13, I beg to advise as follows:

Representative STEENERSON was wrong in saying that "the last report of the Postmaster General shows that they paid $3,250,000 more than they would have paid under the weight plan." The annual report referred to makes no such statement. The report shows what the Post Office Department has always contended, that if the service exacted of the railroads under the weight basis were paid for under the space basis the cost of the service would be greater than under the weight basis, but that under the space basis of pay economies in loading and dispatching could be made that would enable the department to save to the public several millions of dollars in the cost of transporting the mails.

The space basis went into effect at midnight of October 31, 1916. At that instant not the actual pay but the annual rate of pay to the railroads increased $3,250,000. However, the Post Office Department immediately began its readjustment of the transportation service by a system of intensive loading and of more rational dispatching of the mail, with the result that the annual rate of pay to the railroads quickly and steadily declined.

The Post Office Department's expectation of saving $7,000,000, referred to by Representative STEENERSON, is fully justified, as will be seen from the following reports on authorized annual rate of pay to the railroads at various dates:

Oct. 31, 1916, on weight basis	$62,242,000
Nov. 1, 1916, weight and space combined	65,492,000
July 1, 1917, weight and space combined	58,518,000
Sept. 30, 1917, weight and space combined	56,509,000
Dec. 31, 1917, weight and space combined	55,046,000
Mar. 31, 1918, weight and space combined	53,890,000

If there is still doubt in the mind of anyone as to whether the Post Office Department has reduced the cost of carrying the mails on railway lines, let him ask the railroads.

Sincerely, yours,
A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 13, 1918, p. 7743.]

Mr. STEENERSON. The Postmaster General has been fertile in postal reforms. You will remember that he proposed and succeeded in passing the space plan. The last report of the Post Office Department shows that they paid $3,250,000 more than they would have paid under the weight plan, but they say that they are going to save $7,000,000 in the future when they get the thing established. That is what they said about this automobile service. They are going to save something, but up to date there has been an increase.

[From the Report of the Post Office Department, 1917, pp. 13–14.]

The cost of the entire railroad transportation service under the weight basis was at the annual rate of $62,242,000. The cost of the same service under the space basis was at the annual rate of $65,492,060, an increase of $3,250,000 over the weight rate. Under the space basis of pay, however, it was possible to increase or decrease the amount of transportation to be purchased to the actual needs of the service, with the result that at the close of June 30, 1917, the regular authorized service was at the annual rate of $58,518,478.

An analysis of the table hereto appended discloses that the railroads have been relieved of service amounting to 31,906,680.17 60-foot car-miles, while the reduction in compensation has been $7,270,386.45 per annum. This is a reduction of service required of the railroads of 11.69 per cent, while the reduction in compensation has been at the rate of 11.28 per cent.

Mr. STEENERSON. The above is what the RECORD shows that I said, but I spoke very rapidly, and did not revise my remarks. Manifestly no one reading the part of the report referred to could intend to say that. The sentence should read: "The last report of the Post Office Department shows that for the same amount of transportation they would have paid $3,250,000 more than it would have cost under the weight plan, but they say they are going to save $7,000,000 in the future when they get the thing established." It is clear from the context that the argument I was making was that the promised economy was not yet an accomplished fact, and that, I submit, will be perfectly plain for the following reasons:

First. There has been a reduction of service, and not a saving in the cost of it. If the alleged economy by the space plan has been accomplished at the expense of delay in the transmission of mail, it is not economy at all, but a waste. There has been universal complaint of delay of first-class mail since the inauguration of the space plan. The reduction in the force of the railway mail clerks engaged in the distribution of mail en route, together with the reduction of the number of foot car-miles referred to, has undoubtedly caused this deterioration in the mail service. I voted for the space plan largely on the faith that the so-called economy in loading would not be applied so as to delay first-class mail. Evidently first-class mail has been delayed, resulting in loss to the public. A saving in expense where it is overbalanced by a deterioration in the service is no saving at all.

Second. My contention that there has been no saving yet by the space plan was correct, because the space plan has never been finally sanctioned. The Postmaster General's letter says that the space plan went into effect on October 1, 1916, but it omits to say that it only went into effect as an experiment. It overlooks the fact that the question of whether or not the space plan as applied to railway mail pay is valid, reasonable, and just is pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission and has not yet been argued. It overlooks the fact that under the law the accounts of the railroads are now kept under both the space and weight bases, and that in the event that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall decide against the space plan, then the alleged reduction in railway mail pay will all have to be paid over to the railroads.

The railroads contend that the space plan of railway mail pay is an innovation and unjust; that the Government itself charges postage according to weight, by the ounce and the pound; that all other freight carried on the railroads is paid for by weight; and that to take a car that ordinarily carries 5,000 or 6,000 pounds and load it with 15,000 to 20,000 pounds of mail and allow the same pay is an infringement of their rights. In view of the increase of 25 per cent in freight rates and 33 per cent in passenger rates on account of the increased cost of operation of the roads, it can hardly be contended that the question of the adoption of the space plan is free from doubt. At any rate, it has not yet been upheld, and until it is upheld it is premature to contend that it has accomplished a saving.

The following summary of the report by the committee on postal affairs of the Commerce Association of New York was unanimously approved by that association, and has been submitted to the committees of Congress and to the President and the Postmaster General:

INQUIRY CONCERNING MAIL DELAYS.

NEW YORK, May 13, 1918.

To the Board of Directors,
The Merchants' Association of New York:

Following many complaints of mail delays, your committee on postal affairs, in accordance with your instructions, caused to be made a study of mail movement throughout the United States to learn the prevalence and extent of such delays and their causes.

The inquiry was in active progress during a period of five months. The methods were as follows:

1. Business organizations throughout the entire country were asked to state their experience as to mail delays.

2. Ten thousand test letters with return envelopes were mailed in two series to approximately 800 correspondents scattered in every part of the United States. In the first test one letter and in the second test two letters at different hours were mailed to each correspondent daily for 12 consecutive days, exclusive of Sundays and holidays. The test letters dispatched and received aggregated approximately 20,000.

3. Through the American Bankers' Association were obtained the envelopes covering the daily mail, for a period of 10 days, of banks in 23 banking centers.

4. An analysis was made of the postal-train records of 26 railroads, to develop the causes and the extent of delays to the principal postal trains and what part, if any, of such delays resulted from conditions imposed by the Post Office Department upon the railroads.

5. An analysis of official post-office reports was made to learn the extent of the reductions in postal-car service made by order of the Post Office Department.

6. Inquiry was made on the following points:

Whether important mails are regularly dispatched from their points of origin upon the trains by which they should move.

Whether sufficient space is provided upon postal trains promptly to move all the mail awaiting transportation.

Whether the mail received at and forwarded through the postal terminal stations is promptly assorted, distributed, and forwarded.

To what extent, if any, mail moving by railway postal cars, upon which it should be assorted in transit, is not so assorted, thereby causing it to be carried by its destination or causing it to be delayed in a terminal station for assorting pending its further progress.

These various studies and analyses show the following conditions of fact:

I. Material, and in many cases serious, delays in the movement of mail are general throughout the United States.

II. Railway post-office car service has been wholly abolished or greatly curtailed upon 1,612 trains out of a total of 6,636 trains previously having such service, the reduction affecting 25.32 per cent of such postal trains. Railway post-office car service was formerly operated over about 217,462 miles of line. It has been wholly abolished or greatly curtailed over about 96,178 miles of line. Thus about 44.23 per cent of the entire line mileage has been wholly or partly deprived of the advantages of railway post-office car service; and the mails carried over these lines, formerly assorted in transit, and progressed through terminal points without detention, are now held at such terminal points for assorting.

III. Serious delays in the assorting and forwarding of mails occur in terminal stations.

IV. Owing to insufficient postal-car space or insufficient time for loading, large quantities of mail are frequently left on the platforms of principal stations of important mail routes from New York. In some cases several trains pass before such left-over mail can be forwarded.

V. The movement of important postal trains has been seriously delayed by the conditions imposed by the Post Office Department as to the loading and unloading of mail at important stations. In the case of one of the heaviest mail routes the average train delay due to mails, during a period of 30 days, was 50.86 per cent of the total train delays. For 462 trains operating on 26 lines during the same period the general average of delay due to mails was 13.89 per cent.

The general condition is that the postal service at the present time is very materially below the standards of speed and regularity which prevailed prior to 1916, in which year the present conditions of inefficiency first began to prevail.

In the following pages the prevalence and extent of the delays are stated in detail; and some of the causes which have produced the conditions are shown.

CHRISTMAS MAIL TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter written by the Second Assistant Postmaster General with reference to the Christmas mail in France.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Editor of the Post: In special correspondence by Will G. MacRae, from France, the statement is made that Christmas mail for soldiers was being delivered as late as May 21. Mr. MacRae confuses the Christmas freight and express boxes handled by the Army with the Christmas mail which went by parcel post, comprising 94 carloads, being packages of 7 pounds or less in weight.

The last of 90 of those carloads were delivered not later than the morning of December 25 to the mail orderlies of the several units in the cities and near the trenches. Four carloads which were on a transport which had been delayed by a storm were delivered to the mail orderlies on December 27.

The Christmas boxes, of which there was a record of 30,000 or 40,000 still undelivered during March, were not mail, but were boxes heavier than 7 pounds in weight, shipped on transports by the Army from the port of embarkation. They were in no sense United States mail, but were freight sent over by the Quartermaster Department of the Army.

OTTO PRAEGER.

BRIDGES ACROSS BIG SANDY RIVER, VA.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4127) to authorize the W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., a corporation, to construct bridges across the branches and tributaries of the Big Sandy River and their tributaries, in the counties of Buchanan and Dickenson, in the State of Virginia, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4127, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., a corporation, created, organized, and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia (and duly qualified to do business in the State of Virginia), its successors and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate bridges, with single or double tracks and approaches thereto, over and across the branches and tributaries of the Big Sandy River and their tributaries, in the counties of Buchanan and Dickenson, in the State of Virginia, at such points, as it may now or hereafter be desired for the passage of railroad, tramroad, or logging-road engines, cars, and trains, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "with single or double tracks."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "such."

Page 2, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the words "as it may now or hereafter be desired for the passage of railroad, tramroad, or logging road engines, cars, and trains," and insert in lieu thereof the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House as to the number of bridges it is contemplated to be constructed over the various streams referred to in the bill under consideration?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think there are two or three over this river and two or three over its tributaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that the committee has amended the bill so as to conform to the usual phraseology, inserting the words "suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on a third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONTAGUE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, was granted two days' leave of absence on account of illness. He has been compelled to go to the hospital, and I ask unanimous consent that he be granted indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, may be granted indefinite leave of absence on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLERK TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON WATER POWER.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 355 (H. Rept. No. 664).

Resolved, That the Special Committee on Water Power be allowed a clerk at the rate of $2,500 per year, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution as to whether it is privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman make his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have some explanation of the resolution.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, when the special Committee on Water Power was created, ordinarily it would have been entitled to a committee clerk and an assistant clerk, but the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for a number of years has had consideration of water-power bills on navigable streams. Mr. Davis, who was formerly the clerk of that committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. Adamson, therefore, was the man most familiar with water-power legislation so far as navigable streams are concerned that I knew of anywhere. Instead of asking the House to authorize the appointment of a clerk, Mr. Davis agreed to act as the clerk of the committee without compensation for the time being, and he has been acting as its clerk, and the only clerk it has had, ever since the committee was appointed.

The committee is about ready to report the most comprehensive and important water-power bill that has ever been reported to the House, embracing jurisdiction as to the public lands held in the forest reserves, as to the public lands not so held, and touching all navigable rivers of the United States. Mr. Davis has been the only clerk, has been present during all the hearings and the executive sessions of the committee, therefore he is most familiar with the work and the most competent man to perform further services of clerk that can possibly be obtained; he is almost a necessity, because as soon as the bill passes the House it has got to go into conference, because it will be a Senate bill amended. I do not know how long it will take it to get through, but under the resolution this special committee has jurisdiction of and the consideration of all water-power bills from now until the end of this Congress, which is the 4th of next March. Other such bills are pending before this committee seeking consideration. Now, the time has arrived at which Mr. Davis can not further serve the committee without compensation, and it would be most unjust and unreasonable to ask him to do so. Now, the contingent fund has been saved the expenditure of a clerk for all this time, and I think it is nothing but just that this resolution should pass. It is an absolute necessity so far as the committee is concerned, and it is nothing but just that I be permitted to designate Mr. Davis clerk of the committee, and he should be compensated for such further services as he may render from this time on.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume it is the purpose merely to continue this official on the pay roll of the Government during the present Congress?

Mr. SIMS. To put him on; he is not on now.

Mr. STAFFORD. And after he is placed on to continue him during the present Congress?

Mr. SIMS. Only for this Congress, because the life of the special committee itself ceases with this Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw——

Mr. COX. Is that during this session?

Mr. SIMS. No; during this Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that statement, I withdraw any reservation of the point of order and any objection to the measure.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11692) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10297. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

H. R. 11284. An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The Senate receded from its amendments Nos. 1 and 2.

The House receded from amendments Nos. 3 to 97, inclusive, except Nos. 6, 93, and 94. Amendments 3 to 97 provide for the use of a colon at the end of the various items instead of a period. The Senate receded from its amendment No. 6, which provided for an increase in the pay of cadets from $600 to $780 per annum.

The House receded on No. 93. This takes care of the case of Mr. John T. Godfrey, order and purchasing clerk in the Quartermaster's office, who has been in the military service over 50 years.

The Senate receded on Nos. 94, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, and 110. On No. 102 the House receded. On No. 111 the House receded with an amendment. On No. 112 the House receded with an amendment. On No. 113 the House receded with an amendment. The House receded on amendments Nos. 114 and 115.

The House receded on amendments Nos. 116, 117, and 118, authorizing additional construction to the amount of $120,000.

The House receded on Nos. 119 and 120. The Senate receded on Nos. 121 and 123. On No. 122 the House receded with an amendment.

The Senate receded from its amendment No. 124, providing that all uniforms, etc., required for any officer of the military or naval forces of the United States should be furnished and issued to such officers by the Government at cost price.

On No. 125 the House receded with an amendment. On No. 126 the House receded with an amendment.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. The statement made by the House conferees does not convey any information to the House. I have no doubt the gentleman is familiar with what the House and Senate receded on with amendments, but one has to devote a good deal of time if he intelligently follows this report.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that as to the main items the statement does disclose exactly what occurred. Wherever the House receded with an amendment it simply applies to the totals in the bill, which were changed by agreement between the House and Senate. These totals really had no place in the bill. The only important thing that the House receded on was amendments 116, 117, and 118, providing for $40,000 each for new construction work—first, for an Artillery stable for additional horses on account of the increased corps of cadets, $40,000; for Artillery barracks for men, $40,000; for Cavalry barracks, $40,000, making $120,000. The House also under the new construction program provided for an appropriation of $444,000 to begin the work. The Senate added to that, making a total appropriation of $514,000. The conferees agreed to an even half million dollars. The only other item of any consequence was the item providing for repairs to the cadet training camp that they use in the summer. The House provided only $5,000 for that purpose. The superintendent and quartermaster at the academy asked for $49,000 and the Senate gave that amount. The conferees compromised on $41,000. This work has to be done sooner or later. The House thought it might be postponed, the Senate thought it ought to be done now, but it must be done sooner or later on account of the increased corps of cadets at the academy provided for a couple of years ago by Congress. Those are the only items relating to the moneyed part of the appropriation that are at all material. There were a great many increases in the civilian pay of employees by the Senate, but the Senate receded and adopted the House provisions on the theory that these civilian employees would get the benefit of the pending legislation increasing the pay of all employees of the Government. There were three items of legislation in the bill: First, increasing the pay of cadets from $600 a year to $780. The Senate receded and left the pay as it is now in the law. The other provided for the retirement of Mr. John T. Godfrey, who is clerk in the supply department, Quartermaster Department, there, and has been in that service for 26 years. Part of that time he had military service in the Military Establishment of some 23 years and over——

Mr. KAHN. Twenty-four years.

Mr. DENT. Twenty-four years, the gentleman from California reminds me.

It simply provides that upon his request he may be retired with the retired pay of a pay clerk, which will be about $140 a month.

And another item of legislation in the bill, and the only other one, is the provision authorizing the officers of the Army and Navy to purchase uniforms of the Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman please explain to the House what objection the House conferees had to this provision? It occurs to me like a good provision.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that the House conferees did not think it had any place upon the Military Academy appropriation bill. If it has any place at all, it ought to go on the regular Army appropriation bill, in the first place, and, in the next place, the House conferees thought this should be a matter of regulation by the War Department rather than a matter of strict law, because under the law the War Department must furnish uniforms to the enlisted men, and we might find ourselves in the same condition we were last year when we began to organize and increase the Army, when it was absolutely impossible to furnish an officer with a uniform. The House conferees further insisted that this be stricken out, because we were informed by the Quartermaster Department that since the clothing item had gotten in shape so that they could supply the officers a regulation had been adopted to that effect and was now in force.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will yield further, I understood that some regulation of that kind had been adopted; but when I sent down for a copy of it the answer I got was rather vague. With the permission of the House I will insert it in the RECORD. I did not know this matter was coming up, and I did not have it in my pocket. It is over in my office. I hardly think that it is a regulation whereby all officers can get their uniforms through the Quartermaster Department.

Now, while I am on my feet I wish to say the gentleman is aware that there has been much complaint against the charges of merchant tailors throughout the country. I have had a great many letters saying—and a great many people have told me—that for the uniforms they have to buy through merchant tailoring establishments they have to pay some three or four times as much as they would if they could get them through the Quartermaster Department. And I was very much in hopes that some such legislation as this would be placed on some of these bills. I do not see that it would hurt anything, even if there had been a regulation to that effect, if we had some legislation, for the reason that the regulation may be changed from time to time, and I do not believe that these young officers, especially, say, the second lieutenants and first lieutenants, ought to be held up by the merchant tailors of this country. They tell me that the private, the enlisted man, is in a better condition and really gets more money net than a second lieutenant does, provided the latter is not permitted to buy his uniform and equipment through the Quartermaster Department.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has never heard of a case where an officer offered to change places with a private?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am talking about it from a financial standpoint. Of course, they do not. The question of rank and the question of honor attract them.

Mr. DENT. I will say that there is no doubt the statement of the gentleman is true, to the effect that there have been great abuses on the part of the merchants in dealing with officers. I have heard of it, and I believe every Member of Congress has had some criticism in regard to it, but that is one of the misfortunes of creating a big Army all at once. We started out a little more than a year ago with 127,000 officers and men, all told, and we have over 2,000,000 now; and while we sympathize with the officers we can not afford to embarrass the Government in its war administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit a moment longer, there is no doubt in the world but that the Government could secure enough cloth to have these uniforms made. And, another thing, if the gentleman will go down Pennsylvania Avenue and through other parts of Washington, he will see that practically every merchant tailor especially advertises now the making of these uniforms. Now, if they were not making attractive profits, of course, every one of them would not be engaged in that class of business; and I just wanted to take occasion to call attention to this in the hope that either a regulation would be made or legislation enacted that would cover it, so that these boys occupying these positions would not be robbed by the merchant tailors of the country.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I want to ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD so as to include these letters that I mentioned a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to are as follows:

APRIL 12, 1918.

Hon. W. W. HASTINGS
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of April 9, addressed to Maj. Gen. Sharpe, has been received.

We have no printed literature relative to the sale of uniforms and equipment to officers, but I inclose a statement made by Col. Hardeman showing the present status of the regulations concerning such sales.

We also contemplate carrying a stock of cloth at all of our depots of a grade that will be suitable for most officers, so that they may purchase this cloth, if desired, and have it made into uniforms, and are also investigating the possibilities of making arrangements in the larger cities with the clothing-manufacturing houses to manufacture at a reasonable cost uniforms for officers.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Acting Quartermaster General.

APRIL 11, 1918.

Memorandum to Mr. De Field:

General Order No. 22, March 2, 1918, paragraph 11, reads as follows:

"1. Orders heretofore restricting the sales of clothing and equipage to officers are hereby rescinded, except as to sales of woolen coats and breeches.

"2. Sales will be permitted only when articles are available and not needed for immediate issue to enlisted men. These sales shall not exceed the amount of equipment C."

The following letter was sent by the Acting Quartermaster General to all depot, camp, and department quartermasters under date of March 22, 1918:

"1. Referring to the advance copy of War Department General Orders furnished you under date of February 21, 1918, removing the restrictions on sales of clothing and equipage to officers of the Army, except woolen coats and breeches, you are authorized to sell woolen coats and breeches to officers ordered overseas whenever these articles are available."

(Signed) L. HARDEMAN,
Lieutenant Colonel, Quartermaster Corps, National Army.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I know of several officers in the Army, some of them from civil life and some of them graduating from the academies at West Point and Annapolis, poor boys, in some instances having dependents, that have incurred obligations for uniforms, connected with other expenses, that will embarrass them for years. And I hope that either by regulation or law this Government will save them from the profiteering that is forced upon them. We hear much of profiteering in these days, and the worst of all profiteering is taking a fellow that has not anything and who is serving his country under a commission and saddling him up with a very serious debt that will take him a long time to get rid of.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. DILL. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DILL. The newspapers of my home city of Spokane, particularly the Spokesman-Review and the Chronicle, have in the past three months been charging me with opposing the prosecution of the war and being unpatriotic and un-American. On April 22, 1918, the Review charges me with being willing to betray the boys in the trenches by being willing to agree to a premature peace. During March and April of this year they made the charge that I am opposed to the prosecution of the war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, when the resolution declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany was before this House, I stated in a speech on this floor that one of the reasons why I would vote against it was that I believed it would be a war for trade and territory. The conduct of the war under the leadership of President Wilson soon convinced me of my mistake, and for months I have been saying from public platforms in various parts of this country that we are not fighting for trade and territory but are fighting for the right of every nation, large or small, to live under its own flag, trade with whomsoever it pleases, and have its own form of government, and do those things, too, without the interference of any other power on earth. President Wilson and also the allies have repeatedly declared for a peace based on justice to all mankind, but I believe that such a peace can not be established until the German military power that forced the world into this war has been broken and destroyed.

I make this statement in this presence not because I think any Member of this House has any doubt about my having long ago changed my mind regarding the war, nor about my patriotic devotion to the cause of winning the war. My work here day after day has proved both. I make it because the big daily newspapers of my home town of Spokane, particularly the Spokesman-Review and the Chronicle, continue to print parts of the speech I made here before war was declared and claim that those statements represent my present views. The millionaire owner of these newspapers, Mr. W. H. Cowles, and his editors have known better for many months. They knew those statements did not represent my views at all. They knew it from public speeches I made in Spokane last December and from printed statements I have sent them at different times, none of which they would print, because if printed those statements would have disproved their own charges against me.

KAISER COWLES.

Mr. Cowles is a journalistic kaiser. He maintains a publicity autocracy in that part of the country such as is to be found in few other parts of the United States. I say he is a journalistic kaiser, because having a monopoly on the Associated Press news for Spokane and the surrounding country he and his editors follow the same practices as the German Kaiser in the matters of publicity. They apply the Kaiser's methods especially in handling publicity about a man whom they have determined to drive out of public life. The Kaiser suppresses whatever truth he does not want his people to know and twists and misrepresents news to his purpose. Sometimes he invents baseless lies and then exaggerates his own lies to convince his people of the justness of his position. Mr. Cowles and his editors, through the Review and Chronicle, have done exactly the same thing in their campaign to convince the people of Spokane and the surrounding country that I am unpatriotic and that I am opposing the prosecution of the war. As a result, the avalanche of abuse and misrepresentation with which they have tried to cover me equals in intensity and efficiency even Prussian militarism itself.

MISJUDGES PEOPLE.

With no daily newspapers in eastern Washington to tell the whole truth, and with me giving my entire attention to my duties in Congress regardless of what they might say about me, Mr. Cowles and his editors have thought they could print as many lies about me as they desired without discovery and thus build up such a strong public opinion on a basis of patriotism that I would be unable to overcome it during the short period of a campaign, especially with them in complete control of the sources of daily intelligence. But they are mistaken. The people are not fools. The people are fair. They will want to hear both sides of the charges made by these newspapers. They want to know the whole truth and, once they are fully informed, they will act at the polls without regard for the desires of Mr. Cowles or anybody else. I propose to see to it that they know the truth about the statements and charges Mr. Cowles and his editors have made against me.

PROUD OF OPPOSITION—HAVE KEPT FAITH.

These newspapers have always opposed me politically and I hope they always will. If they should ever support me, I don't know how I could ever explain their support to the common people who have twice defied them and elected me to Congress by overwhelming majorities. The fact that the longer I have remained in public life the more bitter they have become against me is in itself one of the best possible proofs that I have kept faith with those who sent me here and that Mr. Cowles knows I will continue to do so if I am returned.

I know I have made mistakes in Congress, but they have been honest mistakes. I am thankful I have always had the courage to do what I thought was right, regardless of consequences to my own political future. I am glad that when I have afterwards learned I had been wrong, that I had honesty enough to admit my mistake, get on the right side and, by redoubling my efforts, try to atone for whatever injury I might have done.

I said a moment ago that these newspapers do not tell the truth regarding my activities here in Congress, and now I propose to prove it by a series of specific instances. I shall not take the time nor the space to recount all of such instances, because it would indeed be a big undertaking, but I do propose to give a sufficient number of examples to show that nothing they print about me can be relied upon as true or dependable. When they do print the truth about me, it is because they think it will not disprove any charges they have made, or they word what they print in such a way that they can later twist it into supporting some attack they propose to make. Now, let me mention some of these scurrilous misrepresentations and malicious falsehoods.

TEN CASES OF MISREPRESENTATIONS AND FALSEHOODS BY REVIEW AND CHRONICLE.

No. 1. During March and April, 1918, while the big German drive was on in France and the people were intensely anxious over its outcome and naturally intolerant of anyone who was not helping in the prosecution of the war in every possible way, the Review repeatedly charged that Congressman DILL had been opposing the prosecution of the war and was still against its vigorous prosecution.

The truth: Since the declaration of war Congress has passed 110 war measures and Congressman DILL has favored and supported 109 of these measures. He has been in Washington constantly during both war sessions of Congress and has done everything possible to help in winning the war. He has made more than 80 public addresses in various parts of the country regarding conditions in France and at the battle front as he had seen them, to arouse enthusiasm for the prosecution of the war to complete victory. Sometimes he has spoken in the interest of the sale of liberty bonds and war-savings stamps, sometimes for the Red Cross, sometimes to the soldiers in the camps, but always he has tried to strengthen the morale of the people in his audiences by urging them to forget all past differences until we had won the war. In fact, during some of the identical nights the Review was printing these editorials he was in small towns or Army camps near Washington speaking in behalf of the various war activities, and the editors of these newspapers knew of his activities in these ways by newspaper clippings sent them describing the meetings he addressed, but they refused to even mention them.

No. 2. On April 22, 1918, the Review charged Congressman DILL with standing "ear cocked at all times for treacherous peace proffers of Germany" instead of favoring a continuation of the war to complete victory.

The truth: Congressman DILL has believed from the time war began and has stated from every platform from which he has spoken on the war, that it must go on until the German military power which caused it has been overthrown. Mr. Cowles and his newspaper editors knew that to be the truth, because of the addresses made by Mr. DILL in Spokane last winter. He said then, and has always said, that to end the war before victory had been attained would be to waste all the sacrifices already made and would simply postpone the conflict a few years, so that the boys and girls of to-day would be the soldiers and nurses who would have to fight it all over again.

No. 3. On April 22, 1918, the Review in a lengthy editorial attack upon Congressman DILL, among other things, said: "If men of his way of thinking were in control of Congress, they would lose no time in repealing the selective-draft law," thus charging him with a desire to destroy the foundation itself of the Military Establishment of the country at a time when we had already sent 500,000 boys to France and the Nation was bending every energy to the sending of more men and of munitions and supplies for those already there.

The truth: From the hour the draft bill became a law Congressman DILL has supported it in every way. He has voted for every amendment or modification of the law requested by the President for facilitating its execution. Just recently he voted for the bill to include in the draft the young men who had become 21 since June 5, 1917. He voted also for the bill giving the President power to draft whatever number of men he may need to win the war. Mr. Cowles and his editors knew these facts when they made that charge, so that in reality it was a deliberate and malicious falsehood.

No. 4. On April 16, 1918, in ridiculing the revenue bill introduced by Congressman DILL providing for high taxes on big incomes and excess profits, and also a capital tax on big fortunes of more than a million dollars, the Review editorial declared Congressman DILL proposed to do an impossible thing, namely, take 104 per cent of incomes of more than half a million dollars, and used this ridiculous proposition as an illustration of his attempts to appeal to the prejudices of the poor and make them forget the charge that he was unpatriotic.

The truth: Congressman DILL's revenue bill proposed supertaxes on big incomes as follows:

One per cent of incomes from $5,000 to $7,500.
Two per cent of incomes from $7,500 to $10,000.
Five per cent of incomes from $10,000 to $15,000.
Ten per cent of incomes from $15,000 to $25,000.
Twenty per cent of incomes from $25,000 to $50,000.
Forty per cent of incomes from $50,000 to $75,000.
Sixty per cent of incomes from $75,000 to $100,000.
Eighty per cent of incomes from $100,000 to $500,000.
Ninety per cent of the amount by which any income exceeds $500,000.

These rates to be levied in addition to the 4 per cent normal tax already provided for by law; but even the 94 per cent rate would apply only to that part of the income above $500,000. He proposed also to take 80 per cent of all excess profits resulting from the war, just as is done in England. A third section of the bill provides for a tax of 3 per cent on fortunes in excess of $1,000,000 and of 5 per cent on fortunes of more than $3,000,000. It also provides for a tax on large areas of unused farm lands held for purposes of speculation.

This is the kind of legislation that Mr. Cowles dislikes most of all, because it would reach him personally by taking more of his wealth with which to pay the expenses of the war. It is because Congressman DILL favors such legislation so strongly that Mr. Cowles is willing to stoop to the low levels of unfounded charges and libelous misrepresentation to destroy public confidence in Mr. DILL. He knows that in the great readjustment which will come following the war Mr. DILL will be against Mr. Cowles and his kind and the legislation they will desire, so naturally he wishes to destroy him now.

No. 5. On April 19, 1917, the Chronicle, which might well be called an afternoon edition of the Review, stated that Congressman DILL had placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a telegram from George W. Holman against the draft bill then being considered. On May 11, 1917, when Holman was declared insane, the Chronicle reprinted this statement and ridiculed Congressman DILL for having approved a crazy man's statement. Later the weekly country press surrounding Spokane, supposing the Chronicle's story true, reprinted it also.

The truth: Congressman DILL never placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on that date or at any other time a telegram or any other communication from Mr. Holman, so that the Chronicle's statements were absolutely baseless falsehoods, as Mr. Cowles and his editors knew from the pages of the RECORD itself. This lie is so utterly lacking of any foundation whatsoever that its invention and repeated use illustrate even more fully than the other instances mentioned the maliciousness of Mr. Cowles and his editors in their campaign against Mr. DILL.

No. 6. On May 17, 1917, the leading editorial of the Chronicle charged Congressman DILL with burdening the Government with the expense of printing, addressing, and mailing his speeches to his constituents, and attacked him for thus wasting money during the war.

The truth: Congressman DILL paid out of his own pocket the entire expense of printing, addressing, and mailing these speeches. Mr. Cowles and his editors knew then that whenever any Congressman sends out speeches he pays in full all the expenses connected with the printing and mailing of them, and they wrote and printed this editorial for the deliberate purpose of prejudicing the people into believing Mr. DILL devoid of any patriotic impulses in connection with this war.

No. 7. On June 13, 1917, the Chronicle printed an elaborately written news story to the effect that letters which Congressman DILL had sent to high-school graduates did not cost him a cent, and charged that he had added that expense to the Government's expenses regardless of its tremendous war burdens. The Wenatchee World reprinted this story the following day.

The truth: Congressman DILL bought special stationery, hired a stenographer in addition to his secretary to write the letters, and stamped each letter, so that instead of not costing him a cent, these letters did not cost the Government a cent. They really added to the profits of the Post Office Department, since there is a profit on the handling of all first-class mail, so that this attack is even more unfounded and unfair than the preceding one.

No. 8. On October 20, 1917, the Review stated that the President was opposed to any Congressmen going to Europe to study war conditions, and attacked Congressman DILL for disregarding the President's wishes.

The truth: The President not only did not oppose the trip made by the Congressmen to study war conditions in Europe, but told different Members who went that he was glad they could go, as it would enable them to get first-hand information concerning the situation there, which they could use in their work here in connection with war legislation. On their return he received the members of the party at the White House and discussed their entire trip with them. He also expressed his pleasure at the announcement of their intention to go about the country to tell the people what they had learned. When Congressman DILL went home during the holiday recess and related his experiences and urged the prosecution of the war to victory, without any mention whatever of politics, the Review and the Chronicle, and those to whom these newspapers gave publicity, charged him with having made the trip and with making the speeches entirely for political effect. Thus they tried to overcome whatever good these speeches had done by injecting politics at a time when nobody was thinking or talking politics except as these newspapers led them to do so.

No. 9. During the months immediately following the declaration of war the Review and the Chronicle repeatedly charged that the speech made by Congressman DILL against the declaration of war gave aid and comfort to the enemy, and charged that to send that speech to his constituents was near treason.

The truth: Congressman DILL made the statements referred to before war was declared, and sent the speech to his district in explanation of his vote and to assure the people that he would support the war. He has never repeated those statements publicly or in letters, and sent out the speech only once, and that immediately after he made it. The Review and the Chronicle and the little "Me Too" Press, another Spokane daily, have reprinted that part of the speech almost every week since war was declared, and circulated it among their readers continually. If Congressman DILL's sending it out once when he made it was near treason, what would be a fitting term to use to describe the action of these newspapers in multiplying his act fifty times by circulating it almost every week for more than a year after the country became engaged in the war? But, according to these newspapers, what was near treason when done by him becomes the highest form of patriotism when touched by the magic ink and paper of Mr. Cowles.

No. 10. The Chronicle on April 25, 1917, and in general attacks repeatedly afterwards, and the Review in a dozen instances, but especially on May 2, 1917, charged Congressman DILL with breaking every pledge he ever made to the people who elected him, and particularly with breaking his pledge to support President Wilson.

The truth: In 1914 Congressman DILL was elected as a Woodrow Wilson man, pledged to support the President on every question. He kept that pledge to the letter.

In 1916 he again promised to support the President, but he made what might be termed a peace campaign also. The Review called him a pacifist and a coward, and declared him unfit to represent that district longer in Congress. He replied by pledging himself to do everything within his power to keep this country out of the European war unless it was in actual danger of invasion. He made this pledge to every audience which he addressed, and was reelected by a majority of 5,181, carrying every county in his district. The President's majority in the same counties was 4,319, while Mr. George Turner, the Democratic nominee for the Senate, lost the same counties by 9,737.

When the question of declaring war came up for a vote, believing his peace pledge had secured such a big majority in a district so heavily Republican, and being opposed to the declaration of war by his own convictions on the question at that time, and having in mind also that the Constitution confers upon Congress alone the tremendous power of declaring war, he spoke and voted the convictions he then had. He voted against the draft for reasons he explained fully at that time, but on the passage of the law he accepted the will of the majority and has cooperated in every way possible in making it a success.

Thus Congressman DILL kept his peace pledge to the letter, and with the one exception noted above he has supported the President in the entire war program not only by his votes on legislation but by publicly indorsing his management of the war at every opportunity, while these newspapers have joined in every attack made upon Mr. Wilson and his Cabinet, whether by Mr. Roosevelt or somebody else.

It is customary for a judge in court to instruct the jury that if they find a witness has testified falsely regarding one material matter, they are at liberty to disregard the testimony of the witness on any or all other material matters involved in the case. Here are 10 instances where these newspapers have printed false and misleading statements regarding my activities in Congress. Why should anybody place any dependence whatever in anything they print about me?

MANY INSTANCES NOT CITED.

In the brief recounting of these misrepresentations which I have made I have entirely disregarded the false and abusive interviews and letters they have printed concerning me and what I have done here. That would require many pages. I have not discussed their efforts in February, 1917, to convince the public that I opposed the armed neutrality bill, when in fact I worked and voted for it. I have said nothing about a series of false and misleading editorials and news articles in both the Review and Chronicle against me because of a statement made by Congressman MILLER of Minnesota while he was in Europe, although he and I did not travel together in Europe at all. The truth is that the Review refused to print the only public statement I gave out regarding the war while in Europe as furnished by the Associated Press. It printed the statements of all the other Congressmen in the party, but omitted my statement, although practically every other big newspaper in the country which printed the Associated Press report included my statement. In that statement I expressed the highest admiration for the fighting qualities of the English and French soldiers and full confidence in final victory over the Huns. Their suppression of that statement is just another instance of how these newspapers create and foster a false public opinion by not printing any fact that would conflict with their claim that I am opposing the vigorous prosecution of the war.

NO NEWS GOOD NEWS.

It is often said that no news is bad news, but when applied to these newspapers in their reports about me no news is good news, because they print only what they consider bad news concerning what I do in Congress.

HOW THEY USE RESULTS OF THEIR OWN LIES TO PROVE THOSE LIES ARE TRUE.

I have not gone into detail as to how by a series of news stories, interviews, and editorials Mr. Cowles and his editors have gradually tried to build up a false public opinion in the minds of the people to the effect that I want Germany to win the war. Recently they have been printing interviews by politicians claiming that some pro-Germans in the Northwest—and I am thankful to say there are very few—are supporting me. Referring to these interviews, they claim them as proof that I am not a good American. Think of that! Having invented and printed a sufficient number of lies to convince a few pro-Germans that I am not a good American, they then point to the result of their own diabolical work as proof that the falsehoods which they created are true.

I HATE KAISERISM OF EVERY KIND.

Mr. Speaker, I have never tried to develop the faculty of hating bitterly. I think hating warps the brain, hardens the heart, and petrifies the soul. But there are some things, some institutions in this world, that are so opposed to my every sense of justice and to every ideal I hold that I hate them naturally and continually. Of all such things I hate kaiserism of every kind everywhere worse than I hate anything else in this world, and I hate the kaiserism of Germany most of all, because its mad lust for autocratic power inevitably forced the world into the most horrible holocaust civilization has ever known.

I hate the kaiserism of Germany also because it is based upon what I believe to be a wrong theory of government, namely, that the government owns the people. I believe the people own the government, and nobody in all the Northwest knows better than this same millionaire owner of these newspapers and his editors how strong my convictions are against autocratic power of any kind. I am against kaiserism, whether it be exercised in a military way by a German war lord over the hordes of his own people, leading them to overrun and destroy the territory of weaker peoples for the purpose of extending his own autocratic rule, or whether it be exercised in a publicity way by a ruthless and unprincipled newspaper owner over the people who are necessarily dependent upon his publications for prompt intelligence regarding events of their communities and the world, leading them to form wrong conclusions regarding public affairs and public men for the purpose of thereby controlling every public man representing the people in high positions.

It is the habitual custom these days for Mr. Cowles and those who follow his leadership to wrap the American flag about themselves and charge that all who do not follow are not good Americans. I have already shown some of the lies the flag is used to conceal. Before this contest is finished I shall expose more and more of their Machievelian practices. I do not know whether the exposures I have already made will cause them to grow more bitter and invent new lies or whether they will place an embargo upon the use of my name in their columns, hoping that the people will forget me. Either method will be equally agreeable to me, because this is a fight to the finish between Mr. Cowles, his followers, and all they represent on one side, and myself and the common people of the district on the other. I shall pursue them to whatever position they retreat or meet them in whatever new attack they may attempt, and I think I do not underestimate their power nor fail to understand fully the dirty tactics and contemptible means they will use to mislead the people.

HOW THEY TRY TO COMMERCIALIZE PATRIOTISM.

They will continue to prate about their patriotism and accuse all who disagree with them as lacking in patriotism. The trouble with Mr. Cowles and his editors and also with their political and publicity puppets is that they are continually trying to commercialize the love of country that is so natural and so all powerful in the breasts of all Americans. Sometimes they even use it as a criminal does a blackjack, foully and brutally, to strike down those to whom they are opposed. They have been following such tactics ever since the United States declared war. They even did it before that date. When the preparedness question was before the country more than two years ago they claimed anybody who opposed their scheme of preparedness was lacking in patriotism. I favored preparedness, but they claimed I did not and attacked me because of what they alleged about me. When the McLemore resolution was before the country, anybody who disagreed with their opinion was not a good American. Although I stood squarely behind the President on both votes in this House on the McLemore resolution, they misrepresented me and attacked me for opposing the President, which they falsely claimed I was doing.

As I have already shown, they have been pursuing the same tactics for the past two years. Using the fact that I voted against the declaration of war as a basis, Mr. Cowles and his editors have tried to convince the people that I have been opposing the prosecution of the war. They have tried to destroy the people's confidence in me and induce them not to trust me in any activity connected with the war.

WHY THEY ATTACK MY PATRIOTISM.

They continually attack my patriotism because, as a high public official, I tried to prevent war, even though since war came I have done everything within my power to help win it. If they were to follow the same principle in regard to others who did not want war they must attack the patriotism of those humble mothers of the country who hoped and prayed and wrote their Congressmen to avert war, but when it came, gladly gave their all by giving their boys to fight and die. But they never do that. Why not? I will tell you why: They know they dare not attack the patriotism of those who have sent their sons. They know, too, that the test of patriotism is not whether a man or woman wanted war but how he or she has acted since war came. They think they can commercialize the patriotic impulses of the people to their own ends by lying about me and thereby prejudicing men against me so as to cause my defeat for reelection. This is not the first time they have tried to do that and failed. In 1916, relying upon their falsehoods regarding preparedness and the McLemore resolution, they thought they could do it. But the people of that district rebuked them overwhelmingly by giving me a majority in every county, and I confidently believe that their new attacks and new lies will bring them a defeat even more decisive.

TREMENDOUS POWER OF MR. COWLES.

I know that the tremendous power which Mr. Cowles possesses through his monopoly on the supplying of daily intelligence in that part of the country is doubly great in these war times, when fathers and mothers, wives and sweethearts, and brothers and sisters of the boys who are fighting and dying are intensely concerned about them. They await the arrival of these newspapers anxiously, they scan the casualty lists almost breathlessly, and they search every column for every kind of war news most carefully. Not only is this publicity power doubly great just now, but the ease with which these sources of intelligence may be poisoned against myself is multiplied manyfold. And that is not all: Mr. Cowles is worth millions. By means of the advertising power he possesses, because of his business connections, and especially by the use of such lackeys as his faithful man Friday, Mr. N. W. Durham, he has been able to manipulate some of the business and patriotic organizations of Spokane into taking the position that they must not recognize me in any way. This man Durham has ordered one organization not even to correspond with me for the purpose of securing services for their members, because he claimed I am unpatriotic, un-American, and opposed to the prosecution of the war. As the months go by, no doubt Mr. Cowles and his editors will enlarge and redouble their efforts. To meet and overcome such opposition is, indeed, a big undertaking, but I welcome the contest.

WOULD BE UNTRUE TO PEOPLE NOT TO FIGHT.

I would be untrue to myself, untrue to the plain people of that district who have twice elected me over this opposition, and untrue to the generation of boys and girls of that community who are watching to see whether or not a man in high public position who stands up always for what he thinks is right can withstand the attacks of Mr. Cowles and his newspapers and the forces they represent; I say I would be untrue to all these if I hesitated or shrank from the coming contest.

IS ANXIOUS TO LAY HIS SIDE BEFORE PEOPLE.

No, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make such a fight. I am anxious to go among the people and lay my side of the case before them. They are Americans. Better still, they are western Americans. With no people on earth does the appeal for fair play and a square deal have greater influence. I shall lay before them frankly and fully my every word and deed, and I have every confidence in the justice of the judgment they will render when the time shall have arrived for them to act.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment strike out the following: "to Seward, Alaska"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$93,753,682" and insert in lieu thereof "$93,203,682"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$160,566,756.14" and insert in lieu thereof "$160,016,-756.14"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 23, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 47, 52, 53, 75, 93, 100, 101, 102, 112, 115, 120, and 170 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10854) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Of the Senate amendments agreed to by the managers on the part of the House, the following are merely changes of totals, to wit, 16, 82, 84, 87, 89, 96, 107, 124, 132, 136, 142, 144, 145, 150, 151, 156, and 159.

Of the amendments of the Senate agreed to by the managers on the part of the House, the following involve changes of language, grammar, correction of typographical errors, etc., and do not involve any material change of the substance of the bill, to wit, 1, 2, 3, 9, 12, 14, 15, 20, 21, 24, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 40, 45, 48, 49, 55, 56, 61, 118, 158, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, and 165.

The following Senate amendments are reported in disagreement, many of them having been specially reserved for a separate vote in the House at the time the bill was sent to conference, to wit, 4, 5, 23, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 47, 52, 53, 75, 93, 100, 101, 102, 112, 125, 120, and 170.

On amendment No. 6: Is made necessary because the charter of the city of New York requires when the city leases property to require the improvements placed upon the leased property to become the property of the city at the termination of the lease and it is absolutely necessary for the Government to have and use leased water fronts in the city of New York.

On amendment No. 7: Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to collect reasonable compensation for salvage service. The Government has taken over and is operating under the Navy the large bulk of the salvage service in this country and much abroad.

On amendment No. 8: Makes provision for the payment out of the contingent fund for the maintenance of the officers of the Navy serving under unusual conditions outside of the United States and its insular possessions.

On amendment No. 10: Increases the appropriation for aviation about $32,000,000. This is necessitated because of the increased cost of labor and material, the larger type of machines being constructed, and the rapid changes being made in the development of aircraft.

On amendment No. 11: Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to adjust and pay for damages to private property growing out of the operation of naval aircraft, and is similar to the legislation relating to the operations of the Army and Navy.

On amendment No. 13: Includes the State of Washington upon the same terms as the States of New York and Massachusetts for reimbursement of the expenses incurred in the maintenance of marine schools.

On amendment No. 17: Increases the appropriation for transportation from $5,100,000 to $12,000,000. This is made necessary because of the large increase in the personnel of the Navy and the large amount of transportation, and the present expenditures for this purpose are running about $900,000 a month with a prospect of increasing.

On amendment No. 18: As amended by the conferees, includes civilian employees who render conspicuous service by putting their life in jeopardy to save life or property to receive good-conduct badges or medals.

On amendment No. 19: Eliminates the restriction upon the number of naval officers for work in the Hydrographic Office. The correction and preparation of sailing charts, sailing directions, etc., during the war is of vital importance and its supply from abroad is greatly curtailed and it is necessary to have trained naval men for this work, especially during the war.

On amendment No. 22: Strikes out the provision for enrolling transferred members of the Medical Reserve Corps and Dental Reserve Corps in the Naval Reserve Force with seniority and provides that they may be trasferred in their present grades and ranks. The provision for seniority would create great confusion and detriment to the service.

On amendment No. 25: Places transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve upon the same basis of annual retainer pay as officers in the Naval Auxiliary Reserve.

On amendment No. 31: As amended by the conferees, provides for the acquisition of the necessary land upon which armories may be located and which are purchased under authority of that section as passed by the House.

On amendment No. 36: Authorizes the President during the period of the present war, if it becomes necessary, temporarily to increase the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy by 50,000. This is done simply as an abundant precaution in time of war.

On amendment No. 43: Makes provision for chief warrant officers in the permanent Navy on July 1, 1917, and were not given temporary appointments as on that date because of age restrictions or ill health. At that time there was an age restriction of 50 years, which Congress has since removed.

On amendment No. 44: Eliminates candidates for assistant surgeon from the age limit of 50 years for temporary service in the Navy. The need for surgeons in the Navy is very great.

On amendments Nos. 46 and 147: Are considered together and change the status of clerks for assistant paymasters in the Marine Corps from a civilian to a military status, but do not involve any increase in number or compensation. Places these clerks on a basis similar to the Navy, which has worked well.

On amendment No. 50: As amended by the conferees, provides for promotion to officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard on the retired list doing active duty, and was believed by the conferees to provide a more just provision for their promotion than the amendment as passed by the Senate. Makes the legislation more nearly like the legislation for the Army.

On amendment No. 51: Provides for a suspension of the requirements for sea service in grade of officers specially designated during the period of the war or national emergency by the Secretary of the Navy as performing highly important duties on shore and whose services on shore could not be dispensed with without serious prejudice to the successful prosecution of the war. This exemption from sea service is limited to officers designated during the war and provides a period of two and one-half years after the ending of the war in which such officers may make good their sea service.

On amendment No. 54: As amended by the conferees makes the provisions of existing law with reference to promotion by selection in the line of the Navy applicable to the selection of commander, captain, and rear admiral in the Staff Corps of the Navy adapted to the conditions of the Staff Corps.

On amendments Nos. 57 and 58: Make the provisions of the House bill apply to the Navy as well as to the Marine Corps.

On amendments Nos. 59 and 60: Make the provisions for payment in cases of the requisition of property during the war the same as the provisions contained in existing law with reference to condemnation of property.

On amendments Nos. 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72: Are increases of appropriations for ordnance stores, supplies and outfits, new batteries, ammunition for vessels of the Navy, torpedoes, and reserve ordnance supplies made necessary by the activities of the war. These amendments as agreed to by the conferees reduce the appropriation by $32,000,000, but provide for authorizations in lieu of appropriations for $31,000,000, it being necessary to have authorization to begin the manufacture and production of this ordnance store material, equipment, etc., but the actual appropriation of the $31,000,000 will not be needed until the next session of Congress.

On amendment No. 69: As agreed to by the conferees increases the appropriation for torpedoes and appliances from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 instead of $11,000,000 as passed by the Senate. This is made necessary by recent expansion of the manufacture of torpedoes and the increased cost of labor and materials.

On amendments Nos. 63, 66, and 70: Are necessary because of the authorizations in the act of March 28, 1918, and the larger number of ships and vessels and activities of the Navy.

On amendment No. 73: Contingent, Bureau of Ordnance. This increase is made necessary by the increased activities of the Navy.

On amendment No. 74: As amended by the conferees provides for the erection and equipment of a depot for the storage of high explosives and the loading of mines on a site to be selected and acquired by the President. The Navy Department is manufacturing mines and high explosives very rapidly for use in foreign waters and it is necessary to provide a safe place for their storage.

On amendment No. 76: Increases the appropriation for maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, from $7,000,000 to $10,500,000; and this is made necessary by the tremendous increase in the temporary facilities of the training camps and the increased cost of materials and labor. There is also a large increase in the power plant facilities of the navy yards and the operation of the power plants is provided for in this appropriation.

On amendment No. 77: As agreed to by the conferees limits the purchase of automobiles to 115, not more than 100 of which can be purchased at a greater cost than $500 each and not more than 15 at a greater cost than $2,000 each.

On amendment No. 78: Provides a fund for temporary storage during the war of the increased and increasing accumulation of materials and equipments of all kinds other than explosive or ordnance materials.

On amendment No. 79: Provides for the water-front improvement, machine shop, and foundry at the Boston Navy Yard. This is a very important yard, doing a great deal of work, and recently the transportation difficulties have made it necessary to divert a large portion of the shipping from New York to Boston and other Atlantic ports, and it is necessary to construct piers to accommodate this shipping, much of which is under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, and the large manufacturing and repairing work makes it necessary to reconstruct and enlarge the foundry and machine shop at Boston. This is very urgent and imperative.

On amendments Nos. 80 and 81: Are for the improvement and enlargement of the water front and the central power plant at the New York Navy Yard.

On amendment No. 83: Is made necessary by the enlargement of the yard and the erection of new buildings at the Washington Navy Yard and the storage of ordnance materials at Bellevue magazine.

On amendment No. 85: Authorizes the President to acquire 4,900 acres of land at Quantico, Va., now being used under lease as a Marine Corps training station. This land is admirably adapted for the purpose, and the Government has already spent a very large amount of money in fitting up the grounds for a Marine Corps post and will continue to need it, and it is proper to purchase and own it.

On amendment No. 86: As agreed to by the conferees provides for a building for seamanship and navigation and other instruction purposes at the Naval Academy, appropriating $1,000,000 and authorizing $1,500,000 additional, and a garage at a cost of $30,000 for the housing of the large number of automobile trucks used in connection with the academy. This is made necessary by the very great enlargement of the number of midshipmen.

On amendment No. 88: As agreed to by the conferees provides $10,000 for building medical officers' quarters at Port Royal, S. C.

On amendment No. 91: Provides for enlarging the central power plant at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C. This is for the same reason and the same necessities as at all of the yards. The very great expansion and enlargement of work at all of the yards necessitates the enlargement of the power plants.

On amendment No. 94: Provides for enlarging the central power plant and distributing system at the naval aeronautic station, Pensacola, Fla., which is the principal aeronautic station on the Gulf.

On amendment No. 95: Provides for enlarging the central power plant and distributing systems at the navy yard, Mare Island, Cal.

On amendment No. 98: Provides for the enlargement of the power plant at the navy yard, Puget Sound, purchase of additional land adjoining the navy yard, and for grading, filling, and sea wall construction. We have but two navy yards on the Pacific coast, one at Mare Island and the other at Puget Sound; both of them have very greatly enlarged their activities and output of production and are doing fine work. The grounds at Puget Sound Navy Yard are cramped, and this additional land is needed for the proper expansion of the activities of the yard.

On amendments Nos. 105, 106, and 108: Relate to the enlargement and improvement of the naval training station, Newport, R. I. This is one of the principal training stations on the Atlantic where many thousands of young men are annually trained for the naval service. This additional land is needed for the proper and necessary activities of the station, and the purchase price is believed to be very reasonable.

On amendment No. 109: Provides for a marine railway, naval fuel depot, San Diego, Cal. This is needed for the proper docking and repairing of naval vessels and other vessels on the southern portion of the Pacific coast. There are no docks available for that purpose in that vicinity.

On amendment No. 110: Increases the appropriation for the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., by $500,000. This is for the purpose of constructing an additional pier. This is the principal operating base upon the Atlantic coast, and it is necessary to have the base fitted out as soon as possible.

On amendment No. 111: As agreed to by the conferees increases the appropriation for repairs and preservations at navy yards by $500,000 and reduces the amendment as passed by the Senate by $500,000. The large number of buildings, both permanent and temporary, require large amounts for repairs and preservations.

On amendment No. 113: Provides for the payment to Mrs. Van Kirk, mother of the late D. R. Van Kirk, ensign, National Naval Volunteers, one year's pay. This legislation is necessary because under existing law it was necessary that the young man should have designated some one as his beneficiary under the law authorizing the payment. This he neglected to do. Had he designated his mother, the payment would have been made to her under existing law. Having failed to designate her, it becomes necessary to authorize the payment by this legislation.

On amendment No. 114: Is made necessary on account of legislation at the present session allowing commutation to officers.

On amendment No. 116: Provides for hire of quarters for officers attached to submarines during the war when they are required to be on shore and Government quarters are not available.

On amendment No. 117: Appropriates $1,000,000 for the development and transportation of coal from Alaska. The coal situation on the Pacific is acute, the transportation charges are almost prohibitive, and transportation facilities very limited and difficult to secure. There is valuable coal available for naval uses accessible to the railroad in Alaska.

On amendments Nos. 121 to 142: Relate to increases of compensation for statutory employees at the Naval Academy and aggregate $10,578. There are statutory employees whose compensation is fixed in the statute; there are also per diem employees doing the same character of work as the statutory employees whose compensation is fixed by the wage boards and are adjusted from time to time. The statutory employees are in most instances the ranking employees. An arrangement was made between the War Department and the Navy Department that they would pay the same scale of wages that the Shipping Board paid to employees doing similar character of work. Recently the Shipping Board increased the scale of wages, and the Navy Department, pursuant to the agreement, increased the wages of the per diem employees, giving them a greater compensation than the statutory employees; and these amendments are to provide a similar increase to statutory employees, so as to make them on an equal scale of pay.

On amendments Nos. 148 and 149: Increases the pay of two chief clerks, one in San Francisco and one in Philadelphia, from $1,800 to $2,000.

On amendment No. 152: Provides for commutation for rations for enlisted men traveling on special duty. During the war it is frequently necessary for the Secretary to detail enlisted men for special duty of a confidential character.

On amendment No. 154: Provides an increase of commutation of quarters of officers and enlisted men serving with troops in the Marine Corps. This is made necessary because of the recent legislation allowing commutation of quarters.

On amendment No. 155: Includes retired officers on active duty during the war to receive the benefits accorded officers and enlisted men on the active list with reference to payment of funeral expenses.

On amendment No. 157: Provides an appropriation of $16,677,200 for the purpose of procuring a reserve stock of clothing, arms, and equipment, and other necessary military supplies for the Marine Corps. For several years past the Marine Corps has been accumulating a reserve supply, but the increases in the corps and the necessities of war have consumed this reserve stock, and it is necessary to make provision for a reserve supply.

On amendments Nos. 166, 167, 168, and 169: Relate to improving and equipping navy yards for construction of ships, and to meet urgent needs of navy yards, stations, and bases, and provides for the repair and urgent needs of navy yards, stations, and bases, as well as for construction and purchase of necessary machinery, implements, building ways, and equipment, and increases the appropriation from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000. This large increase is made necessary by the large number of naval ships added to the Navy as well as the large number of commercial ships under the control and operation of the Navy Department, and which must be repaired and cared for very largely in navy yards.

The aggregate increase of appropriations by the Senate amendments as agreed to by the conferees for ordnance, ordnance stores, new batteries for ships, and storage of ordnance supplies made necessary by the activities of the war and the enlarged operations of the Navy amount to		$102,103,671
In addition to the above appropriations, the amendments as agreed to by the conferees authorize contracts for additional ordnance stores, equipment, etc., of $31,000,000.
The aggregate increase of appropriations by the Senate amendments as agreed to by the conferees for "Public works," under the Bureau of Yards and Docks, for the improvement and enlargement of the activities and operations of the manufacturing facilities and the improvement of the yards and stations, Naval Academy, temporary storage, marine barracks, etc., amount to		7,895,000

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
D. J. RIORDAN,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
WM. J. BROWNING,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for an hour.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, in presenting the conference report and the statement on it, I wish to say that we went into detail so as to give the House the benefit of an explanation of each one of the amendments as agreed to and the result of the amendments as agreed to by the conferees. If there are any questions that gentlemen desire to ask, I will be glad to answer as best I can.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of amendments inserted in the bill by the Senate which the House conferees were instructed to report back to the House for the decision of the House.

Mr. PADGETT. They are all reported back, sir.

Mr. BRITTEN. I understand that; and on these amendments—on three or four of them at least—considerable debate will be necessary. I apprehend it will be impossible to pass definitely on these various amendments in the hour that is allotted to the chairman of the committee. I want to know——

Mr. PADGETT. Those amendments do not come within this hour. This hour is on the conference report as agreed to, and then there will be an hour on each one of the others as they come up.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it the intention of the chairman of the committee then to take his full hour on the amendments that have been agreed to and then take one hour for each of the succeeding amendments, if necessary?

Mr. PADGETT. The chairman will not do it unless he is driven to it. He hopes to expedite the matter and get the conference report out of the way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the House will be interested to know what the policy of the committee and the Government is as to the purchase of additional land that has been authorized in Senate amendments and that was authorized originally in other House amendments. For instance, the conferees in the partial report have agreed to the purchase of land at Quantico. They have agreed to purchase additional land at various other stations. According to my knowledge there have been instances where the Government has purchased additional land which is under favorable lease at very low rental, which is not absolutely necessary to be purchased, and yet the department in its policy of enlarged activities has recommended the purchase of the land. It might be interesting to the House for the chairman of the committee to reflect the policy of the department and the conferees toward the purchase of additional land when leased on reasonable rental during the period of the war and even afterwards.

Mr. PADGETT. With reference to Quantico——

Mr. STAFFORD. That was only an example. There are many other instances.

Mr. PADGETT. Not many others in the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, Newport, R. I.

Mr. PADGETT. That is not agreed to. That is still in agreement. Newport, R. I., was reserved. That was reserved by the gentleman himself when the bill went to conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood from the reading of the statement that there had been an agreement as to the purchase of additional land there.

Mr. PADGETT. No. That was in disagreement because the gentleman asked to have it brought back to the House. As to Quantico, it is proposed to purchase 4,900 acres of land. It is broken land, wooded land, rolling, and is said to be magnificently fitted for the purposes of the intensive training in the advanced military development of maneuvers, and especially with the large guns. The Government has placed upon the land over $2,000,000 worth of improvements under a lease. It is necessary that we should have, even for the permanent establishment when the war closes, this training base for this advanced training. We have two; one at Paris Island, or Port Royal as it is called at times, where they take their first training in maneuvering and drilling and things of that kind. But at Quantico it is an entirely different form of training and drilling. It is very necessary that the Government should have it. A number of members of the Naval Committee went down and went over the land personally. To be entirely frank with the House and with the gentleman, it occurred to us that perhaps the price may be a little high, but this does not fix the price. The President is to commandeer or to condemn the property under the standardized provision that has been adopted a number of times. He has a value fixed upon it, and if the parties accept it, that determines. But the property is taken over, the title and all, and the only question that remains is the value. If the party is not satisfied, he is paid 75 per cent of the assessed value, as determined by the President, and he is given the right to go into court to sue for the balance. That has been agreed to a number of times in different legislation of the Congress, both in this Congress and in a previous Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the location of the additional land at the Bremerton Yard, Puget Sound?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the newest navy yard on the Pacific coast, and has been touted by Navy Department officials as being entirely sufficient for all Navy needs. Now, at the outbreak of the war we find it necessary to purchase additional land at that station.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I visited the yard three years ago the site appeared to me very cramped, and I was informed that if the department, when it acquired it, had followed the suggestion of local people, it could have acquired all that part of the land which is now used by the city of Bremerton proper. As I recall the foundry, for instance—and I have some little knowledge of foundry practice—a new foundry building, costing $100,000 and more, was cramped right up against an embankment, without any opportunity for stores. It gave me the impression of a yard in a cramped condition. Down near the marine hospital there was a large portion of unused land, but that was separated entirely from the main operating plant of the yard.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman's impressions are entirely correct. This yard was acquired a number of years ago. Gentlemen will bear in mind that we have only two yards upon the Pacific coast, one at Bremerton, out from Seattle, Wash., and the other at Mare Island, about 28 miles from San Francisco. The Bremerton yard is very much cramped, as the gentleman has said, but he will bear in mind that naval conditions at the time that yard was established, 20 or 25 years ago, were very different from what they are now. Naval activities were very different then. The ships that we were building then were very small compared to what ships are now. They were fewer in number than now. Naval activities of every form at the time that yard was established were not comparable to what they are now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even under those conditions the yard was cramped, as I viewed it.

Mr. PADGETT. It was.

Mr. STAFFORD. And insufficient to meet the requirements of those conditions.

Mr. PADGETT. It was.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet we launched into the project of establishing very expensive buildings on ground that was too limited for the purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct, and that is the reason why the conferees have agreed to this amendment of the Senate to acquire this additional land. If it had been acquired at the time of the organization of the yard it could have been obtained more cheaply than it can be now, but that is something that can not be helped now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House where that land is located in relation to the main plant?

Mr. PADGETT. It is adjoining it, and embraces a part of the water front. It is the flat land, not the hill land. You know that a good part of the land embraced within the naval reservation there is hill land that can not be used for industrial purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a large portion of the present tract that can be used, but it is separate and distinct from the existing plant. That is where the marine hospital is located, about half or three-quarters of a mile from the existing manufacturing plant.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. The land which it is proposed to acquire is the flat land right out from and adjoining the manufacturing part of the yard. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. My attention is called to the fact that I stated to the gentleman a while ago that the amendment in relation to the Newport land had not been agreed to. That was agreed to in the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought so from the reading of the report.

Mr. PADGETT. But the amendment that the gentleman made his reservation concerning was amendment 101, which relates to improvements at the Newport torpedo station. I wanted to correct that mistake.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman in that connection explain the policy of the committee and of the department as to the acquirement of additional land at these various stations, whether they are proceeding in the purchase of additional land which in many instances are now occupied under a lease at very reasonable terms, with the idea of a large naval establishment in the future based on war preparedness, or whether it is based on the idea of contracting into the bounds within which we were before we entered the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, we will never get back to where we were before the beginning of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree that we will not get back; but what is the policy of the committee and of the department in the acquirement of this additional acreage at the stations all over the country?

Mr. PADGETT. The policy of the department, as I understand it, and of the committee, is to purchase such land as is absolutely necessary for the proper execution of the work of the Navy Department. I may say that at Newport we have our principal training station, or one of the principal training stations. The one at Chicago has been very much enlarged, and is now so provided as to be perhaps superior to the others in its facilities; but thousands of men are assigned to Newport for training in the various branches and crafts of the naval service. The yard is very much cramped, and we are purchasing this additional land because it is needed not only now but will be useful and needed in the proper execution of the work of the yard after the war is over.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why did not the department and the committee postpone the purchase when they had the land under very reasonable terms of rental?

Mr. PADGETT. The reason we did not postpone the purchase of this land is because it is needed. They have been attempting to sell this land to the department for quite a while. It was first offered to the department at something like $200,000 or $225,000. The department would not entertain that proposition, believing the price to be too great and altogether out of proportion. When the committee were up there last spring the Secretary telegraphed me and asked me to look at it. We looked it over, and I sent him a telegram disapproving the project at the price at which it was offered at that time. The city of Newport has taken an option on this land from the private owners at $160,000, and has given a stipulation to the department that it will sell it to the department for $100,000, the city contributing $50,000 for Government use to secure the land, and the Secretary says that at that price it is well worth it. He regards it as a bargain, and he thinks now is the time to take it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no personal knowledge of the site instanced by the gentleman, but I have personal knowledge of tracts of land purchased by the Navy Department which were only utilized with temporary structures, not intended to be used during the war with any kind of permanent improvement, and which have been purchased by the department when the purchase could have been deferred until after the war without any inconvenience whatsoever. I am trying to get some idea from the gentleman of the policy of the department in making purchases of land when not necessary.

Mr. PADGETT. The department's policy is to get this land when absolutely necessary, and the committee only recommends this as it seems absolutely essential.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the time this conference was agreed to by the House there were a number of amendments that were reserved to come back to the House which are not embraced in the conference report. I want to call up Senate amendment No. 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The act entitled "An act to provide additional protection for the owners of patents of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, shall be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"That whenever an invention described in and covered by a patent of the United States shall hereafter be used or manufactured by or for the United States without license of the owner thereof or lawful right to use or manufacture the same, such owner's remedy shall be by suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of his reasonable and entire compensation for such use and manufacture: Provided, however, That said Court of Claims shall not entertain a suit or award compensation under the provisions of this act where the claim for compensation is based on the use or manufacture by or for the United States of any article heretofore owned, leased, used by, or in the possession of the United States: Provided further, That in any such suit the United States may avail itself of any and all defenses, general or special, that might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement, as set forth in Title 60 of the Revised Statutes, or otherwise: And provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not inure to any patentee who, when he makes such claim, is in the employment or service of the Government of the United States, or the assignee of any such patentee; nor shall this act apply to any device discovered or invented by such employee during the time of his employment or service."

Mr. PADGETT. This is an amendment of the patent law, and, generally speaking, it would not be appropriate on the naval appropriation bill. It makes only a slight change in the existing law, but the urgency and necessity of it was such that the Senate deemed it proper to place it on the bill. It is strongly recommended in a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt.

The existing law provides that when the Government wrongfully uses a patent the remedy of the patentee shall be to sue the Government. The conditions now are such that it becomes necessary for the Government to have contracts with various private manufacturers and for them to use these patents where dispute may arise over the use of the patent. Now, if the Government itself is manufacturing, they can not enjoin the Government, but under existing law must sue in the Court of Claims for the recovery of their rights under the use of the patent. If a man makes a contract with the Government to perform the work, the patentee can enjoin the private contractor and the private manufacturer from doing the Government work. Now, the only change that is made is to provide that the private contractor who is doing the Government work under contract with the Government shall be placed on the same basis and shall bring suit against the Government of the United States to recover certain compensation from the use of their patent, or such damage for the use of the patent, as they could recover if the Government of the United States was doing the work itself. Thereby it would prevent the injunctive process from the courts being used to prevent private manufacturers doing Government work. That is the whole change made in the law and the conditions are such as to require that it should be done.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think, however, that it is an extremely bad precedent to amend the patent laws in the naval appropriation bill, and that it will be made a vehicle hereafter of such amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me say to the gentleman that it was with very great reluctance that we consented to bring the matter here and let the House pass on it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There are other appropriation bills where this would be more apropos than here. When you amend the patent laws on the naval appropriation bill it seems to me a very bad precedent.

Mr. PADGETT. It is true that it does not belong here. I stated that in the beginning, but the Navy is confronted with vessel work, making contracts all over the country with the liability of having its work stopped, and they want to get it in the quickest way possible, and it was sent down by the Navy Department.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman feel that this is a law that would expedite the manufacture of war material?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COX. Then why does not the gentleman move to concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what I am going to do.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman could get it in three minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 4.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Senate amendment No. 5, I ask that the House still further insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman intend to make the motion on each one of these amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I move to further insist on the disagreement to amendment No. 5.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Amendment No. 23 is legislation relating to the Dental Corps of the Navy. There should be legislation, but there should be some amendment to this Senate amendment. The legislation was had last fall for the Dental Corps of the Army, and it makes it very necessary that we should have this legislation with reference to the Navy.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. What does this do with reference to the present legislation; what change does it make?

Mr. PADGETT. It makes a number of changes; it gives an advanced rank, although it does not give as much as the Army is giving now.

Mr. COX. What is the maximum?

Mr. PADGETT. Commander, with the pay of a captain.

Mr. COX. How does that compare with the same rank in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. A commander in the Navy is the same as lieutenant colonel in the Army.

Mr. COX. That is as high as the members of the Dental Corps can go in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it goes a little higher.

Mr. COX. Colonel?

Mr. PADGETT. No. There is a bill pending, and the Surgeon General of the Navy has recommended several amendments—that the rank provided here should be lieutenant commander with the pay to go up to that of commander.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman feel it ought to go as high here as the law permits the grade to go in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. Differences in the service bring conflicts. We have a Medical Corps in the Navy and a Dental Corps. Let us take a hospital, for instance. We will say that an officer of the Medical Corps is sent to the hospital and is put in charge of the whole work, except the dental part of it. If we have a dentist with the rank of commander and the medical officer has a rank of lieutenant commander you will be putting a man of higher rank under a man of lower rank, who has the general charge of the service. These things ought to be worked out, and I wanted to say that our committee has been considering this matter in a general way. The conferees think there ought to be legislation, and we are in sympathy with this legislation, in order to give the Dental Corps of the Navy appropriate recognition; but there are some amendments that should be made in this legislation.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This is deemed to be urgently important at this time. What reasons are assigned for not having submitted this proposal to the House committee?

Mr. PADGETT. It was submitted to the House committee, but we did not take it up. It was submitted as a separate matter.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I recall that the chairman did not call the attention of the committee to it and we did not have any hearings upon it.

Mr. PADGETT. No; because it came in late with some letters, and we had to make up the bill, and then we had to get the bill through the House. This came in just a short time before we had to take the bill up in the House.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am sure that the chairman is in sympathy with the feeling of the House committee that in matters of legislation of this kind, where the necessity for it is apparent, it ought to be brought to the attention of the House committee in the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and that is always done.

Mr. ROBBINS. This provision with reference to dentists runs from page 14 to page 18.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Could the gentleman inform the House just what amount of increase in rank there is here and how it figures out in the matter of increasing the expense to the Government by reason of this reorganization of the Naval Dental Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not give the gentleman the amount of the expense at this time. I have not gone into that.

Mr. ROBBINS. With each increase in rank there is an increase in pay.

Mr. PADGETT. At the present time the Dental Corps in the Navy is limited to the rank of lieutenant commander and the pay of lieutenant commander. This amendment, as it is placed in the bill by the Senate, provides for the rank of commander, and provides for promotion in pay to captain.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is, the same rank as a captain in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; a captain in the Army is much lower than that.

Mr. BROWNING. It is the same as a colonel in the Army.

Mr. PADGETT. A commander in the Navy is the relative rank of a lieutenant colonel in the Army, and captain in the Navy is of the relative rank of a colonel in the Army.

Mr. ROBBINS. And with the same pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the pays are all on the same basis.

Mr. ROBBINS. Then the expense to the Government by reason of this increase in rank would be considerable?

Mr. PADGETT. Not speaking accurately, offhand my understanding is that it would give, perhaps, somewhere from 15 to 20 with increased rank.

Mr. ROBBINS. And corresponding increase in pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman going to make any motion in respect to this amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. I move to still further insist upon the disagreement to this amendment, so that it will go back to conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to further insist upon disagreeing to amendment numbered 23.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Wisconsin desires some time, and I yield him 10 minutes at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as late as 1917, in the naval appropriation act of that year, we provided for the reorganization of the Naval Dental Corps and Naval Reserve Dental Corps. That act provided for a dentist for every 1,000 enlisted men in the Navy and the Marine Corps and for certain promotions; that they should enter in the grade of junior lieutenants after a probationary period of 2 years, serve in that grade for 5 years, and be promoted to the grade of lieutenant; and then, after a service in that grade of 20 years, be promoted to the grade of lieutenant commander, and that was the maximum grade. There could be no more than 11 men in the position of lieutenant commander.

This amendment, as the supplemental hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs show, did not arise with the Secretary of the Navy; it did not have the indorsement of the Navy Department. It arose in the Senate, as the result, perhaps, of a lobby on the part of the National Dental Association. I am well aware that it is the practice for outsiders to use their influence to seek increase in rank and pay of officers, and that is all this Senate amendment does. It does not in any way increase the number of dental surgeons that are needed in the service, because it merely provides one for every thousand, but seeks to increase the pay and rank of all in the service. That is something, I contend, we should guard against in these times when we need the money for other purposes. It is the tendency now in every quarter for officers, wherever they can do so, to endeavor to increase their pay. We have indirectly increased the pay of these dental officers by providing commutation of quarters, and yet they come in here and in a wholesale fashion wish to get an increase of pay and rank by reason of war condition, not to continue merely during the war, but for all time.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] is well within his rights and within the rights of the House when he says this matter should be considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs before being considered as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Was this ever before the whole Committee on Naval Affairs or was it just before the conferees?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The gentleman heard the statement of one of the active men on the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], in which he says this matter has never been considered by the full Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me the Naval Affairs Committee have an apology to make to the House. There is a bill pending which has been referred to that committee to do this very thing, and it seems to me it is with very poor grace for the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs to come here saying it has never been considered by them, when that bill has been there—the Dyer bill—for several months.

Mr. STAFFORD. And more, if you examine the supplemental hearings upon these 101 amendments you will find that the Surgeon General of the Navy, an estimable man, says at the outset it is a fair bill and he approves of it, and then the Secretary of the Navy says he does not approve of that bill, and he goes on and suggests amendments.

I do not care in rising here and criticizing the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but they might well take example from the Committee on Military Affairs in the framing of their bill. The Committee on Military Affairs when they presented their appropriation bill did not bring in legislation on their bill. They brought in their legislation piecemeal and the House had an opportunity to act upon those separate bills, and we did so; but here the Committee on Naval Affairs brings into the House a bill laden down with legislation, and, of course, it is an invitation to the Senate to load down the bill over there with legislation. Here we have an example of this ill-advised policy of allowing the conferees to determine what should be the future policy of the Government and refuse to give the Committee on Naval Affairs the privilege to determine and pass upon that subject. We have just adopted an amendment revising the patent laws of the country upon the ipse dixit of the Secretary of the Navy, without any investigation whatsoever by the committee itself as to whether it was warranted or not. Now, I think this committee ought to insist on its further disagreement and not agree to this amendment with any amendment whatsoever. We should not in these times, when we need money so badly for pressing activities, attempt to increase the pay and rank of dental officers.

It was pointed out in these supplemental hearings if this amendment was agreed to we would have on board ship a dental surgeon of higher rank than a medical officer, and there would be disorganization. It is one thing for a man to be a surgeon, qualified and equipped for the duties of that office, and a mere dental surgeon, who does not require the same training and experience——

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. SNOOK. The committee brings this matter in here for the House to consider. Why can not we consider it; why send it to the committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee made a preliminary statement when he rose that he was going to disagree to this amendment, with the understanding that he would agree to it in conference with certain amendments as suggested in this supplemental report. The gentleman knows in these times you can not consider a proposition on the spur of the moment, without any recommendation from the Navy Department, without a report from the committee that has charge of this matter that had never considered it, and that is the reason why, and I believe the House is agreed, that we should not at this time seek to raise salaries of officers connected with the Navy.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I wanted to ask the gentleman, if this amendment is adopted, how the comparative rank and pay of these men compare with similar men in the Army?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not give the gentleman the information. I did not have the time to examine it. The gentleman will recall the last day of the last Congress I rose in opposition to an amendment which was placed on in the Senate providing for an increase of pay of the Dental Corps, and on a motion to suspend the rules there was decided opposition to the motion. At the solicitation of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who wanted to bring up a very pressing matter, I did not demand a roll call, and I think if I had the matter might have been defeated.

But there is too much tendency now on the part of the Navy to endeavor to parallel every increase that is found in the Army. It merely means an increase of the pay of the dental surgeons now in the Navy, and I do not think that practice should be approved of and I do not think this House is in favor of that policy.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wanted to ask whether or not there is any disposition on the part of the Navy, as there seems to be in the Army, to discriminate between the dentists who are not association men?

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, I am not on either committee, and I have not any first-hand knowledge as to those affairs. I am merely giving the House the benefit of the little knowledge I have gleaned from the hearings and from my acquaintance with this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that this was originated in the Senate, by whom he did not know, but, perhaps, by lobbying, and so forth. The fact is that the Secretary of the Navy did make a recommendation, as I had stated, and sent it to the House committee and also to the Senate committee. The bill had been worked out by the department in conference with the dental men and——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. PADGETT. That bill was introduced by Senator TILLMAN, but the bill as passed in the Senate is not exactly the bill that was recommended by the department. I stated that there were some changes which should have been made. The conferees had a hearing with the Surgeon General and also with the Secretary of the Navy and certain changes were recommended.

And I stated very frankly to the House that I moved to still further insist upon the disagreement and let this amendment go back to conference, with the hope to perfect it and make it acceptable and report it back with the recommendation for agreement. Now, I move, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read on the first page of the supplemental hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs, No. 21, held on June 3, 1918, as follows:

> The CHAIRMAN. I ask you if the department did recommend some legislation with reference to the Dental Corps?
> Secretary DANIELS. Yes; but the department made no recommendation for additional legislation.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will read further in there, he will see where he stated that they prepared a bill, and it was the Tillman bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it has never been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs or by this House?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House still further insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 23.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to further disagree to Senate amendment No. 23.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. The next amendment is No. 33.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman want to make?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to move to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 33.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 33.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to have the amendment reported.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 33: Page 30, after line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"That the authorized enlisted strength of the active list of the Navy is hereby increased from 87,000 to 131,485.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. I do not recall this amendment having been reserved for separate action.
Mr. PADGETT. It was reserved.
Mr. STAFFORD. If it was, of course I withdraw the query I was going to propound to the gentleman.
Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it was reserved.
Mr. Speaker, under existing law the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy of enlisted men is 87,000 plus 6,000 apprentice seamen, making the total permanent enlisted personnel of the Navy 93,000. The Secretary of the Navy—and I speak frankly when I say myself also—thought that there was no urgent necessity for increasing the permanent strength at the present session. The naval officers, however, thought otherwise, and the Secretary, upon full consideration, has recommended that it be increased to this 131,485, in order to afford a permanent enlisted personnel to meet the necessity of manning the ships—that is, the fighting ships, not these auxiliaries and subsidiary ships, of the Navy that will be completed and in commission by the 1st of July, 1919—at the expiration of this fiscal year.

The commissioned personnel of the line depends upon the enlisted personnel of the permanent force. The act of August 29, 1916, provides that the commissioned personnel of the line shall be 4 per cent of the authorized enlisted personnel of the Navy. Under the law at the present time 4 per cent upon the 93,000 would entitle the Navy to 3,700 permanent officers of the line. As a matter of fact, we have only about 2,500, including the graduates from Annapolis last week. Bear in mind that the source of additions to the permanent commissioned personnel comes through the graduation at Annapolis, but they need additional men.

They have set out at length the need during the war for additional officers of the higher ranks as well as the lower ranks. Under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1917, as amended by this act, 4 per cent upon this authorized commissioned personnel would add additional commissioned officers as follows: Eighteen additional temporary admirals, 71 additional temporary captains, 125 additional temporary commanders, 249 additional temporary lieutenant commanders, 578 additional temporary lieutenants, senior grade, and 738 additional temporary lieutenants, junior grade, and ensigns. Admiral Benson, Chief of Operations, charged with the duty of administering the Navy, and Admiral Palmer, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, having special charge of the personnel, insists very earnestly that the necessities of the present war demand and require for the proper manning of our ships this additional temporary increase. Under existing law the temporary officers go out not later than six months after the termination of the war, so that these additional officers would go out not later than six months after the termination of the war, unless in the meantime, by the graduates from Annapolis, the number of permanent officers was so increased that some of them would become permanent officers. For instance, if we graduate, as we did a few days ago, say 200 midshipmen, they become ensigns. They add 200 to the number of permanent officers. Then under the law the distribution is: One per cent admirals, 4 per cent captains, 7 per cent commanders, 14 per cent lieutenant commanders, 31½ per cent lieutenants, 42½ per cent junior lieutenants and ensigns. So that the 200 would be distributed in that rank, and they would move up the line and would give us 2 permanent admirals as an increase and would give 8 captains. Then the next class that graduates from Annapolis would in like manner, but in proportion to the number of graduates, be distributed as I have just stated. It will take the graduates of the academy about eight years, as I figure, to make up this number in the permanent addition to the commissioned personnel of the line. And in the meantime, during the war, we would have these temporary officers.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, that is just the thing I did not catch. You speak of this amendment No. 33, on line 10, page 30, as being temporary.
Mr. PADGETT. No; I did not; I said permanent.
Mr. ROBBINS. This is permanent, then?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. ROBBINS. Then your reference to temporary did not allude to this?
Mr. PADGETT. No. I was explaining the adjustment between the temporary force and the permanent force. As a matter of fact, the House bill authorized 228,000 enlisted men, but of that 228,000, under the law as it is at this minute, 93,000 of them belong to the permanent Navy and the others are under the war strength.
Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; I see where you get your 93,000, and your 4 per cent of that would give 3,720.
Mr. PADGETT. Yes. If you make up 131,485 you will increase the permanent and enlisted personnel from 93,000 or 87,000—the strictly enlisted personnel, leaving out the apprentice seamen—to 131,000. Now, when we get them from Annapolis through graduation we would add the graduates to the number until we got up to 4 per cent, or the 31,000. It would take about eight years of the graduates of the academy to fill up that number. In the meantime, during the war, they will be filled up by temporary promotions.
Mr. ROBBINS. But the promotions made under this amendment, if adopted, are permanent?
Mr. PADGETT. No. This relates only to the enlisted personnel. They are permanent. The new admirals will be temporary, until, as the years go by and the graduates from Annapolis add to the total number of officers, then they will replace, year by year, in proportion as they graduate from the academy.
Mr. ROBBINS. The process of replacing would take place not by demoting, so to speak——
Mr. PADGETT. No; we do not demote anybody.
Mr. ROBBINS. You demote them as they retire?
Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Retire and promote.
Mr. PADGETT. Under the law as it now is, all the temporary officers, thousands of them, will go out not later than six months after the close of the war. That is the act of May 22, 1917.
Mr. ROBBINS. That I understand; but I was not clear as to how you are going to get rid of these permanent officers—3,720.
Mr. PADGETT. No. It adds 1,779. It would take eight years to fill up the gap. We already have a shortage of 1,200, and, adding the 1,700 and some odd to it, makes 3,000 that we are short. We have 2,500 now, in round numbers. We would authorize 5,500, but the difference between 5,500 and 2,500 are temporary officers.
Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. McKENZIE. I simply want to ask the chairman a question for information. How many men are there now enlisted in the entire Navy?
Mr. PADGETT. The authorized enlisted strength of the Navy by the act of May 22, 1917, is 150,000. Then there are in addition to that various others, in the Flying Corps and other corps, and then there are the Naval Reserves, on which there is no limit under the law. All told, in the Navy we have now something like 400,000 men.
Mr. McKENZIE. And no limit on the enlistment in the Naval Reserve?
Mr. PADGETT. No; that is as they are needed and men who come into the service during the war.
Mr. McKENZIE. The reason I am asking the question—and I think the gentleman will understand—is that, in my judgment, there ought to be a limitation somewhere on the number of men enlisted in the Naval Establishment.
Mr. PADGETT. The act of August 29, 1916, provided no limit in the Naval Reserve. That is a reserve that is called upon. They bring in only such as they need; but if an emergency arises we ought not to have everything stopped off so that we could not meet it.
Mr. McKENZIE. I agree as to that; but does not the gentleman think 400,000 is a sufficient number at this time?
Mr. PADGETT. That 400,000 embraces the number, 150,000, that is authorized and, in addition to that, the various other corps I have mentioned—the Medical Corps, the Flying Corps, the Dental Corps, and the Marines.
Mr. McKENZIE. My purpose was far from attempting to reflect on the Navy, as the chairman knows. I would not do that. I am for the Navy, and would give it everything it needs. But I think in this crisis, when we need every available man that we can get everywhere to put into the military forces of our country, it would be a mistake to permit thousands of young men to go into the Naval Reserve, where they would not be needed, with no possibility of their being called.
Mr. PADGETT. They are not taking in any except those that they are using, and then under the regulation issued by the President, effective since the 15th of last December, a man can not get into the Navy or the Reserve or Marine Corps except by a certificate from his local board.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that; but it seems to me that ought to be prohibited, because they are going in by the thousands.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that one of the places where they put these slackers and hide them away and let them escape from doing military duty?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. MADDEN. When the local board exempts them, or, rather, permits them to enter this service, is that permission granted on the request of the Secretary of the Navy or somebody else connected with the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I did not catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the exemption granted by the local boards on the request of the naval authorities?

Mr. PADGETT. No. If the local board grants a certificate to a man, he then goes to the Navy to enlist, and if they need him and have a place to send him to work they enlist him and send him out to the service. If they do not need him, they do not take him.

Mr. MADDEN. Under what circumstances is it possible for the local board to grant a certificate such as the gentleman describes?

Mr. PADGETT. It depends on the local board. Some of the local boards refuse to grant them and others grant them.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they put these men into clerical jobs here in the department or send them to the ships?

Mr. PADGETT. They send them to the ships and stations and things like that.

Mr. BROWNING. If the gentleman will permit, as I understand, a release from the local board has to state that they are so far down on the list that they will not be included in this draft.

Mr. PADGETT. That is right.

Mr. BROWNING. Every one enlisted so far has had that certificate. They are sent to sea and are not here in the departments.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. As I understand, the permanent force of the Navy is about 93,000 men?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Under this bill the authorized strength would be 131,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. And as these young men graduate the officers will be fed in permanently?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. In the meantime these places to fill up the whole complement of all the ships will be temporary officers, whose places will be filled as rapidly as these young men graduate?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and distributed in proportion by promotion.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that. Now, what was the policy of the Navy Department in recommending at this time the permanent increase to 131,000 men during the time the war is going on, instead of waiting until after the war is over, so that we might then more definitely determine what peace strength is really needed?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Benson, as I stated a moment ago, and Admiral Palmer stated very earnestly that the fighting ships now in course of construction which will be completed and commissioned within this year will require this number of men, and that the ships that will be completed thereafter will never leave the Navy requiring less than these 131,000 men.

Mr. SISSON. I suppose that is absolutely true.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. But in the present circumstances why could they not have permitted the Navy to continue with its permanent peace strength of 93,000 men and wait until after the war was over and then determine with more definiteness just what will be the policy of the United States in connection with that of all the other nations of the world interested in the movement?

Mr. PADGETT. That was the view that was first taken by the Secretary of the Navy and also by myself; but the naval people insist that the good of the service demands that it shall be done now, that they need these men, and that in organizing the Navy they can put into the permanent part of the Navy the best men as they develop them from among the enlisted men and constitute the permanent enlistment in the Navy out of the selected and best men, so that after the war, instead of having a very large temporary force, all of them under the law to go out and then to make selections, they can make their selections now.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, the men—not the officers, but the men—could be selected at any time to make up the proper proportion included in the 131,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. But the promotion of permanent officers would depend upon the graduates from the academy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; from Annapolis.

Mr. SISSON. Now, going back to the question of the position taken by the Secretary of the Navy and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am still at a loss to see any really good reason why the naval officers should insist at this time on increasing the permanent strength of the Navy from 93,000 men to 131,000 men, whereas at the close of the war they would have every opportunity to observe all of the men and make the selection of their permanent force after the war was over, rather than at the present time.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand; and, as I stated, in the beginning I had that view myself; but when those who are charged with the responsible duty of the organization and operation of the Navy lay the matter before the Secretary and he changes his mind and asks me to present the matter, and they say it is essential at this time that we should do this, I am not going to put myself in the position of opposing it, although I did entertain a different view.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. I should like to inquire a little further in regard to the status of the Naval Reserve. If I understand it, when men enlist in the Naval Reserve they are sent to a training school, or on board ship, or they are allowed to remain in civil life until they are actually wanted. What is the status?

Mr. PADGETT. They do not use the word "enlist" any more. They use the word "enroll." In the beginning they enrolled a large number of men, to have them available as ships were finished, to organize their operations and call them out. At the present time I do not think they are enrolling any men and leaving them at home. They are sending them now to the training schools, where they undergo a course of intensive training and instruction for three or four months at the camps. Before the war it was six months, but they are cutting it down some now, and then they send them right into the active service.

Mr. BURNETT. After the training?

Mr. PADGETT. After the training.

Mr. BURNETT. They are not taking any into the reserve now?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they are taking them into the reserve, but they are not taking them in and allowing them to remain at home, as they did in the beginning.

Mr. BURNETT. The reason I inquired is that I have three young men who enrolled in the reserve, and they were anxious to get into the active service, and they wrote me in regard to that. I wanted to know just exactly their status. They have to go through the training school first, do they?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Are they on the pay roll of the Government as soon as they are enrolled in the reserve?

Mr. PADGETT. When they are called to active service they go upon the pay roll.

Mr. BURNETT. And that would mean when they went into the training school, or went on board ship?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the amendment in relation to the Naval Reserve in compliance with the recommendations of the Navy Department?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I am moving to concur in this amendment, which was adopted in accordance with the view of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes to support his motion?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that Congress should recognize that for long past it has been due and our duty to make a permanent increase of the Navy. After this war is over, and no matter what may be the result of that war, the nations that stand for peace must hold the seas, must be in a position to prevent piracies like those that have occurred, and must be able to prevent filibustering by nations which may desire to exploit themselves in South America or in Africa. The nations that stand for peace must be able to defend their coasts from invasion, to maintain their communications by sea free of piracy, and to protect other nations. Unless they can do that, we and they will have to become military nations ourselves.

This is a small increase in the personnel of the Navy. It is not so great as we may have to make. The nations that stand for peace, and especially England, America, and France, will have to protect civilization upon the seas, and this motion to concur in this amendment and enlarge our standing naval force is none too early. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is all right, but he is not doing anything.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes, he is.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. He can not be, because he has nothing there to do it with.

Mr. PADGETT. He has something to do over there, looking over the situation in other countries.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Oh, they have a few canoes over there.

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Sims is a vice admiral.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Who is the fourth full admiral—Benson?

Mr. PADGETT. He is here, and is an admiral by virtue of his position.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How many vice admirals have we?

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielding to these gentlemen to carry on the debate in his five minutes?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee to correctly answer the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PADGETT. In just a moment. The law authorized the appointment while at sea of six admirals and vice admirals to be distributed in two ranks as the President may direct.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Which are the two ranks?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral and vice admiral. Just at this moment, whether there are three admirals and three vice admirals or two admirals and four vice admirals I am not prepared to say definitely, but my impression is that there are two admirals and four vice admirals.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If there are four vice admirals, how many rear admirals are there?

Mr. PADGETT. All of them, because sometimes they come away from sea and they cease to be vice admirals.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I want to be fair and I wanted to get that in the RECORD. How many rear admirals are there?

Mr. PADGETT. Under the law the commissioned personnel, as I stated a moment ago, is 4 per cent of the enlisted personnel. Under existing law they would be entitled to 3,700 commissioned officers of the line. That would entitle us to 37 admirals.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now——

Mr. PADGETT. Let me answer the question. We have not but about 2,500 permanent officers, including the ones who graduated at Annapolis the other day. I have a letter here from Admiral Palmer, written a day or two before, saying there are 2,200, and there were 200 graduated, so we would be entitled to about 25 rear admirals in the permanent list. Then there is a difference between that and the 37 on the temporary list, but that temporary list was filled up before the graduation at Annapolis and a redistribution will be made as of the 1st of July.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, there are 37 rear admirals at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. Not including the ones on the retired list; that does not include the Staff Corps.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And this addition of 100,000 men—50,000, from 131,000 to 181,000, and another authorization of 50,000 which is in the next paragraph—would increase the number of rear admirals, would it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I have said that a number of times, that under this amendment——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But I wanted to get it all together.

Mr. PADGETT. Under this amendment, if we agree to it and fix the personnel at 131,485, we will increase the authorized number of commissioned officers of the line to 5,500 instead of 3,700. We will then be short 3,000 officers on the permanent list instead of 1,200, as now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is all undoubtedly true; but what I am after is in answer to the pathetic appeal of the Secretary of the Navy that he has not admirals enough. Now, how many admirals—how many rear admirals—will be created by this 50,000——

Mr. PADGETT. Eighteen.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. So we will have 55. Then there is another authorization of 50,000 more——

Mr. PADGETT. No; that 50,000 is only in the case of emergency for temporary increase, and that does not increase the admirals or commanders or captains at all.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How many of those 37——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I will answer the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How many of the 37 rear admirals are now at sea and how many ashore?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell you.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is there any reason why a captain of the Navy could not perform the function of rear admiral—that is, the commander of a flotilla of destroyers?

Mr. PADGETT. They have been doing it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why could not that condition continue?

Mr. PADGETT. It may to some extent.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman let me answer the question? The truth of the matter is on the European station we have two destroyer squadrons——

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think if I were the gentleman I should go far into that. I do not think we want to go into that.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am merely repeating what we have in the hearings. In Admiral Palmer's letters——

Mr. PADGETT. I asked that be not published.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is that so?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say this. We have no designated commander for either of our torpedo squadrons in European waters to-day; both of them are serving under Admiral Bailey, of the British Navy, and if we designate the captain over there he could not supersede Admiral Bailey.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to make one remark, but I do not want to take up the gentleman's time. The gentleman said this communication of the admiral ought not to be published, but it has been published in the New York Times, and I do not see why we should not know about it.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not know it. We did not publish it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not possibly follow what the gentleman from Illinois has just said, but I assume it has been published there are two squadrons of flotilla that have not a commander. Why have not they a commander? We have got plenty of men in the Navy; the city is full of them here. If there are not enough rear admirals, why in heaven's name can not they send a captain over to do the work?

Mr. PADGETT. The admiral in charge of personnel, Admiral Palmer, and Admiral Benson, charged with the responsibility of the management of the Navy and the conduct of the war, say that we ought to have an admiral in charge——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then these flotillas might better come home, because we have not the men with an admiral's straps on their shoulders to send over.

Mr. PADGETT. No——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am perfectly willing to admit that does not appeal to me.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, may I have two minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I was rather astonished a moment ago at my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] stating that he would vote for this amendment, but he did so reluctantly, and very much in the nature of the Secretary of the Navy's reluctance in agreeing to this permanent increase in the Navy.

Do you gentlemen realize that unless this amendment is carried into effect after this war is over we are going to have skeleton crews on our ships and we are going to be confronted with the same situation that we had a year ago, of ships tied up at the docks of the various navy yards with hardly anyone on them?

Mr. PADGETT. That condition does not obtain, because we carry 228,000.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is a temporary increase of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. They are enlisted for four years. Do not make any such statement as that.

Mr. BRITTEN. I reiterate what I said a moment ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand my colleague to say that the Secretary of the Navy was reluctant to agree to this increase?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. Until last week. It is that old idea of preventing a permanent increase in the Navy that carries with it certain increases in line officers. There is not any question about that. Gentlemen on the floor to-day say that they will agree to this amendment, but they do so reluctantly. When the war is over and we have no officers and no permanent force because of the present temporary increase we will not appropriate for their continuance.

Mr. TALBOTT. You did not vote for the war.

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not vote for the war, but I voted repeatedly to make it effective, and I will go further in real necessary war legislation than the gentleman from Maryland will to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no.

Mr. TALBOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman says "Oh, no." If it had not been for the Republicans on the committee three years ago we would not to-day have the great three-year program, which the big Navy men forced on the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, just 30 seconds. The gentleman from Illinois says I was against this increase.

Mr. BRITTEN. You said so.

Mr. BUTLER. But I was not reluctant in voting for the war. I know what this means to my people. And if I had voted against the war I would not vote for this measure.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 33.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The gentleman from Tennessee moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 33.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Amendment No. 37 is the next amendment, on page 32.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, after line 6, strike out the following: "The rank and title of major general is hereby created in the Marine Corps, and the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one major general, who shall at all times be junior in rank to the major general commandant; and also one temporary major general in the Marine Corps, who shall at all times be junior to the permanent major general," and insert the following:

"During the period of the present war the commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank and title of lieutenant general commandant and shall receive the pay and allowances of a lieutenant general in the Army, and the rank and title of major general is hereby created in the Marine Corps, and the President is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one permanent and one temporary major general: Provided, That the major generals of the Marine Corps, both line and staff, shall at all times be junior in rank to the commandant."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, this amendment reincorporates language stricken out, with the additional language that during the war the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank and title and pay and allowances of a lieutenant general in the Army. He now has the rank, title, and pay allowances of a major general in the Army. That is the only change and the only addition that is made in this Senate amendment, namely, the question of the promotion from major general to lieutenant general of the commandant of the Marine Corps.

I am myself in a little peculiar position, and I want to make a frank statement to the House. My admiration for the corps is so great for the work that they have done and are doing, my respect and admiration and my personal friendship for Gen. Barnett is such, that whatever honor or promotion might come to him would be a pleasure to me. Personally, however, speaking from a strictly military standpoint, I do not know of any strict military reason why the promotion should be made. But with the statement I have made, the great work that they have done, I am going to refer it to the House to say what they want to do about it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment just read and concur in the same. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] is recognized.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make any statement except this: That I admire fighting people, and these people have been fighting, and somebody has brought them up to the efficiency they now have. And for that reason I ask to have this House concur in that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] desire recognition?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; I do. How much time, Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BUTLER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] on several occasions referred to propaganda that is going on in connection with this Marine Corps increase. The great enthusiasm of the American public for what the marines are doing on the other side is not propaganda by any means. The work the Marine Corps has done at Chateau-Thierry is not propaganda, where they outfought, outslugged, and outshot the Germans at their own game of viciousness. The marines handled the Germans as if they were schoolboys, and the fields were littered with their dead. Is that propaganda?

All the world, excepting our enemies, is proud of the United States Marines, who have shown that the Germans can be licked at their own game of grueling, driving, smashing military tactics, and it will remain for American "huskies" to drive the wedge that will start the Kaiser's troops on the toboggan.

Stage freight or nervousness under fire is unknown to a trained marine, who shoots true irrespective of the carnage about him.

At Chateau-Thierry the Kaiser's seasoned troops were driven back over ground covered with their dead and wounded, who were outfought, outshot, and outslugged at their own viciousness.

For more than a hundred years past the marines have had to fight their way to success against the prejudices of both the Army and the Navy, until to-day, when they are recognized the world over as one of the grandest aggregations of military efficiency on the entire globe.

During the month of May 5,200 marines were enlisted from approximately 40,000 applicants, thus showing the care and discrimination with which these scrappy volunteers are selected.

After most intensive training they are sent across with a food supply for 30 days and other equipment to last them 6 months.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. He also says that the marines are being led by Army officers. The marines are being led by marine officers. It is true the commander in chief over there is an Army officer. The great ranking generals are Army officers, but the marines are being led by marines, who were trained over here and trained under their able commandant and his excellent corps of line and staff officers. What good would a football team be if it were improperly trained and sent to an adjoining State to play in a game for a championship? Would it be any good under any leadership? Certainly not. Gen. Barnett does not have to go to the other side in order to get credit for what he has done. He has brought the Marine Corps up to its wonderful state of efficiency, so that they can go to the other side and outfight the best Germany has.

Let us look this thing squarely in the face. In the course of a couple of months from now there will be 85,000 men in the Marine Corps—75,500 under the present bill and about 10,000 reserves. Suppose there is no military necessity for increasing this rank. Call it a gratuity, if you want to; say it is a recognition of faithful service to the Government; call it anything you please. He is going to be in command of practically 85,000 men, and they are probably the greatest body of fighting men that ever lived. They can outfight 85,000 Germans in any field, under any conditions, and that is due almost entirely, irrespective of what my good friend says, to their training here—not necessarily over there. The boys who go over the top with the marines are not Army officers; they are marines, every one of them. Certainly they are all under Gen. Pershing——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not now. Certainly, they are all under Gen. Pershing; but the boys who go over the top with the marines, the boys who know no stage fright under fire, the boys who can shoot with unerring aim when surrounded by blood and gore and thunder are the marines. You ask why the marines are so superior to the other fighting forces. It is because of their intensive training. It is because of the system that they undergo here on his side of the ocean. Why not give these gentlemen here who are delivering the goods for us on this side the benefit that is due to them?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. Suppose we increase the rank of the Commandant of the Marine Corps? It is a temporary increase for the period of the war. It applies only to the Commandant of the Marine Corps. If Gen. Barnett were let out to-morrow, as my good friend says he may be under the Overman Act—which I do not think was a nice insinuation—some one else will take his place, and he will be a lieutenant general if this Senate amendment prevails, and I hope it will. The gentleman said when I wanted to interrupt him, but he was busy otherwise, that this amendment does not provide for the men in the line, the boys who are doing the fighting and dying on the other side.

Why does he not call attention to the fact that in this bill we are creating 2 new major generals for the men of the line, 6 brigadier generals for the men of the line, 22 colonels and 22 lieutenant colonels for the men of the line, and hundreds of lower grades? The line is getting "its," in the parlance of the street. This amendment gives merely to the highest-ranking officer in the Marine Corps, the man largely responsible for the wonderful efficiency of that corps, an increase in rank corresponding with that of vice admiral in the Navy, for the period of the war and that is all there is to it. The Secretary of the Navy in a letter to the conferees said he saw no military reason for this increase—no military reason. Do you gentleman know that every bureau chief in the Navy without any one exception is being increased in rank or in pay under this bill? What is the military necessity for that? There is none. I am in favor of their getting the increase. They ought to have it under existing conditions. They are doing wonderful work and I am glad to reward them and I know Congress will be glad to reward them. They should be rewarded under these conditions. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says if you increase this commanding officer you will hurt the morale and the esprit of the Marine Corps. Nothing will give such an increased esprit to that corps as to make their commanding officer a lieutenant general and to know that the corps is recognized as a great fighting body in this way. There is not the slightest question that you are going to hurt the morale of the Marine Corps by recognizing the officer at the head of that great fighting aggregation. The gentleman says the bill fails to take care of the soldiers who are dying on the other side. That is a delightful argument! We take care of the marines, take care of them in excellent shape. There is a lady and gentleman now sitting in the gallery who have come from Chicago because their boy practically ran away from home at 19 years of age to join the marines. They wanted to know what his prospects were, this youngster of 19 years, Paul R. Brauer, of Chicago, a German-American, whose father, Caspar Brauer, was born in Germany. This fine boy wanted to get in the front-line trenches as quickly as possible, and is over at Philadelphia to-day, came through here night before last with his "buddy," Gilbert C. Smith, of the same age, along with him. They are trying, as they say in Chicago, to "bust" into the Marine Corps. That is the sort that makes up the Marine Corps, that makes the corps what it is; that is the spirit that makes sharpshooters and marksmen, and that is the reason the corps is so desirable. That is the type that makes up the aggregate which Gen. Barnett commands and I am for recognizing and rewarding this gentleman who has brought the marines up to this wonderful state of efficiency. Men whom we can send across the water and who can outslug and outfight and outshoot the Germans.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania said in substance that Barnett and his staff officers here are swivel-chair officers. The commandant is a graduate of the Naval Academy and Adjt. Gen. Lauchheimer is a graduate of the Naval Academy, and they have given their lives to the service, and the other two gentlemen to whom he referred have been brevetted for gallantry on the field of battle. How does the gentleman know that Gen. Barnett is not going to be sent into the field of battle? How does he know he is going to be retained here? He does not know any more than you or I or anybody else. He has been in the field, and when he gets in again he will deliver the goods as he has before.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And he told our committee last year he is very anxious to go again.

Mr. BRITTEN. From my point of view it should not be necessary to talk about the Marine Corps. Everybody should be glad to do what they can for the marines, and this increased rank is temporary, for the period of the war, and applies only to the commandant, whoever he may be, during that period.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have not quite answered the gentleman, and I would like a little more time. We have plenty of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has control of the time.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Tennessee is going to have an hour, and I would like very much—I am going to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]—however, I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. BRITTEN. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] tried to show by his questions and the replies from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that the Marine Corps was a bureau. Think of it! The Marine Corps a bureau and Gen. Barnett nothing more than a bureau chief! The Marine Corps is one of the three military forces of the country organized in 1775, and is just as much an independent branch of the military forces as the Army or Navy. Gen. Barnett is no bureau chief; the Marine Corps is not a bureau, it is one of the three military branches of our Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would it not be true that if this bill passes without the Senate amendment that the officers of equivalent rank in the Marine Corps would be all of less actual rank than similar officers in the Army and Navy, respectively?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true; but I have not adverted to that, as that amendment comes up later.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was discussing something in connection with it.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is a different amendment entirely. This amendment merely provides increased rank for the commandant while he is commandant and only during the period of the war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does it not apply to this amendment also?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I do not think it does.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Without this amendment the commandant of the Marine Corps would not be of as high a rank as a similar officer in the Army or Navy.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; major general. He now enjoys the rank of a major general, but this increased rank has no parallel case in the Army or Navy.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it higher?

Mr. BRITTEN. It is higher.

Mr. PADGETT. In the Army there is a lieutenant general and in the Navy the vice admiral, which corresponds to lieutenant general.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Exactly; therefore without this amendment the commandant of the Marine Corps would be of relatively lower rank.

Mr. BRITTEN. Than vice admiral, of course.

Since its original organization in 1775, the Marine Corps has been noted for its high efficiency, and at the present time it has not deteriorated in this respect, for there is abundant evidence that to-day it is one of the most efficient military organizations in the United States. The present high state of efficiency, the highest the corps has ever had, has been reached and maintained during the incumbency of the present commandant, Maj. Gen. George Barnett, to whom much credit is due, and he has been gracious enough to publicly and officially state that much of the success which he has attained in the administration of the affairs of the corps is due to the earnest and helpful cooperation of the heads of its three staff departments, Brig. Gens. Lauchheimer, Richards, and McCawley.

Only very recently a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House conducted an investigation into the administration of naval affairs, and in its report, known as the Oliver Report, commented most favorably upon the administration of the Marine Corps. The report stated, inter alia:

> The committee was much impressed with the keen, personal, active interest shown by Gen. George Barnett, commander of this corps, together with the officers under him, in everything pertaining to the welfare, comfort, and advancement of the enlisted personnel. This individual interest on the part of the officers is a very large contributing factor, we believe, to the well-known high efficiency and splendid spirit and morale of this corps.
> All of the emergencies which the corps has been called upon to meet have been met by the officers and enlisted men in the most expeditious and efficient manner without either friction or confusion. These results not only vindicate the system of organization but also reflect credit upon those officers who are responsible for the maintenance, direction, and efficiency of the corps.

No one questions the high state of efficiency which the Marine Corps has attained, nor that the present administration thereof deserves credit therefor, and consequently, if recognition is given to the officials of the War and Navy Departments as a reward for their services, there can certainly be no good reason why equal recognition should not be accorded to the officials of the Marine Corps, especially as the Oliver report states that credit reflects upon those officers who are responsible for the maintenance, direction, and efficiency of the corps.

In view of the foregoing, it is urged that the provision which has been inserted in the bill by the Senate, making the major general commandant of the corps a lieutenant general during the present emergency, is not only a proper and well-merited recognition of the valuable services rendered by the efficient head of this military organization, but is also, according to military practice, the proper rank to be held by the officer who will command a force of nearly 85,000 officers and men; for that is the total authorized strength of the corps by the provisions of this bill.

It is deemed pertinent to refer to the fact that this increased rank for the commandant of the Marine Corps has not been inserted in the bill as the outcome of any efforts on the part of Gen. Barnett, as he has invariably declined to take any part in any attempt to secure the enactment of any legislation for his personal benefit. The amendment has been inserted by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate in recognition of the valuable services rendered by that officer.

Referring to the provisions of the bill inserted by the Senate, which places the heads of the three staff departments of the Marine Corps on a parity with the chiefs of bureaus and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, this is also not only a just and proper reward for duty well performed, as has been stated in the report of the Oliver Board and as testified to by the major general commandant in his official utterances, but, what is even more important, it tends to place the heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps on a parity with the officers occupying exactly similar positions in the Army and the Navy.

By the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, it was provided for the Army that—

> Hereafter the chief of any existing staff corps, department, or bureau, except as is otherwise provided for the Chief of Staff, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general.

In the naval appropriation bill, as reported to the House, it is provided that—

> Hereafter chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department, including the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, shall, while so serving, have corresponding rank and shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

The heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps were inadvertently overlooked when this proviso was drafted, and if the bill had been finally enacted as it then read all the chiefs of bureaus of the Military Establishment of the United States would be benefited except the heads of the three staff departments of the Marine Corps, who are, and have been recognized as being, "chiefs of bureaus," who have done most efficient work and are now doing efficiently a vastly increased amount of work. This oversight was remedied by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate.

The first intimation that was had that Mr. BUTLER, who had so often made such complimentary remarks about the staff officers of the corps, was not in favor of according to the heads of departments in the Marine Corps similar recognition to that accorded to the chiefs of bureaus and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, was when the amendment was offered by Mr. PADGETT, the chairman of the House Naval Committee, giving to them the same reward as that given to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department. Mr. BUTLER'S reasons for objecting to this amendment are embodied in his statement on the floor of the House, as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 5360, Friday, April 19, 1918, as follows:

> Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, of course you understand what this means. All the grades that we have raised the Marines to-day are temporary except three. When this war is over the Marine Corps will again resolve itself into a force of 17,000 men. The head of the corps is a major general. One major general is provided permanently. One major general is included in this bill, to be provided temporarily. All those men lose their grades at the conclusion of the war except these now considered. And I will say now, Mr. Chairman, there are always plenty of men here in the House to stand up for the men who do not go to war. I always stand up for the fighting men. Now, do this thing if you want to, and when the war is over you will have three major generals on the staff of this little corps and only one among the fighting men. Are you going to do it? Will you agree to the proposed amendment?
> Who makes the corps? It is true that I never knew a more efficient quartermaster than McCawley. I knew him before you drew a breath. I know these men well. You can not praise them too highly but what I will try to help you. But I will not consent to giving these same men, stationed always in Washington, these grades to the disadvantage of the fighting men of the Marine Corps.
> * * * * * * *

It will be noted that Mr. BUTLER principally bases his objections on the ground that the heads of the staff departments are not, as he calls them, "fighting men." They are not "fighting men" if duty in the trenches is meant, but they are "fighting men" in that they are a part, and a necessary and important part, of a fighting machine, and are as essential to the efficiency of that machine as are the men who go into the trenches. The military organization of the present day is a composite one, and the staff officers of such an organization are absolutely essential to its efficiency. No fighting machine can reach the highest state of efficiency and usefulness unless it is properly cared for; and it is the heads of the staff departments who are charged with this all-important duty. The records of the corps bear ample testimony to the fact that the heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps have done their duty more than well in this respect.

The fact that the heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps remain in Washington is due to no preference shown them nor to the exercise of undue influence on their part, but is the result of legislation enacted by Congress. It is presumed that the Congress would not have taken this action had it not been considered essential to the best interests and efficiency of the Military Establishment.

Mr. BUTLER also states that he "will not consent to giving these same men, stationed always in Washington, these grades to the disadvantage of the fighting men of the Marine Corps." It is not apparent how the enactment of this amendment would work to the disadvantage of anyone, and, in fact, it does not. It really results in a positive advantage to the fighting men, as the detail system for the staff is now in force, and the "fighting men" will be in time eligible for detail as head of a staff department. It takes nothing from the line of the Marine Corps, but, on the contrary, would add to its prestige, and only gives to the heads of the staff departments of the corps the same reward which has already been given to officers holding similar positions in the Army, and which will be given by this bill to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy, all of whom are performing similar duties and occupying similar positions.

In his remarks Mr. BUTLER stated that he was opposed to the major generals of the staff because after the war these three staff officers would have that rank in a corps of only 17,000 men. With all due deference to Mr. BUTLER, he does not know, in fact, no one knows or can predict, what the permanent strength of the corps will be after the war, for it is impossible to foresee what the then conditions will be. It is fair, however, to assume that after the war and when the Marine Corps is reorganized it will never have a permanent strength of less than 25,000 men. With that strength, or even a lesser strength, the heads of the staff departments will, in accordance with military practice and proper organization, be entitled to the rank of major general.

Mr. BUTLER does not object to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy being made rear admirals, although they are no more "fighting men" than are the heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps. In fact, the relationship of the heads of the staff corps of the War Department to the Army proper, and that of the chiefs of bureaus and the Judge Advocate General of the Navy to the Navy proper, is no wise different but is in all respects exactly similar to the relationship of the heads of the staff departments of the Marine Corps to the Marine Corps proper. If they are nonfighting, all are nonfighting. As a matter of fact, they are "fighting men" in the commonly accepted use of that term, and it is therefore unfair to discriminate against them in the matter of a reward for a reason which is untenable. Two of the Marine Corps staff heads, Richards and McCawley, have been "fighting men" within the meaning of the term as used by Mr. BUTLER, as is evidenced by the brevets they hold for gallantry in action with the enemy.

The Marine Corps has admittedly been brought to a very high state of efficiency, for which, the commandant states, the three heads of the staff departments are largely responsible. To deny to them the recognition for work well done which has been accorded all the other chiefs of bureaus and heads of staff departments of the Military Establishment, who occupy similar positions, would certainly be an unjust and unwarranted discrimination.

Mr. BUTLER has been for years the champion of the Marine Corps, both in and out of Congress, and has loudly praised the work of certain of the staff, and why he now desires to deny them this reward is not apparent. When the conferees of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House had their hearings in August, 1916, on certain amendments added to the bill by the Senate, Mr. BUTLER took occasion to make the most complimentary remarks about the staff officers of the Marine Corps, as will be seen from a reading of pages 4401, 4402, and 4403 of the published proceedings of that hearing in 1916. On page 4401 Mr. BUTLER stated:

> Mr. BUTLER. Will you allow me to make a little statement? I would like it to go into the record.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
> Mr. BUTLER. I believe that the existence of the Marine Corps is owing largely to the services of one man. He came to its rescue at the time it needed him, and that man is Col. Lauchheimer. That is my opinion, which I have heretofore expressed publicly, and I desire to have my opinion written in the record, although I do not know that it is of any value.

And on page 4402:

> Mr. BUTLER. And I know further that the fine condition of the Marine Corps—I mean to say its contentment and the fact that it is well clothed and well fed—is largely due to the services of Col. McCawley. Now, if we could distinguish these two men whose services have been so valuable to this corps, I am ready to distinguish them. * * *

And on page 4403:

Mr. BUTLER. But we may not have another Barnett; we may not have another Lauchheimer; we may not have another McCawley; and we may not have another Richards. * * * I believe that men in these responsible positions, and who have learned their duties better than anybody else can learn them, ought to be continued.

Only a few days ago, when Mr. BUTLER was making his objections to the amendment introduced by Mr. PADGETT to the pending bill, he stated, after I had made some remarks with regard to the adjutant and inspector and the quartermaster of the corps—see page 5360 of the RECORD—

I know these men well. You can not praise them too highly but what I will try to help you.

In view of the numerous expressions by Mr. BUTLER of his admiration of the work done by the staff departments of the Marine Corps, a few of which have been cited supra, it is impossible to understand his present attitude.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in his remarks, criticizes the tenure of office of the heads of the staff departments, and yet he is on record as having expressed his approval of the present organization of the headquarters of the Marine Corps when he stated, during the hearings by the conferees of the House on the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917:

I believe that men in these responsible positions—

Referring to the major general commandant, the adjutant and inspector, the quartermaster, and the paymaster of the Marine Corps—and who have learned their duties better than anybody else can learn them, ought to be continued.

See page 4403 of the published report of the above-mentioned hearings.

Junius B. Wood, who is now with the American Army in France, representing the Chicago Daily News on the battle front, on June 1 wrote:

Fourteen minutes after a small detachment of American marines entered the front trenches for the first time the Germans put down a grilling barrage, followed by an attack in overwhelming numbers. How the little group withstood the baptism of fire, repelled the attack, captured prisoners, and practically wiped out the raiding party is not told in the cold phraseology of the official report.

The affray was replete with deeds of individual heroism. Such deeds are becoming matters of course with the new Army which is now helping to hold back the onrush of Kaiserism.

Mr. Wood, in whose comment I have the very highest confidence, was with the American landing forces at Vera Cruz, Mexico, some years ago, and was later with Gen. Pershing in northern Mexico. He is recognized as a most conscientious correspondent, not being given to exaggeration or to the spectacular.

On last Sunday, June 16, 1918, the New York American printed the following article, which is but one of many I have observed:

WHOLE SPIRIT OF COUNTRY BEHIND MOVE TO HONOR THE MARINES THROUGH THEIR ABLE COMMANDER.

[By John Temple Graves.]

WASHINGTON, June 15.

With every allowance for the enthusiasm of comrades and commanders, and the national pride that might inspire the most optimistic estimate of our military performances, Washington and the country now accept it as a fact that the American troops have behaved magnificently in France; that they have borne themselves with a courage, dash, initiative, and steadiness at Cantigny and elsewhere worthy of the finest traditions of the race; and that the Marine Corps are really the toast and admiration of the European battle fields.

The renewed inspiration that the valor and intelligence of the marines has given to the allies is past all estimate, and the serious amazement their effectiveness in arms has carried to the skeptical but keenly observant Germans is profoundly significant of their value in the ultimate winning of the war.

The fact that our splendid sea soldiers had stormed one German position after another north of the Marne, and from Château-Thierry to Torcy had "knocked the prestige of the Kaiser's shock troops into a cocked hat," has literally thrilled the Republic with pride and expectation.

CRACK REGIMENTS OF WAR.

At the present rate the men of the American Marine Corps, historically "first to land and first to fight," are likely to rank as the crack regiments of the whole war.

It is natural enough that the American spirit of quick and substantial appreciation for great deeds should leap toward some opportunity to express to the Marine Corps some practical expression of the Nation's recognition and gratitude. And no other way seemed so natural and reasonable as to advance the rank of the head of that wonderful body of troops.

Maj. Gen. George Barnett is the commanding general and the idol of the Marine Corps. For eight years he has been commander, their disciplinarian, their guide, counselor, and friend. The present corps was given its present superb equipment and prestige under Gen. Barnett's inspiring enthusiasm and discipline. And the Marine Corps regard him with boundless devotion. A bill introduced into the Senate to promote George Barnett to be a lieutenant general, as a tribute to the splendid conduct of his marines, and a testimonial to his admirable training, was passed by the Senate with enthusiasm.

HALTED IN HOUSE.

When the popular measure reached the House it was halted there for a brief period by a suggestion from Secretary Daniels that the promotion of Gen. Barnett would rank him above some of the gallant officers of the Navy, and the suggestion of Secretary Daniels is both laudable and natural.

But the whole spirit of the country is behind the movement to reward and honor the marines through their beloved and able commander. It may not be absolutely necessary from a military point of view to advance Gen. Barnett a grade higher in rank, but it is absolutely desirable that such a service as his Marine Corps has rendered in a world cause should be recognized and rewarded for the inspiration of the corps and of the soldiers and other commanders to follow this shining example.

And since there is no objection anywhere to the proposition to raise the Marine Corps to 75,000 men, it would seem that a command raised from 20,000 men to 75,000 was worthy of the enlarged rank.

When the time comes for our splendid Navy to get into the actual fighting zone there need be no doubt that they will bear themselves so gallantly that they will deserve and receive the advance in rank which the whole Republic will rejoice to see them have. Meanwhile the House is likely to give the incomparable marines their lieutenant general.

A misunderstanding as to the purpose of this amendment seems to exist, which should be corrected.

Congress has already legislated giving the rank of major general to all the bureau chiefs of the Army, viz, the Adjutant General, Inspector General, Surgeon General, Quartermaster General, Chief of Ordnance, Chief of Engineers, Chief of Insular Affairs, Chief Signal Officer, and Judge Advocate General, all nonfighting offices and the officers holding them by necessity being stationed at headquarters in the National Capital.

The legislation proposed in this bill seeks to place the Navy bureau chiefs, viz, Chief of Bureau of Navigation, Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair, Chief of Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks, Chief of Naval Operations, Chief of Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and Chief of Bureau of Steam Engineering, on the same parity of rank and pay, and further proposes to elevate the Judge Advocate General from a captain to a rear admiral, the grade corresponding with major general. All these bureau chiefs are likewise nonfighting officials and from the same necessity are stationed in Washington. All of them, except the Judge Advocate General, who is only a captain, now have the rank of rear admiral, but only the pay of a commodore or brigadier general.

Amendment 47 attempts to remove the discrimination against the Marine Corps by placing its three bureau heads on the same parity as to rank and pay. These officials, while they hold the offices of adjutant and inspector, quartermaster, and paymaster, are in precisely the same category as the similar officials in the Army and Navy and are stationed in Washington. Congress has not seen fit to regard that fact with disfavor as far as the Army and Navy is concerned, as is evidenced by enacted and proposed legislation, so why should there be any criticism of these Marine bureau chiefs? We all know the fine work done by the Marine Corps, and there has not been a word of criticism during this war of the manner in which that corps has been handled; in fact, the Oliver report commends it highly, and Gen. Barnett handsomely gives much of the credit to these three officers, who will be temporarily benefited by this amendment, and if personal legislation was being proposed they would be amply entitled to this trifling reward; but this is not personal legislation and is not intended for the benefit of anyone, but is simply a just recognition of a gallant and efficient branch of the service for which all of us have high regard and admiration, and I do not believe the Members of this House will consent to punishing the Marine Corps by unjust discrimination against it.

The adoption of the Senate amendment does not take away anything from the "fighting men" of the corps, who are provided for in this bill by 2 major generals, 6 brigadier generals, 22 colonels, 22 lieutenant colonels, and a vast number of officers of lower grades, and when the present staff of the corps is absorbed in the line, as the law provides for, the "fighting men" will, in addition, be eligible to these three positions by detail; thus the line is a gainer if this amendment is adopted.

I am as much an admirer of the "fighting men" as anyone, and I may tell you that two of these staff officers, Richards and McCawley, have been fighting men and received brevet commissions for distinguished conduct in the presence of the enemy. Neither they nor any other staff officer can take anything from a line officer either by rank or otherwise, as staff officers do not have command, and these bureau chiefs will always be at headquarters under the commandant of the corps, who will always rank them by this bill. If this amendment prevails the total expense per annum will be $6,000, in an appropriation bill of nearly $2,000,000,000. It seems picayune to waste all this time on such a trifle and looks like fishing for minnows with the big fish escaping.

Two years ago the total appropriation for the Navy was less than the amount appropriated in this bill for the Marine Corps.

It has been said that after the war the Marine Corps will be reduced to 17,400 men; but that I am unwilling to believe, no matter how the law now reads, and I fully expect to see a Marine Corps of 30,000 or even 50,000 men for many years to meet naval needs alone. Let us not be unjust to this corps, but treat it fairly, as its record warrants, and let its officers feel that Congress will applaud good work and not give punishment for it.

The chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department were given the rank of rear admiral by the act of March 3, 1899 (vide 30 Stat., 1005). The same act which gave this rank to the bureau chiefs increased the strength of the Navy to 20,000, and also appropriated $57,297,569.78 for the naval service. In the present naval appropriation bill the total appropriations for the Marine Corps alone are $160,000,000, exclusive of public works. The following statement is interesting for comparison purposes:

Statement to close of business, June 7, 1918.

Enlisted, Marine Corps	41,821
Enrolled, Reserves (excluding classes 1 and 5)	4,851
Enrolled, Reserves (classes 1 and 5)	121
Enrolled, National Naval Volunteers	814
	47,607
Commissioned and warrant officers	1,477
	49,084
Estimated pending at recruit depots	2,500
Grand total	51,584
Enlisted in June, 1918 (1st to 7th, inclusive)	1,136

The Secretary stated in his testimony before the board that the duties of the chiefs of bureaus of the Marine Corps were not relatively as important as those of the Navy chiefs of bureaus, and that they were not, therefore, entitled to the increased rank.

Attention is invited to the fact that when the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department were rear admirals, the enlisted strength of the Navy was only about half that which the Marine Corps will be as the result of this bill. The commandant of the Marine Corps will command 85,000 men, and the chiefs of bureaus of the Marine Corps will handle the affairs of 85,000 men, and it is therefore believed that they are fully entitled to the recognition given them by the Senate.

The chiefs of bureaus of the Marine Corps perform duties practically similar to the chiefs of bureaus of the War Department and the Navy Department. For instance, the Adjutant and Inspector of the Marine Corps performs for the Marine Corps all the duties that are performed for the Army by The Adjutant General of the Army and by the Inspector General of the Army. The Quartermaster of the Marine Corps performs for the Marine Corps all the duties that the Quartermaster General of the Army performs for the Army, except the payment of the troops. In addition thereto he supplies the Marine Corps with its ordnance, signal equipment, and engineer equipment; in other words, the complete equipment of the corps rests upon him. Under the present bill the expenditure of $110,000,000 is made under his direction. The Paymaster pays all officers and men in the corps and disburses $50,000,000.

In other words, the heads of the three staff departments of the Marine Corps perform all the duties which are performed by the entire heads of the departments of the War Department. It is believed that these duties are comparable especially with those performed by the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, whose promotion by two grades is provided for in this bill.

Since 1890, when the detail system was adopted for the chiefs of bureaus of the Army, there has not been a single chief of bureau but who, upon the expiration of his four-year term, has been reappointed, and not a single chief of bureau who, after his original temporary appointment, has not served continuously in the same capacity from one four-year term to another four-year term until he reached the age of 64, the statutory age for retirement, or until his death, if the latter should occur before reaching the age of 64.

This would certainly seem to indicate that it has been found conducive to the highest efficiency to have one man serve in the capacity of head of a staff department or bureau continuously.

If favorable action be taken on amendment No. 47, it will not in any way militate against the "fighting men" whom Mr. BUTLER feels he should protect. On the contrary, it will ultimately benefit the "fighting men" through the medium of the detail system which was adopted for the staff of the Marine Corps by the act of August 29, 1916.

Furthermore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], in his various arguments, whilst urging that the "fighting men," presumably meaning the line officers, should be protected and benefited, has always failed to admit that in this very bill legislation is provided which will vastly benefit the "fighting men," as it provides for an increase of the line of the Marine Corps by 2 major generals, 6 brigadier generals, 22 colonels, 22 lieutenant colonels, and hundreds of majors, captains, and first and second lieutenants.

The following editorial from the New York Sun is another evidence of Marine Corps recognition:

[From the New York Sun, June 8, 1918.]

THE MARINES AT CHATEAU THIERRY.

The personnel of the Marine Corps changes with time, its numbers increase with the needs of the Nation, but its spirit and skill remain unimpaired. The same zest for duty, the same determination to attain the objectives of their expeditions that have been displayed by the men of this splendid organization wherever fate has carried them in its eventful career are written in the record of their admiration-compelling conduct at Chateau Thierry, where their successful advance has won new honors for their colors.

Since the marines went to Europe the necessary veil of secrecy has hidden their activities from their friends at home—and who is not a friend of the marines? It has been known that their first ambition, to close with the enemy, was not gratified as quickly as they desired. But the military duties that fell to them took precedence of their master wish, and these they accomplished with the alertness and thoroughness that characterize all their performances. They did not rust; the proof of that is in the tributes paid to them by the French who stood at their side when at last the command to advance came. In the comments of the veterans there is only one note that might be construed to imply criticism; it is a criticism the marines can bear with equanimity, for it is based on their eagerness to advance. The tendency of American fighters to go beyond the limits decreed by the high command has been discussed in several communications from France; it must be restrained, and it will be restrained, for the Americans are as quick to learn to curb their impulses as they are to assimilate instruction in other details of the military art.

The marines have done no less than was expected of them; they could not do more. Their intrepidity and resourcefulness, their quick comprehension, their adaptable genius, have set the standard of public expectation high, but the corps is to-day, as it always has been, completely capable of attaining it.

And the following from the Baltimore American is worth reading:

[From the Baltimore American, June 10.]

THE MARINES.

The theory about the marine entertained by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, who is supposed to know something concerning marines, has some considerable convincingness to it. Of the marine Mr. Daniels is quoted as saying, "You can't drown him and you can't kill him." This, anyhow, the Huns found out in the fighting around Chateau Thierry—that they couldn't scare him and they couldn't stop him. Whether in a sea fight or a land fight the marine is a hot proposition. That is his traditional reputation, and he certainly made good on his reputation at Torcy, at Brussiares, and at Bourecheo. The marines pushed into the fighting around Chateau Thierry one afternoon, and the next afternoon they had driven the Huns back 2 miles along a 3-mile front.

The marines, as is commonly known, represent but a fractional part of the trained fighting force which the United States now has in France. We, the folks back home, are proud of the dash and heroic ardor of the marines, but we know very well that other American contingents—all the other American contingents—are made out of the same kind of stuff. Infantry and battery divisions at Cantigny, marines at Chateau Thierry—they performed just alike. A little later along we shall be getting thrill news about the nerve and get-across methods of the American air navy. The big push in this 1918 campaign is yet to come. The big push is not to be in the direction of Paris, but in the direction of Berlin.

The Philadelphia Inquirer wants more marines in France:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, June 10.]

SEND MORE MARINES TO FRANCE.

The United States marines have a proud history. Their organization has prestige, ideals, standards, and traditions. Wherever these boys have been sent they have always made good. To-day they are enthusiastically acclaimed by French and English officials for their accomplishments on the battle front.

Is there any good reason why this branch of the service should not be very materially enlarged for the period of the war? There are some thousands of marines now in the United States who are perfectly trained. Why not hustle them over to France and fill the home training camps with new material?

Some time ago Congress authorized the expansion of the corps, but even at that it is a small body. Why not make it a much larger one and forward at once every available marine to the front?

The following clipping from the Baltimore News is another "boost":

[From the Baltimore News, June 8, 19 .]

THE MARINES!

In the fighting north of Chateau Thierry the marines seem first to have assumed control, as is their wont almost everywhere they go. These hard-fighting "soldiers of the sea" have given a most substantial account of themselves, and from all reports they enjoyed themselves thoroughly in their first real fracas in France. One wonders why the cables did not begin their announcement of the marines' exploits with the phrase which they made famous years ago.

"The marines have landed and have the situation well in hand!" Who does not remember that laconic little line which used to find a place in our newspapers in the times of peace?—peace that is broken only by the very temporary insurgency of some jefe politico in some turbulent little republic. From the four corners of the world would come the dispatches, and then the public would forget all about the latest revolution. "The marines have landed" meant "The revolution is over; there's no trouble here."

It grew familiar to the man who knew nothing about the Marine Corps except that its members seemed to have an uncanny faculty of being on hand whenever trouble started and of promptly squashing it. It became a byword, to be quoted as one repeated the happier phrases of the advertising men.

Since we got into the big war we have not heard overmuch about the marines. Most of us had sort of a vague idea that they had been made military police over in France, and a vague regret that such a body of men should not be utilized as shock troops. They were the one branch of the service which had traditions, glamour, romance, associated with them. They were what the Princess Pats were to Canada, the Coldstream Guards to Britain, the Prussian Guards to Germany.

Well, now we know that the marines are where they have always been in the past—in the thick of the fighting. Whatever the relative importance of the ground they won at Chateau Thierry, they had, from all accounts, a very lively little fight; and it is to be assumed that they contributed no small portion of the festivities. To the unmilitary man at home, accustomed to the perspective of trench fighting, in which yards gained seemed to have a real significance, and then bewildered by the abrupt change to open fighting, wherein terrain counted for little, the report of the marines' little fracas made very enjoyable reading. This was the war he knew; this the message he awaited, without knowing why.

The New York Times, as usual, has a good word for a good fighting corps:

[From the New York Times, June 9, 1918.]

AMERICAN VALOR IN FRANCE.

No American who knows the Marine Corps was surprised to hear that our athletic sea soldiers, physically always sound and mentally always set for action, had stormed one German position after another north of the Marne, and from Chateau-Thierry to Torcy had knocked the prestige of the Kaiser's shock troops into a cocked hat. "Americans won't fight," William had blustered to Ambassador Gerard, "and I won't stand any nonsense from them after this war." The Kaiser's scorn for the United States as a Government extended to its "contemptible little Army." He had a conviction that no American soldiers could stand against his goosestep guardsmen. He could not think of Americans in terms of disciplined soldiers. He would not admit that the American Army could be made formidable. The Kaiser learned nothing from Seicheprey, where the Americans gave the enemy a taste of their quality, but Chateau-Thierry was like a knockdown blow; the Kaiser must have inquired who were the Americans that chased his grenadiers for 2 miles, braving their machine-gun fire to ply the bayonet.

What the American marines proved at Chateau-Thierry was that the Germans were no match for them in infighting, to use a term of the prize ring. Physically, the marines, sound in wind and limb and carrying no ounce of superfluous flesh, are always trained to the hour. Their discipline is exceedingly strict. In the manual of arms and in bayonet exercise, in fact in all movements and maneuvers of what is called the school of the soldier, they attain perfection. They try to be smarter than the Regulars; they have to impress the bluejackets, who are their sharpest critics; and the American people, brought up on the prowess of the marines, expect prodigies of them.

Esprit de corps means more in a marine battalion than in the case of any other body of American fighting men. According to the record, the colors of which are heightened by national pride, the marines are first and best in war, have always performed wonders, have taken forlorn hopes as a matter of course. Why, it was only the other day (in June, 1917) that Lieut. Ernest C. Williams won the medal of honor by "extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession," when with 12 men he charged Fort Fortaleza, in Santo Domingo, held by 40 rebels pumping their magazine rifles, and captured it and the defenders, after a hand-to-hand fight, with only five of the Americans on their feet at the finish. And so it has always been, from the original organization of the corps in 1776. The first ashore and the first to fight, good conduct in peace or war, deeds not words, that is the American marine.

Every nation has its crack regiments—England and France have their admired marines, too—but we like to think that our sea soldiers are of an unsurpassable quality. There is something in the tone of the service that puts the recruit upon his mettle. He belongs to a champion corps, he must fight like a champion—and he does. There are other American heroes besides the marines, of course; we shall hear more and more from them as the war goes on; and he would be an unintelligent American who denied supreme valor to the French, to the British and Colonials, and to our Italian allies. On many fields no men could have fought better and died with greater fortitude. They have sometimes accepted annihilation rather than yield. So let us not overemphasize the conduct of our own troops in battle.

It is a glorious rivalry in courage, resolution, and endurance that the soldiers of the western allies are engaged in. America was the last of them to enter the lists, but in the first contact with the enemy her soldiers have behaved like veterans, displaying a courage, tenacity, and tactical skill which French and British observers have been quick to applaud in a spirit of evident sincerity and with elation. They realize that however gallantly, however resolutely, their own countrymen have fought from the beginning of the war, it is the American reserves, now pouring into France, who will make victory certain and save human liberty and civilization; perhaps in the last quarter of an hour, as that Grand Old Man Clemenceau has said.

I think I have covered the subject matter, Mr. Speaker, that I intended, and I sincerely hope the House in its wisdom will concur in the Senate amendment and give this slight reward where it justly belongs.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, my opposition to the motion made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] is based on two fundamental propositions, and I sincerely trust I may have the attention of the Members here during the few minutes I shall speak concerning them.

The first fundamental proposition that causes me to oppose the motion is this: Should this motion carry it means the establishment of a precedent by Congress or a policy that should never appear during this war, one that will curse us as long as we live or memory lasts, for the real basis of the motion to make the commander of the Marine Corps a lieutenant general comes from personal friendship on the part of certain individuals for the present commander of the corps. Now, I have some slight acquaintance with the commanding officer of the Marine Corps. I admire him. He is a fine man, a splendid man, and has been doing an excellent work. But it is the same character and kind of work that every American citizen ought to do without hope of reward, and that is his best. It should not lie within the province of Congress to pick out this general or that general, this colonel or that colonel, this captain or that captain, and raise him to high rank and pin on his breast some medal of distinction and say, "We give this to you as a reward for your performance of ordinary duty in Washington." Congress should never act to raise the rank of any particular individual. A political body like Congress should never legislate affecting the rank of officers, except as may be necessary to carry out military plans made by military authorities.

Thus the first proposition that brings me antagonistic to this is that it rests upon personal element and none other. Should you take from this the fact that Gen. Barnett is the man to be honored it never would have come here and it would not be here now. So I say, if Gen. Barnett shall during the course of this war perform distinguished services, as I hope he may, that will cause him, in the natural course, to be promoted and advanced, God bless him; I will rejoice with him in his good fortune, but let us not pick him up now by a congressional legislative act and advance him to a position that is not merited. This move is born of favoritism and should have no place in our military legislation.

My second objection comes from a proposition much stronger than this first. My friends, this is absolutely without precedent in the history of the American Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. Just stop and face the situation for a minute. Refresh your recollection.

No man under the American flag ever commanded troops on the field of battle or an army in time of war with the rank of general excepting Gen. Pershing and Gen. George Washington, and George Washington did not have that position of commander in chief which we now understand as belonging to the rank of general. So, as a matter of fact, the only officer that ever enjoyed the supreme rank of general under the American flag is Gen. Pershing. All right. So much for that. How many lieutenant generals have there been in command of American troops on the field of battle? Not one, with the exception of Gen. Grant, and Gen. Grant was made lieutenant general only in March, 1864, when he was made commander in chief of all the Armies under the American flag. And you propose to elevate this staff officer, if you call him that, or this line officer, if that pleases you better, of the Marine Corps to the rank of a man that was in command of all the Armies of the United States, covering the battle fields with glory from one end of this Nation to the other. The only man that ever, with the three stars on his shoulder that indicate the rank of lieutenant general, commanded American troops was Gen. Grant, and only then under the circumstances which I have described. He was really commander in chief of our military forces in the great Civil War. Sheridan fought and Sherman marched to glory as major generals.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will if I get more time; but I want to finish this statement.

Now, where do we stand to-day? We have one general, and that is Gen. Pershing. Have we a lieutenant general in the Army? None. Although we have nearly 3,000,000 men in training and on the field of battle, not one has the three stars of a lieutenant general; not one. And there never will be until a man shall have demonstrated on the field of battle, in command of troops, in the awful shock of war, that military genius and power to command that will cause the President of the United States to send his name to the Senate with a recommendation that he be made a lieutenant general; and then he will be put in command of an army of 1,000,000 men or more.

To-day we have an army corps on the field of battle. I do not care whether some think I am talking too plainly or not. We must know some facts. This corps is under the command of Maj. Gen. Hunter Leggett. A better American officer never wore the American uniform, and I except none. He is a man who has had experience in the field, and his experience has extended to every field that American soldiers have fought or trained on in the last 35 years. He is in command of the First Army Corps in France. They are fighting day by day and night by night, and if you will make inquiry you will find that he ranks among the ablest men of his time. He is a major general—only a major general.

In any command, up to as high as a million men, which he will have before he is through, he will be a major general. And here you propose by a congressional legislative act to make a man one higher rank than he, and a man who never smelled gunpowder across the sea. From time immemorial the commander of an Army corps in our country has had the rank of major general—no more. Under our Army plan now an Army corps will consist of about 210,000 men. In the Marine Corps, with the increase herein granted, there will be only 85,000 men, and yet this motion proposes to make the commander of that force a grade higher than an Army corps commander. This creates the rank of lieutenant general for a man here in Washington and not on the field of battle, where glory is won and where deeds are performed. This is not fair to the major generals of our Army—all the generals—for he will outrank them all save Gen. Pershing. No, my friends; look and think of your country's cause, the men that have fought for your flag and for your country, and are fighting to-day. Hold back from no man the reward for his gallantry and his service, but I beg of you do not begin by playing favorites in Congress. If you do, what must be the thought that will go to the major generals of our Army across the sea? There are dozens of them fighting for their country there. Can not they depend on you and me to be as true to the interests of our country here as we demand that they be over there? Let us protect them while they are gone. Let us honor them for that which they do, and never let us write a chapter, however small, in the annals of Congress that fails to recognize true worth, true heroism, true deeds, and the maintenance of that pure spirit of American democracy we call justice and the square deal, one that is making conquerors of our boys abroad and should make us worthy men to act as statesmen for humanity the world over during the next century of the world's history. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, how many minutes have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] proposes to take the floor.

Mr. PADGETT. I am not going to make any more remarks. I just want to get recognition. Some gentlemen have stated that they want to speak. I will yield to them.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to retain the balance of my time. I would like to yield to one or two others the 10 minutes that I have.

Mr. PADGETT. I am recognized for an hour, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there has been some misconception about this amendment. It is an amendment offered in the Senate, as I think, in recognition of the distinguished services which the head of the Marine Corps has rendered to that corps.

In the first place, Gen. Barnett, the present head of the Marine Corps, is not a staff officer. He is a line officer, detailed for his present work by the President on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy for four years. Some gentleman—I believe it was the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]—made the statement that the rank here proposed to be conferred was never held except by Gen. Washington and Gen. Pershing.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I said the rank of general was so held.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. This amendment simply confers the rank of lieutenant general. There have been many who have held like rank in the past—for example, Chaffee, Schofield, Corbin, and numerous others.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not during a war.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And take the cases even now of Gen. March and Gen. Bliss, holding the rank of full general, one in Washington and one at Paris, neither at the front.

No one questions the high and important service they are rendering. Let me say this: The subcommittee of which I was chairman took occasion to make careful inquiry into the activities of the marines and as to their efficiency. From every source we learned that their preparedness to "go over" when called was due largely to the foresight of the men to whom it is here sought to give some slight reward. They had in large measure directed the organization of the corps. They were splendidly trained and equipped and ready to respond on an hour's notice for foreign service. The subcommittee recognizing the personal interest that these men had always shown in the corps, long before this question arose, called attention to the fact that the efficiency of the Marine Corps was largely due to the personal interest which the commandant and his staff assistants had shown for the enlisted men.

Go, if you please, to Quantico, or anywhere, and talk with the enlisted men and ask them whether at all times they have not felt at liberty to make known their complaints and wants to the highest officer in the corps, and they will tell you yes, and you will find that the personal interest which these officers have taken in the enlisted man has markedly contributed to the fine esprit de corps and splendid morale of the marines. I feel that those who had such vision, that those who had looked so well after the personnel of this corps, were entitled to some recognition.

And may I state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was himself responsible largely for the defeat of an amendment that would have given members of the Marine Staff Corps, whom he has criticized, an opportunity to take their places in the line?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not just now. When an amendment was proposed whereby the staff officer should be permitted to elect to go to the front, he opposed it; and this fine tribute was paid by him to the present organization in his effort to retain at Washington the present commandant of the corps and his staff. Here is what he says:

> Mr. BUTLER. But we may not have another Barnett; we may not have another Lauchheimer; we may not have another McCawley; and we may not have another Richards. * * * I believe that men in these responsible positions, and who have learned their duties better than anybody else can learn them, ought to be continued.

And again I quote from the gentleman from Pennsylvania:

> Mr. BUTLER. I believe that the existence of the Marine Corps is owing largely to the services of one man. He came to its rescue at the time it needed him, and that man is Col. Lauchheimer. That is my opinion, which I have heretofore expressed publicly, and I desire to have my opinion written in the record, although I do not know that it is of any value.

Again I quote the gentleman:

> Mr. BUTLER. And I know further that the fine condition of the Marine Corps—I mean to say its contentment and the fact that it is well clothed and well fed—is largely due to the services of Col. McCawley. Now, if we could distinguish these two men whose services have been so valuable to this corps, I am ready to distinguish them. * * *

He was opposed, if you please, to legislation that I know these officers in the marines strongly favored, giving them the right to elect to serve in the line. It ill becomes my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania now to criticize these gentlemen for performing in Washington high and important duties for the marines.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Let us understand that the marines are a great fighting machine, and in order to be and continue a great fighting machine you can not depend altogether on the men at the front.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Not just now. I will yield in a few minutes.

There must be back of the line some who are efficiently providing for the equipment and proper maintenance of that organization. Gen. Barnett, a brigadier general in the line, has been designated for this responsible position, and his selection met with the hearty concurrence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Now, I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell me where he got those remarks from?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes. I got them from the hearing, and if you will read the hearing you will find those were the exact words you yourself used. [Laughter.]

Before the committee the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has always relied greatly on the judgment of Gen. Barnett. I have never heard him in the committee utter a word that was not in praise and laudation of the commandant of the Marine Corps and his staff. Now this amendment proposes simply a just recognition for a wonderful service. It may not be that Gen. Barnett will be called to the front. He is here serving in a most important capacity under orders, like Gen. March in the Army, like Admiral Benson in the Navy, like Gen. Bliss in the Army, and he is performing that work with signal efficiency. Do you recall that when we entered the war the Navy was less in size than the marines soon will be? Under authority conferred in this bill you will soon have a Marine Corps of 85,000 men, and for their maintenance and support this bill carries an appropriation of $160,000,000, which is more than the appropriation carried for the entire Navy in the very recent past.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. You are appropriating more for the maintenance of the Marine Corps this year than was appropriated for the entire Navy in years gone by, and the Marine Corps, I repeat, will soon be larger in personnel than the Navy was when we entered the war.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FLOOD. I have been out attending a conference, but I was in the Hall some little time ago, and there seemed to be some confusion about the question whether the commandant of the marines was a line or a staff officer.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. A line officer and not a staff officer.

Mr. FLOOD. There is no doubt about that, is there?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. None. He was detailed from the line for this work for four years, and performed it in such an admirable manner that the Secretary recommended him for reappointment and the Senate has confirmed him for another four years. It is proper to state that Gen. Barnett was under fire many times during the Spanish War.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I call my colleague's attention to the fact that this increase in rank merely places the commandant of the Marine Corps on a parity with four vice admirals in the Navy who are already cared for?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Absolutely so. If you want to give force, effect, dignity, and power to the Marine Corps, this is the way to do it, and I think it important and just in these times when the corps is rendering such valient service at the front. Give to the officer in command of that corps rank equal with those directing our other great fighting forces who are rendering wonderful service to their country on sea and land.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DEWALT. I notice that this amendment proposes a permanent major general and a temporary major general.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I am speaking now in reference to the amendment providing rank for the commandant of the corps, but I shall be very glad to refer to that when it comes up later.

Mr. BUTLER. Excuse me. The gentleman is referring to the House provision?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; and not now under consideration.

Mr. PADGETT. That is not in dispute at all. The Senate passed it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The chairman is correct, but there is a matter that the gentleman's question might apply to, which will come up later. Now, I simply want to emphasize the fact that when you have in the Marine Corps a force of 85,000 men, larger than the entire number of men in the Navy including the marines when we entered the war, and it is important to give power, dignity, and effect to the commanding officer of that corps, I believe it wise, from a military standpoint, to grant this increase of rank. You recognize that when the commanding officers of our fighting forces sit around the council table rank counts much, and this amendment simply seeks to place the commandant of the marines on a parity with officers occupying similar relations to the Army and Navy proper.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then the gentleman does not agree with the Secretary of the Navy when he says this is not a military necessity?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I can not agree with the Secretary in that respect. I believe that if the Secretary himself had thought over the matter longer after this large increase in marine personnel was made he might have recommended this amendment.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I can not yield further.

Mr. HENSLEY. Just one question.

Mr. BUTLER. I will give the gentleman further time.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENSLEY. Then the gentleman is basing his contention that this amendment should be passed because of the increases in the Navy and in the Army. Is that true?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman evidently was not listening to what I said. I stated that I believed it was essential to the proper organization, maintenance, and equipment of the marines, a great fighting force, larger in size than the Navy was when we entered the war, to have their commanding officer given this rank. He sits at the council table with other officers of the Army and Navy, and he ought to have that dignity and force that accompanies rank. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Under leave to extend my remarks I desire to set out the report of the subcommittee for the investigation of the conduct and administration of naval affairs. Attention is there called to the splendid achievements of the Navy and how prophetic we now find are its statements as to the Marine Corps:

REPORT OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE FOR INVESTIGATION OF CONDUCT AND ADMINISTRATION OF NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT,
Chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs:

The subcommittee appointed just prior to the holiday recess to inquire into the activities of the Navy since our entrance into the war submits to the full committee the following report:

We have had before us the Secretary of the Navy, Chief of Naval Operations, the chiefs of all the bureaus, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, Chief of Naval Aviation, the Director of Target Practice, also other officials and witnesses. Many of our hearings were in executive session, full reports of which are now in the hands of the secretary of this committee and open to the inspection of its members. Much of the testimony submitted to us has been heard by the full committee in its consideration of the pending appropriation bill, and this fact assures, we think, the entire committee's ready concurrence in the following conclusions reached by us:

First. All appropriations have been expended or obligated with judgment, caution, and economy, when you consider that haste was necessary to bring results and abnormal conditions obtained in reference to all problems of production or operations.

Second. The Navy, with limited personnel and matériel, was suddenly called to face many difficult and untried problems in sea warfare, and has met the situation with rare skill, ingenuity, and dispatch, and a high degree of success.

Third. The efficiency of the Navy's prewar organization, the readiness and fitness of its men and ships for the difficult and arduous tasks imposed by war were early put to the acid test, and thus far in no way have they been found wanting, and we feel that the past 12 months presents for the Navy a remarkable record of achievement, of steadily increasing power in both personnel and matériel, of rapidly expanding resources, and of well-matured plans for the future, whether the war be of long or short duration.

Our committee undertook this investigation expecting to find that, no matter how well in the main the Navy had made its expansion into a war force, we would find some matters subject to adverse criticism. We brought with us the desire to cooperate with the Navy to the one end, success. An examination of the records will show how little occasion we have had to find fault. Some mistakes have, of course, been made, yet the Navy has shown its strength by the manner of its correction.

It is a matter of regret that the great demand upon the ship-construction capacity of the country, coupled with the urgent demand for a large increase in the destroyer force, has made necessary a temporary abandonment in part of the Navy shipbuilding program. The Navy greatly needs both scout and battle cruisers, without which our dreadnaught fleet loses a large part of its fighting potentiality. We approve the principle and earnestly favor a resumption of the building program as soon as conditions permit, and can not too strongly emphasize the importance of providing both scout and battle cruisers.

That the expansion of the Navy has resulted in gain rather than loss of efficiency is primarily due to one factor, preparedness. This, we think, very fully appears from our reports on the bureaus, the office of operations, and the fleet, which follow:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

The measure of the efficiency of the Navy is the efficiency of its personnel; and your committee feel that this important matter has been well handled by the Bureau of Navigation, of which Admiral Leigh C. Palmer is the chief. This bureau is charged with the duty of supplying both officers and enlisted men and of providing for their proper training and assignment to service. In March last we had only about 55,000 men, including reserves, in the naval service. This number has been rapidly increased until it approximates now 300,000. All enlistments are practically for the full four-year period (the full time permitted).

Under the enlistment plan the country was divided into four districts, the purpose being to reach the parents of these districts and to explain the real advantages of the Navy. The plan proved so successful that every district turned in far more than its quota of enlistments, which necessitated the slowing down of recruiting to prevent crowding the men in training stations. At the commencement of the war our training stations could only accommodate about 6,000 apprentice seamen, but Admiral Palmer early assumed the responsibility of increasing the housing rooms at the various stations, and we now have at the regular training stations barracks for more than 50,000 men. Additional barracks and schools have been provided in every naval district for the training of officers and men, and many schools and colleges have likewise been called on and are now assisting in the training of specialists along different lines. These training stations and schools cover a large number of trades in addition to the regular naval work, including thorough courses for divers, electricians, radio men, carpenters, machinists, blacksmiths, coppersmiths, bakers, Hospital Corps men, camouflage men, musicians, gunners, signalmen, steel and concrete construction men, quartermasters, helmsmen, lookouts, armed guards crews, men for submarine work, motor boat and torpedo men, etc. Training was also started in the battleship force, and every vessel at home and abroad has become an active training school for officers and men in addition to carrying out the other important duties of the fleet. Trained destroyers and patrol-boat men from the war zone are being brought back from time to time as nucleus crews to man new vessels that are now being constantly put in commission. Since April last more than 1,000 vessels have been put in commission by this bureau, including battleships, submarines, destroyers, transports, hospital ships, patrol vessels, mine layers, mine sweepers, submarine chasers, cruisers, colliers, supply vessels, converted yachts, gunboats, etc. The bureau deserves much credit for its promptness in filling all orders for trained personnel, and every vessel afloat, we learn, is now filled to the maximum complement desired by the officer in command.

The whole problem of training and supplying officers and men, Admiral Palmer assures us, has been worked out in detail for a year in advance, after first taking into consideration the number of vessels, which will be completed and commissioned, and the duties to which they will be assigned. This schedule shows where the supply of officers and men of the required rank and ratings will come from, where they will be trained, and where assigned. It allows for unforeseen casualties and new operations and, we are told, will automatically deliver the required number of trained officers and men for any activities authorized or contemplated now, or in future covering a period of several years. The Navy reserve force has been efficiently organized and many additional details of personnel have been met by the bureau, including the naval radio censorship, communication service, naval intelligence, and supply of reserve clerks for the bureaus.

Charts and navigation books and instruments of all kinds have been furnished the fleets in home and foreign waters, and we feel that the bureau wisely maintains the closest cooperation with the commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, and the commander of the forces operating abroad on the subject of supply and detail of personnel. Our committee has been impressed with the ability and systematic methods adopted by this bureau for the handling of these important matters intrusted to it.

THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

The first battle of the war, that against disease, was fought and won by the Medical Department of the Navy, under Rear Admiral William Braisted.

After diplomatic relations with Germany were broken in February, 1917, recruits, we find, streamed into the service in increasing numbers, and in April there was grave danger that the overwhelming influx of volunteers would overtax all training stations and receiving-ship facilities and bring disaster to the Navy at the very beginning of the war by the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, which unfortunately were widely prevalent throughout the country at that time.

The Navy in this early critical period was fortunate in having as its Surgeon General a farseeing man, of the clearest judgment, who had the confidence of the medical profession at large and who inspired confidence and loyalty in his own corps. Admiral Braisted, possessed of unusual ability as an organizer and administrator and an intimate knowledge of the needs of the service, was eminently fitted to direct the activities of the Medical Department. Patient and optimistic, and with a quiet force of character which accomplished results, he began at once, without delaying even for appropriations, to prepare for eventualities which he clearly foresaw. Except an occasional outbreak of those diseases which commonly occur among recruits, the health of the Navy has been quite as good as in times of peace. In spite of all the difficulties in the way of rapid expansion, and the sudden necessity for the training of new medical personnel and Hospital Corps men, the health of the force afloat has been even better than in peace times.

The Medical Department facilities have undergone tremendous development everywhere. The excellent and finely equipped base hospitals which were built before the war, largely through foresight on the part of the Surgeon General, have been greatly expanded with a speed which could not have been attained if the organization of the Medical Department as a whole had not been carefully thought out long before war came and plans perfected for the immediate enlargement of base hospitals and the construction of emergency hospitals of the finest type wherever necessary. The total bed capacity of naval hospitals was thus increased in a period of a few months from 3,800 to more than 15,000 beds. The mothers of the country can rest assured that in these hospitals their sons will receive excellent care and nursing and the most skilled treatment that modern medical and surgical knowledge permits. The naval hospitals at Great Lakes, Ill., and Norfolk, Va., are already two of the largest hospitals in the United States, and with the authorized additions to the Norfolk hospital it will be one of the greatest institutions of its type in the world. The Navy Nurse Corps, comprising women of the highest type in the nursing profession, has been increased to more than 700.

On board ship and at naval stations the health of the men is protected by all the safeguards known to preventive medicine. The Hospital Corps, upon which falls exclusively the nursing of the sick and wounded outside of hospitals, has been increased from 1,500 to nearly 9,000.

Hospital Corps training schools have been established in connection with the training stations at San Francisco, Great Lakes, Newport (R. I.), and Hampton Roads. In these schools young men of good character and aptitude are intensively trained for their duties at sea.

Foreseeing that the hospital ship now under construction, and which the Surgeon General had long asked for, would not be completed in time to meet the war needs of the service, two large liners were secured and converted into hospital ships to supplement the work of the hospital ship Solace. To assist the Army in bringing back the sick and wounded from abroad, Admiral Braisted arranged that the transports operated by the Navy should have ample Medical Department facilities and necessary equipment, and so far as naval facilities exist has assumed responsibility for the medical and surgical care of all Army sick and wounded who may be transported home on naval vessels from Europe.

For the care of our naval forces in England, France, and European waters three base hospitals are already in operation abroad.

In expanding the Medical Department to meet the present and future needs of the Navy, we were glad to find that the needs of the increasing numbers of industrial workers and other civil employees in the large manufacturing plants in navy yards had not been overlooked. The peace-time humanitarian work is also being continued in connection with Haiti, Santo Domingo, Virgin Islands, Samoa, and Guam, involving a population of over 2,000,000 people.

It may well be said that the reason for this successful record is to be found in the bureau's preparedness, due to foresight and cooperation.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts is the Navy's great business office, and incidentally it is one of the biggest enterprises in the United States. Under its chief, Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, it has established and well deserves a Nation-wide reputation for business efficiency.

It has the responsibility of feeding, clothing, and paying the entire personnel of the Navy, and supplying all vessels of the Navy with stores and equipment for efficient operation. When war came, it found the bureau with a peace-time organization of 128 officers and civilians. That personnel, however, had been so constantly indoctrinated with the Paymaster General's policy of doing everything with a view of preparing for any eventuality, that it needed only augmentation to handle smoothly the vast increase in its daily business details. The personnel increased to more than 700, but the system remained unchanged, and the result was that 300,000 men and 1,100 ships were just as promptly and well provided for as 55,000 men and 300 ships had been before the war.

One of the most important problems the bureau had to solve was the placing of contracts and securing delivery of large stocks of winter clothing for a Navy that by winter had increased many times its original size.

This could not be accomplished by merely placing the contracts and then waiting delivery. The requirements for the Army and our allies had made such a demand on the mills and on the manufacturers that all contracts had to be placed with the greatest care and under varying conditions to meet the Navy's immediate needs. The Paymaster General sent a number of commissioned officers to the mills and factories to talk to the employees and encourage them to increase production to the limit. These efforts were so successful that all men afloat and at the training camps and stations were, before cold weather came, provided with adequate outfits of winter clothing, including overcoats, heavy blankets, etc. The deck force of the destroyers, battleships, and other vessels were furnished with special articles of winter clothing, wind and rain proof suits, heavy woolen socks, boots, etc., and thus well prepared to endure wind and weather.

The daily stocks of raw materials were rapidly increased and storehouses were erected at certain east coast yards to meet the enlarged demands for fitting out the greatly augmented fleet. By wise foresight the bureau met immediate needs promptly, and in addition provided a reserve supply of the more important articles of raw materials, such as tin, copper, steel, etc. The bureau, we find, has preserved its well-established "open-door" policy with respect to purchases of every kind for the Navy Establishment. Some idea of the magnitude of the increase in the Navy's purchases since the war may be gained from the fact that the total expenditure for an entire year in the comparatively recent past did not exceed nineteen millions, whereas expenditures are now being made at the rate of thirty millions a day.

The fact that the Navy has been able to secure prompt deliveries almost without exception under its contracts is due in a large measure to its elimination from the bidding list of all failing to comply with the following requirement of article 3722 of the Revised Statutes:

"No person shall be received as a contractor who is not a manufacturer of or regular dealer in the articles which he offers to supply."

When war came the Navy, by following this policy, had a bidding list of contractors of known reliability, and, as an automatic result, prompt in deliveries.

The Paymaster General, in all but a few confidential purchases, has insisted rightly that publicity protects the Navy and encourages competition, and this policy has been followed strictly in making purchases, and as a result quality, quick deliveries, and lowest market prices have been obtained.

The finest spirit of cooperation exists in this department and one of loyalty to its chief and to its senior aid, Rear Admiral C. J. Peoples, the youngest officer of his rank in the Navy and one of the most efficient.

BUREAUS OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR AND STEAM ENGINEERING.

We were impressed with the efficient and expeditious methods employed by the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, Rear Admiral David W. Taylor, and of Steam Engineering, Rear Admiral Robert S. Griffin, in handling the many difficult problems suddenly imposed by the war. Much of the information furnished us in this connection can not, for obvious reasons, be now disclosed, but in due time the country will understand how the skill and inventive genius of these bureaus have contributed to the efficiency of our own and allied navies.

We found that extensive preparations had been made by these bureaus before the outbreak of war; that large stores of material necessary for the repair and replacement of the ships in service had been accumulated and extensive contracts made for stores not ordinarily carried in times of peace; that repair ships were thoroughly equipped and were ready to sail in condition to make any repairs that might be necessary in the destroyer force. As a result, our destroyer force in the war zone has been maintained in a high state of efficiency, and had all repairs made without interfering with their service. Much of the credit for this is due not only to the seamanship and skill of their officers and crews but to the thorough manner in which American crews understand the materials in their charge and the skill with which they utilize the same.

Navy yards were fully supplied with materials needed in connection with the big task of converting merchant vessels taken over, and arrangements had been made to supplement the navy yards by private yards in the vicinity, working under contracts arranged before the outbreak of war.

Many alterations were begun fully a month before hostilities were declared and extended to the point of actually making contracts in anticipation of the passage by Congress of appropriations for the purpose.

When it came to building additional destroyers, especially those of the large program, it was found that the shipbuilding facilities of the country were fully absorbed with the vessels then under construction and that it would be necessary to create new facilities. The work involved the expansion of existing shipyards, the creation of entirely new yards, machine and boiler shops, great increases in forging facilities and facilities for building auxiliary machinery. The plans adopted required more than doubling the capacity available last summer for building destroyers and that capacity was materially greater than before the war. It is gratifying to report that during 1918 destroyers will be built in from a third to a half of the time taken under prewar conditions.

In spite of the speed in construction, these vessels are not being slighted in workmanship or appliances. They are equal in every respect and superior in some to our latest destroyers, and will be provided with all fittings for the comfort and convenience of the crew, and for military purposes.

The committee was given full information in regard to the damage done to the German ships which were turned over to the Navy and the methods followed in repairing them, and was impressed with the fact that while unusual and novel methods were resorted to to put these ships in service as quickly as possible, there has been up to date no case of failure or of weakness developing in any repairs undertaken by the Navy Department. With the completion of the Leviathan (Vaterland) the last one was repaired and put in service, making upward of a hundred German ships now flying the American flag.

A side light on German methods was furnished by a statement that there was found on one of the German ships a detailed memorandum of all damages that had been done, with a notation opposite each item as to whether the damage could or could not be repaired. In almost every case the notation was "Can not be repaired," and the manner in which the work was accomplished is still no doubt a profound mystery to the skippers and engineers of the German ships who are now interned.

The committee found that no necessity had arisen for any change in the system of either of these bureaus, which readily expanded to meet the emergency. They have not only had at their command the assistance of American inventors and experts but have been given full information of the devices developed and progress made by other navies and have worked in close conjunction with our allies.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

The importance of the adequacy in power and quantity of the Navy's ordnance can not be overemphasized.

The Bureau of Ordnance, under Rear Admiral Ralph Earle, has fully satisfied the demands made upon it by the vessels operating in European waters. A letter from Vice Admiral Sims compliments the work and spirit of the Ordnance Department. Other officers in the war zone, writing in similar vein, have given like testimony.

As a preliminary to its hearings, the committee visited the offices of the Bureau of Ordnance and personally examined into the organization and operation of the bureau's administrative details. The committee was impressed with its business organization and capacity to handle the war work that comes under its immediate cognizance, the procurement of guns, mounts, shell, powder, fire-control appliances, and the numerous accessories required in the arming of our naval forces.

The signing up of a contract marks the beginning of action; the follow up and thorough inspection systems and the policy of full cooperation with the manufacturer are employed to insure prompt delivery.

The organization of the bureau had been developed so as to make it an organization for war, and in consequence it is working smoothly and efficiently, although the expenditures have increased from about $30,000,000 to more than $560,000,000. It has been augmented by taking into it retired officers, officers of the Naval Militia, officers of the Coast Guard Service, former graduates from Annapolis, and able men from civilian life as needed.

The bureau has developed much new material, including depth charges, submarine bomb, nonricochet shells, bomb-dropping devices, howitzers, guns for throwing depth charges, smoke-screen apparatus, heavier ordnance on all craft, and many other important designs which we feel it unwise to discuss.

Where there were shortages in the market of various materials, the bureau took steps immediately to develop new sources of supply. It placed contracts rapidly, and the committee is confident that the Navy's needs for ordnance during this war are fully covered by existing contracts and with the capacity now under its control.

Over 1,100 vessels have been furnished and equipped with guns, ammunition, spare parts, and all their auxiliaries since the fitting out of the Campana, the first ship to be so fitted out, on March 14, 1917.

Reserves of ammunition have been acquired, and money placed at the disposal of the Bureau of Ordnance we find has been spent wisely and has been obligated practically as soon as it became available.

The Navy's industrial ordnance plants have been and are being expanded as rapidly as practicable without interfering with their production. Without direct control of the gun factory, torpedo station, naval proving ground, powder factory, and ammunition depots, the work accomplished would have been impossible.

It may be pertinent to here state that the bureau has furnished, in appreciable quantities, the Governments of England, France, and Italy with guns from the largest to the smallest caliber, together with proper supplies of ammunition therefor, and is continuing the supply of such munitions to our allies. In addition to vessels of the regular navy of our allies, it has armed a considerable number of their merchantmen.

Depth charges, which the committee thinks may be properly termed "the best weapon against the submarine," have been produced in quantity and are in use by our destroyers and submarine chasers. An adequate reserve of ammunition for all classes of guns has been accumulated and is held in storage ready for the use of the fleet.

The committee was supplied with full information of how many attacks of submarines upon armed merchantmen had been warded off, the ships' gun crews using the battery with bravery and skill, and was given the details of certain engagements of special interest.

The arming of merchantmen and the use of other devices, including sailing in convoys, while doing much to keep down our percentage of losses, are not all that can be desired as a check to the submarine menace. The committee was furnished with the names, tonnage, and armament of all vessels under the American flag engaged in trans-Atlantic trade, together with dates and incidents of all encounters with submarines. The record of attacks on our armed merchantmen shows a comparatively small percentage were successful, and that the chances of escape when a submarine is sighted before she has time to fire a torpedo are very high, due to the efficiency of the Navy personnel. The unseen torpedo is responsible for 80 per cent of the sinkings.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

At the commencement of the war naval docks and yards were wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of the Navy at war strength, but Congress in the last appropriation bill had provided liberally for improvements.

Rear Admiral Frederic R. Harris, chief of the bureau, gave the committee a full report on the activities set in motion to develop the yards and to erect the many structures required for training camps for the increased personnel.

In December last 496 contracts, involving an expenditure of more than $96,000,000, had been let for these improvements, 62 of these contracts, carrying about $26,000,000—mostly for training camps—were made on the cost plus basis, but we found in every case that the bureau had safeguarded the interest of the Government by careful inspection and supervision. This method of contracting, while not the most economical, perhaps, was necessary to secure the early completion of the buildings to house and provide hospitals and other accommodations for the recruits. There has been no question of the good faith and integrity with which operations were carried out.

In the construction of the camps the bureau erected 452 buildings under 50 acres of roofing, requiring millions of feet of lumber. An interesting statement of these operations will be found in the hearing of Admiral Harris.

This bureau met in the course of its construction work the usual difficulties with labor, transportation, and priorities, but these situations were well handled and good results with remarkable dispatch were obtained.

Admiral Harris resigned his post as chief of the bureau to go to the Shipping Board in the fall of last year, and pending the appointment and qualification of his successor the affairs of the bureau were conducted in a most satisfactory manner by Capt. A. L. Parsons, his former senior aide, as acting chief.

AIRCRAFT.

We have examined the naval aircraft situation and find many matters of great interest, but much of our information is not now open for public discussion.

This was the one development of matériel which no amount of foresight would have enabled the Navy to prepare adequately. The growth of airplanes and hydroplanes has been so rapid that nothing short of actual war conditions would insure a large number of up-to-the-second machines with aviators trained to handle them.

In the earlier stages of its undertaking the naval air service met many discouragements, but the perfection of the Liberty motor and the use of large sums of money in conjunction with the Army to finance manufacturers have, under the direction of the air service, produced results that now promise to meet the requirements of this important branch of the Navy.

The aircraft program is in charge of Capt. Noble E. Irwin and we commend to the entire committee the careful reading of his hearing, and especially a recent interesting and informing report made by him, now on file with the secretary of the committee.

TARGET PRACTICE.

The statement of Capt. Charles P. Plunkett, Chief of the Division of Target Practice, is of intense interest, and we invite the committee's special attention to it.

We can not publish all that has been accomplished in the way of naval gunfire, battle ranges, percentages of hits, and the results of a comparison of our Navy gunnery with that of other countries. But to our committee, though not technically trained in this matter, the work of this division has been highly satisfactory.

It betrays no secret to say that the gunnery of the Atlantic Fleet prior to the declaration of war was more than satisfactory, but it became necessary to take a large number of ordnance officers and expert gunners from the secondary batteries and turrets of the fleet in order to provide armed guards for merchant ships and to furnish ordnance officers for the many new vessels coming into commission, so that many men handling the secondary batteries (many used for torpedo defense) were removed and the heavier batteries thus temporarily lost many of their most highly trained gunners. It was necessary to train new personnel to fill these vacancies and also to provide for the vessels in reserve and the new vessels coming into service. While primarily these were questions for the Bureau of Navigation, yet they caused, as Capt. Plunkett explained, the deepest anxiety to the gunnery officers. Nothing but the carefully developed system in the Navy, coupled with the devotion of the officers of the fleet and the enthusiasm and intelligence of the enlisted personnel, saved the situation. How well the men sent to the merchant ships have been able to do their work has already answered the defenses they have made to submarine attacks. How well the new men have responded to their training can not be answered until "the day" when the guns of the fleet speak, but we venture to prophesy that the results will be in keeping with the proved traditions of the American Navy.

THE MARINE CORPS.

The Marine Corps, though inherently a part of the Naval Establishment, has its own separate and distinct organization, with separate military and administrative staff departments, the latter of which includes a separate supply bureau, the quartermaster's department. It has also its own paymaster's department.

The committee was much impressed with the keen, personal, active interest shown by Gen. George B. Barnett, commander of this corps, together with the officers under him, in everything pertaining to the welfare, comfort, and advancement of the enlisted personnel. This individual interest on the part of the officers is a very large contributing factor, we believe, to the well-known high efficiency and splendid spirit and morale of this corps.

About a year and a half ago Congress began to increase the strength of the Marine Corps, which consisted then of 344 officers and 9,921 enlisted men. By legislation approved August 29, 1916, authority was granted to increase it ultimately to 693 officers and 17,400 enlisted men. Later, after war was declared, a further temporary increase was authorized on May 22, 1917, for the duration of the war, permitting enlistments to a strength of 30,000 enlisted men (exclusive of reservists) and allowing 1,197 officers. About a year after this first legislative authority was granted the actual strength of the Marine Corps, including reservists and National Naval Volunteers, was 32,288 enlisted men and 1,120 officers. Thus it will be seen that the Marine Corps more than trebled its former strength in officers and enlisted men within this comparatively short period. To-day the Marine Corps numbers 1,230 officers and 36,334 enlisted men.

The actual enlistment was accomplished through the usual methods of recruiting from amongst volunteers from civil life at a time when the Army, Navy, and National Guard organizations were all working in the same field with the same object of filling up their authorized quotas. As new men came into the corps, clothing, equipment, and military stores had to be provided, and immediate and adequate methods taken for their health, their instruction, and training. The satisfactory accomplishment of this task required teamwork on the part of officers in command and the military administrative staff departments. The prewar methods of the Marine Corps in recruiting, training, and administering to the needs of the corps were adapted at once to the situation incident to this increase.

We find that, besides taking care of new appointments in the commissioned grades and the enlistments and the training of this additional force, the Marine Corps has attended without a hitch to its ordinary and regular duties of guarding the navy yards and naval stations, both in and outside of the United States. It has furnished expeditionary forces for duty in France and elsewhere outside the United States, and supplied marine detachments for all battleships, cruisers, and other naval vessels placed in commission during existing hostilities. At the same time it has kept a force of officers and men in Haiti and Santo Domingo to insure continued good order against certain insurrectionary elements amongst their inhabitants. We mention one instance to show the efficiency of the Marine Corps' methods of training raw personnel. The rifle is the weapon of the marine. When the Marine Corps was, roughly, 10,000 enlisted men before the war, 6,118 of that force were rated as so efficient in the use of this weapon that they were under the law entitled to an increased pay. To-day the Marine Corps of 36,334 enlisted men has 22,577 men similarly rated. This shows that it has actually increased its prewar percentage of proficient marksmen.

It has been the established policy of the Marine Corps in prewar times to fill its commissioned personnel, as far as possible, by promotions from the ranks, and no appointments are made in commissioned grades direct from civil life. We most heartily approve this policy as rewarding the tried and true amongst the enlisted force.

All of the emergencies the corps has been called upon to meet have been met by the officers and enlisted men in the most expeditious and efficient manner without either friction or confusion. These results not only vindicate the system of organization, but also reflect credit upon those officers who are responsible for the maintenance, direction, and efficiency of the corps.

There are to-day on the firing lines in France no better trained, no braver, no more effective fighting force than our own marines now serving there, and we hope their number may soon be largely increased. Both officers and men are anxious to go. Thoroughly equipped and splendidly trained as they are in the arduous methods of modern warfare, we feel that theirs will be a service of results which the Nation will always remember with ever-increasing pride.

OFFICE OF NAVAL OPERATIONS.

Thus far in our report we have considered the operations of what may be termed as the administrative side of the department, including the great bureaus. There remains to be considered the more strictly military administration of the Navy.

In 1915 Congress, on the recommendation of the Naval Committee, created the Office of Naval Operations, not defining the duties of the chief, but placing upon him responsibility for the maintenance of the fleet and for the preparation of plans for its use in war. The Secretary of the Navy appointed Capt. William S. Benson, chief of operations, and assigned five officers to assist him. Capt. Volney O. Chase was senior aid for personnel and Capt. Josiah McKean for matériel. The Secretary promulgated a new set of naval regulations, fixing the authority of the Office of Operations and its relations to the bureaus of the department. Congress by subsequent legislation provided for the assignment of a larger number of officers to duty in the Office of Naval Operations, and further that orders issued by the chief of operations in the name of the Secretary should have the same authority as if issued by the Secretary himself. This office has thus become the factor for the coordination of effort between the bureaus, and in military matters of the Navy it has become the dominant authority.

If the Atlantic Fleet was ready for action on April 7, there is no question that its preparedness in both matériel and personnel was in great measure due to the directing force of the Office of Operations, and further that plans for the mobilization of the fleet were ready for immediate use. The support given by the department to Vice Admiral Sims goes by way of the Office of Naval Operations. The support of the Atlantic Fleet goes by way of Naval Operations, and in all military matters pertaining to the Navy it is this office which, under the Secretary, gives the final direction.

The pronounced success of this office beyond question is due to the strong personality of its chief, Admiral Benson, the ranking officer of the Navy.

Except the general statement that Vice Admiral Sims has had everything called for as promptly as it could be delivered, our committee has nothing to report about the condition of our over-seas fleet. Its splendid work under the able direction of Admiral Sims will be told in detail at some later time.

We have learned by personal observation, as well as by inquiry, something of the Atlantic Fleet; and we feel we can say that the condition of ships and personnel, all things considered, is more than satisfactory. That this condition exists is due to Admiral Mayo, its commander in chief, and every officer and man under him.

When war came, on April 7, Admiral Mayo is quoted to have said: "I did not give a single solitary order of any kind or description to pass the fleet from a peace to a war basis." Then came the disintegration of that excellent but too small personnel to meet the necessities of expansion.

The task of reconstructing and training it has been difficult, but we learn that officers and men have devoted themselves to this task with patience, endurance, pluck, and skill of the highest order. So well have they succeeded that we feel justified to report, "Sirs, all is well with the fleet."

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] 10 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has just said that, in his judgment, if the Secretary of the Navy had given thought to this subject he would have recommended the adoption of this amendment, because he would have recognized that similar rank had been granted to the chiefs of the bureaus in the Navy. The hearings show that the Secretary of the Navy did consider that very point, and if you will turn to page 722 of the hearings you will find that Secretary Daniels said:

The men who hold these positions—

That is, staff positions in the Marine Corps—

are very capable and efficient men, but their duties are not relative to the duties of the chiefs of the bureaus in the Navy.

That is the reason why Secretary Daniels refused to approve the amendment.

Now, my friends, let us see just what there is to this proposition. There has been enough lobbying in connection with this amendment by the men directly concerned, by the men who are to secure the promotions, to justify the President of the United States in ordering a court-martial.

That is the fact.

While the boys have been "going over the top" in France there have been certain gentlemen here at home determined to capitalize the exploits of those boys for their own selfish interests. Men who are backing this amendment are not asking you to reward the boys who are "going over the top." There is no suggestion here of promotion for the boys who are dying on the fields of France; not a word about that. This amendment, advanced by the men who are to be benefited, drafted by them, logrolled by them, have to do with the men who are in the bureaus in Washington, not only in the bureaus at Washington but they are actually nailed down in the bureaus, because under the law you can not take one of the gentlemen who are to receive this recognition out of Washington at this time or at any other time until he retires.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman have any knowledge of who the other two gentlemen are?

Mr. KEATING. I do not know, but the amendment I am talking about is the one giving the commandant of the Marine Corps, who so far as the record shows was never under fire, the rank of lieutenant general and three staff officers the rank of major general. Think of it, gentlemen, what a laughing stock you would make of yourselves to have the word go forth to the world that a man who has never been under fire, although the commandant of a fighting force, has been made a lieutenant general, and that certain gentlemen with him, who under the law can not be sent out of Washington, are to be made major generals. If you adopt this amendment it will be equivalent to telling the boys who are doing the fighting that the way to win promotion in the Marine Corps is not to go to France, is not to serve in the training camps, but is to have sufficient social and political pull in the city of Washington so they may logroll their promotions through on an appropriation bill.

I am in favor of the Marine Corps. I am in favor of the men who do the fighting, and I will vote now to confer any rank within reason upon the men who are doing the fighting in France, but I insist that those men must be recognized first before these rocking-chair warriors are given these high positions.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman say that the officer or officers to be benefited by this amendment have been asking Members of Congress to vote for the amendment?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; I say that the Secretary of the Navy—and no gentleman will deny this—that the Secretary of the Navy has refused to indorse this proposition; that after the Commander in Chief of the Navy had refused to indorse it Gen. Barnett and other gentlemen, showing what excellent soldiers they are, in defiance of the expressed wish of their commanding officer, went to Members of the American Congress and pleaded that this amendment be placed in the bill. The Secretary of the Navy has not indorsed the proposition up to this good hour, and he will not indorse it.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield to me to state one incident?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I know of one incident where a boy, a private, who wanted to get into the officers' training camp, was court-martialed because at his solicitation a Member of the House wrote to the commanding officer asking him to take particular notice with a view to selecting him for the training school.

Mr. KEATING. Under the regulations, I have no doubt that occurred.

Mr. KEARNS. What right had the officer to court-martial a boy for doing that when——

Mr. KEATING. I do not think the action was justified.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I think in the light of the charges made by the gentleman from Colorado, he should name his authority.

Mr. KEATING. Oh, "the gentleman from Colorado" will name his authority.

Mr. MEEKER. I have it on the absolute authority of men who know that the amendment was not known by these gentlemen until after it was in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am a living witness that this amendment was spoken of to me in my office and also in this corridor. They spoke to me about this amendment and asked me to vote for it.

Mr. KEATING. A more convincing and more truthful statement of the proposition could not be made.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I understood the gentleman to say that since the Commander in Chief of the Navy had voiced his opposition to this amendment the commandant of the Marine Corps had interceded with Members of Congress in favor of the amendment. Will the gentleman state one circumstance where that occurred?

Mr. KEATING. Oh, yes; "the gentleman from Colorado" can tell him this, and so can the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman state one?

Mr. KEATING. I will say this to the gentleman from Illinois, that the Secretary of the Navy knows what Gen. Barnett has been doing; that after the amendment was rejected in this House, without consulting with the Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. BRITTEN. The amendment was never before the House.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the committee, presented an amendment giving three staff officers the rank of major general, and on the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] it was withdrawn. Afterwards the matter was taken up in the Senate, and Gen. Barnett knew at that time the Secretary of the Navy was opposed to the proposed amendment. Gen. Barnett then started a campaign for the purpose of getting the amendment in. There is no question about it; it is a matter of documentary evidence.

Mr. BRITTEN. The amendment under consideration has nothing to do with the three staff corps officers.

Mr. KEATING. The whole proposition has been discussed here. One amendment makes a lieutenant general of Gen. Barnett and the other makes three staff officers in Washington major generals. That is what we have been discussing and that is the proposition I am laying down, that these amendments have been lobbied and that there has been a persistent effort to put them through. Perhaps the word "lobbied" grates on the gentleman's ears, and perhaps "solicited" is better, and that will be satisfactory to me. There has been a determined effort, started by the commandant of the Marine Corps, to get this amendment in, and it is a matter of documentary evidence.

Mr. BRITTEN. When the gentleman says "this amendment," does he mean the amendment under consideration?

Mr. KEATING. This amendment with that relating to the three staff officers.

Mr. BRITTEN. The amendment of the three staff officers is not under consideration.

Mr. KEATING. Oh, the gentleman is trying to muddy the waters. The two amendments stand together.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is in control of the time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I have heard two or three very interesting military theories advanced here to-day. In the first place it is that we should not have big men at the places where the commands are to be sent out and in war councils. There is a sort of spirit and desire to ridicule the military man who by force is compelled to stay here, and there has been no more gratuitous insult offered to scores of men who are staying in Washington on orders than has been offered by gentlemen in this House who could volunteer to go at any time and who have not gone. These men are here because they are ordered to stay here. We have heard here to-day that you are in danger of destroying the morale of a great military organization by doing honor to its commander. We know, and there is no use of quibbling about it, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who was quoted here awhile ago by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], knows, that the esprit de corps of the Marine Corps depends and has depended upon the work of this man who is now under consideration, and who has never been questioned for one moment until now. When we went into this war everyone turned with loud applause and acclaim to the man who had enough of the genuine commander in him to have a group of men trained and ready, and as this corps has been enlarged, until now it is half the size of the Army that we had when we went into the war, those men have been ready to take care of the interests of this country any place throughout the world. But we suddenly have a fit here, and, even though we can promote four bureau chiefs with nothing said about it, we are throwing one spasm after another about promoting the man who has made this great organization.

We do not need to blink the fact, and I think every man who has studied the different military and naval organizations knows that there is no man who has stood at the head of any organization who is more dearly beloved by his men than is Gen. Barnett by the men of the Marine Corps. He is entitled to that affection for the spirit and interest and efficiency that he has manifested all the way through. So far as I am personally concerned, if you wanted to write the name George Barnett into the bill I believe we would only do ourselves a credit by voting him this honor. When we come to talk about unpreparedness, when we have for months been denouncing the War and Navy Departments for their shortsightedness of the past, here we have one man who prepared his organization, and now we should give some little recognition to the man who exercised foresight and selected his men with care and had them thoroughly trained. When we called upon his department for service we got it 100 per cent good on the minute, and yet the question now suddenly springs up about a so-called swivel-chair officer. Is Gen. McCain a swivel-chair officer? Are these men in the Navy swivel-chair officers? Are Gen. March and the men on the other side swivel-chair officers? Shame on the men of this House who talk about men in these places not doing just as essential work as the men who are on the front line! [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this amendment, because I believe the Marine Corps is the best branch of our military service and the best fighting force in the world to-day. I am going to vote for it, because I believe Gen. George Barnett is one of the best officers in our military service; and I think this splendid body of soldiers and their commander are entitled to this consideration. [Applause.]

I did not rise, however, for the purpose of advocating the amendment. That has been done very ably, and reasons have been given why this House should vote for it. I do rise to take issue with the statements made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] that Gen. Barnett "had pleaded" with Members of this House to vote for a measure that would be of benefit to himself. I believe the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is mistaken in the statement he made and that he can not produce a witness to show that Gen. Barnett "pleaded with" anyone to vote for this measure or for any measure that would benefit himself. I do not believe that he could produce a witness to show that Gen. Barnett ever asked anyone to vote for any measure that concerned him personally. I think the RECORD should show that the statements of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] were denied and the facts stated.

It is true that Gen. Barnett did write a letter to a Member of another legislative body suggesting the wisdom of increasing the rank of some of his subordinates, which I have never heard was improper in any commanding officer. But he never pleaded with, wrote to, or talked to Members in his own interest. The provision he advocated has been adopted. I challenge the gentleman to produce any Member who will say that Gen. Barnett ever even suggested to him to vote for the particular amendment which we are considering to-day or for any measure that would be of personal benefit to himself by way of promotion or otherwise. He never did, and I am unwilling to sit here and allow a statement that reflects upon this splendid soldier, this magnificent organizer, this fine gentleman, this able officer to go unchallenged and uncontradicted. [Applause.]

Cries of "Vote"!

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to recede and concur.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama quoted—and knowing the gentleman, I know that he quoted correctly—but I would say the same thing had I to say it over again, but I would like to say to the gentleman from Alabama, I always considered that the rank which Gen. Foch himself holds would be sufficient rank for the commandant of the Marine Corps, that of major general, and I also supposed that the rank of brigadier general would be sufficient for his assistants. That is the reason I made the remark the gentleman quoted against me.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding from the disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 33 and concurring in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TALBOTT) there were—ayes 44, noes 73.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House still further insist on the disagreement to Senate amendment 47. It is the one that has been discussed——

Mr. BUTLER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker, please. The House declining to recede and concur amounts to a further insistence, does it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank you.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee moves what?

Mr. PADGETT. To further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 47.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate resolution No. 47.

Mr. BRITTEN. Before the Chair puts the motion I would like to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that these two amendments are very materially different in their character in that the one just passed upon by the House provided for a lieutenant generalcy for the commandant of the corps and amendment 47 on which the motion is now being made by the chairman provides——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend for just a minute. The gentleman from Tennessee has charge of the time.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no necessity for discussing that. The temper of the House was made manifest because they were both discussed together.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is probably true, Mr. Speaker; but the two amendments are very radically different, and it is possible there may be different feeling in the House on the removal of the restriction that is now placed on certain Marine Corps officers by this Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has not the floor.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no mistaking the temper of the House. If they will not give it to the principal, they will not give it to the subordinates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on disagreement to Senate amendment No. 47.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. I want to know how many men are going to vote here. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment 52——

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman want to make?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 52.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on disagreement to Senate amendment No. 52.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on disagreement to Senate amendment No. 53.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate amendment No. 75 be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 75.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy nitrate plant: For the erection, equipment, and operation of a plant for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen, production of synthetic ammonia, its oxidation to nitric acid, and the manufacture of ammonium nitrate, for each and every expense connected therewith, including the employment of all necessary expert, drafting, and clerical assistance, $9,150,000, to be available until expended.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to make a motion or not?

Mr. PADGETT. I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment 75.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know how many of these nitrate plants have been established by the Government?

Mr. PADGETT. There are two working together at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River, in Alabama, and I understand that there are two in Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. Already in existence and operating?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; they are in course of construction, I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, can the gentleman inform the House the capacity of those plants that have been established?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy stated that they had been giving very careful investigation to this matter, and in conference with the board of which Mr. Baruch is president or the head—I believe it is the War Industries Board; at any rate, it is the board that looks after the war industries—said that the nitrate situation is a very serious one; and he stated that the Army plants which were in course of construction would be insufficient to supply the nitrates needed for the Army alone, and that the Army would have to depend for a considerable portion of its nitrates upon shipments from Chile.

He stated also that the Navy needed this; that it was essential that they should have it; and that even with the production that would come from this plant, the Navy would still have to rely upon the shipments from Chile for a portion of its nitrate.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, there has been a plant established at Niagara Falls; not an American company, probably, but a Canadian company. Do we get any of the products of that factory in this country to be used for munitions?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think so. I do not know——

Mr. SIMS. I am informed that there is a 100,000 hydroelectric horsepower that is generated on the Canadian side, which is exported to this side and used in the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. That is horsepower. The gentleman is talking about the manufactured nitrates. They make cyanamids up there.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a form of nitrates?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. But you asked me in connection with your question if it was used by the Army and Navy.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to say whether it is used by the Army or not. I do not think the Navy gets any there.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask this question: These two plants are located in Alabama—near the line, at least——

Mr. PADGETT. Just over the line in Alabama.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not yet in operation. There are two to be established in Ohio. Now, as to this plant that is proposed here, can the gentleman inform the House whether or not it is the intention to establish that plant on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary stated that it was the expectation and purpose to place it at Indianhead, Md., at the powder factory.

Mr. FOSTER. That, of course, is to be manufactured from electricity that would come from the use of coal?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And in Alabama from the use of water power, as soon as it can be done?

Mr. PADGETT. The process that is to be used in Alabama requires a high horsepower. This process requires a very low horsepower, so it was stated. The water power furnishes the electric power for the process which requires the high horsepower and this coal process for a very low horsepower.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, we know that the manufacture of nitrate from the air by steam processes—that is, generating electricity by steam—makes the cost of the nitrate pretty high, and that cheap water power is the easiest way there is to manufacture nitrate. Is it intended that this shall be a plant for emergency, that is to be used because we can not manufacture enough now for the purpose of the Government during the war, or is this to be a permanent plant?

Mr. PADGETT. It is both. We asked the Secretary about that, and he stated and gave the figures in the hearings, as you will see if you have them, where it was estimated that they would be able to manufacture the nitrate from the air by this process at no greater cost, and they supposed at a slightly less cost, than the importations from Chile.

Mr. FOSTER. But that means, of course——

Mr. PADGETT. And it would be used for the manufacture of explosives after the war.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a plant for emergency use?

Mr. PADGETT. It is for an emergency, but it is intended to go beyond the emergency.

Mr. FOSTER. And be a permanent establishment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask a question at that point?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it contemplated that the Navy Department will operate this plant?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I could not find that statement in the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. That is contemplated.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is not a question of private contract?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And therefore the Government will own the plant after the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. And they expect to put it on the Government property at Indianhead, where they are manufacturing powder and explosives now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the essential difference between this plant and the other plants heretofore established, and the two about to be established in Ohio, is that the latter are all operated under private contracts with a very handsome rake-off.

Mr. PADGETT. I understood from the Secretary that this is a Government plant, to be operated by the Navy Department.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I wanted to be absolutely certain about.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question? He says these two plants in Ohio are to be operated by private parties and the product sold to the Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. I have not yet had an opportunity to see the contract, but I understand it is given to the same persons as have the contract for the big plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, which is a private contract, under which a certain corporation, known as the Air Nitrates Corporation, a corporation with $1,000 capital, receives, without the expenditure of any money whatever, $1,000,000 for the erection of the plant, and then receives about $1,250,000 a year during the war for its operation.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember this very distinctly, that when we passed the bill——

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I understand these contracts are substantially the same.

Mr. FOSTER (continuing). For the enlargement of the Army it was the intention of Congress that the Government should own these plants, and that there should not be any part of it leased to private parties, even the plants where they were established under that bill. Of course, if they were establishing plants that are not under the Army bill which was passed in 1916, then, of course, it is a different thing. But I know if they are established under that bill it provides that they shall be owned by the Government, and that no part of the surplus power shall be leased to a private party.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I may say to the gentleman that all of that fund has already been spent. The last $15,000,000 of it is to be used in the erection of Dam No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, which will not be finished for five years, so that there will be no water power to operate this present plant at Muscle Shoals inside of five years. It is true that the original appropriation provided that it must be used by the Government itself, but the appropriations carrying the funds from which the money had been taken for the big plants have no such provision in them up to this time. All of the plants heretofore negotiated for and in process of construction are to be built and operated under private contracts, so that this proposition is entirely different.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this proposition is the most sensible that I have heard of.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Because it is to be owned and operated by the Government and built by the Government; and it was intended by this House at least, and the Members here who had something to do with it, that the Government should own these plants and operate them and build them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Precisely That is what the Government should have done in regard to all of them, in my opinion. I favor this proposition because it not only provides that the Government shall own and operate them, but they are to be operated under the best and cheapest system for producing nitrates.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that this is the best provision, or at least the best contract, that I have heard of in connection with any of these plants. I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee on his wisdom in agreeing to this provision.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand the gentleman to say it was the purpose to locate this plant at Indianhead?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy said that that was the expectation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman tell us any particular reason for selecting that as the site, or any particular advantages coming from that selection?

Mr. PADGETT. We have the land there, and that is where we will use the nitrates in the manufacture of powder. It will save transportation, and it is right in connection with the use of the powder.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That I understood, though I may have been misinformed; but I have always understood that the main necessity for the manufacture of nitrogen from the air is power, which can be secured in either one of two ways, from electric power by modern development or from steam power. In other words, the cost of the product is determined almost exclusively by the cost of your power. There is that practical element in it. Then, if that be true, and this plant is proposed to be located where there is no water power and none to be had, and where there is no steam power, the only way steam power can be procured is by the establishment there of a coal supply, which, of course, would naturally increase the cost of the output 100 per cent. In other words, is Indianhead the proper place for the location of such a plant?

Mr. PADGETT. I would say yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's question ignores the fact that the method of making nitrate determines what power is necessary. My great complaint against this process which is used in these big plants is that it is a process which involves the use of an enormous amount of power. However, the plant suggested here needs very little power; practically none at all; so that the question of high water power or steam power is absolutely negligible.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am delighted to have my stock of knowledge increased by the information that the gentleman has just so abundantly supplied; but may I inquire, if power is not a material element in the cost, what does enter into it?

Mr. PADGETT. Labor and material and some power.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The important thing in the location of all these plants is the cost. The location is determined by considerations of cost, and I think that is the important question on which to determine it. Indianhead is the worst place in the whole United States strategically, in a military way, for the location of such a plant, because if there is one place that is vulnerable, one vulnerable spot in America, it is there. It is about the first place that will fall if we are attacked.

Mr. PADGETT. We already have a large investment there, and we will be prepared, or shall be in a short time, to manufacture 30,000,000 pounds of powder a year, and we can not afford to take the nitrate plant away from the production of that large amount of powder and explosives.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am very glad to hear the gentleman's very lucid explanation, but it does not convince me at all that that is the proper place to locate the plant, though I confess that I have no expert knowledge on the subject.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to make this statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Minnesota: A plan for the establishment of a hydroelectric power plant on the Potomac River, at Great Falls, has already been investigated by a competent engineer, Mr. Leighton, of whom the gentleman knows, and from that plant all the power needed by the Government or by the people of the District of Columbia or by this proposed plant can be abundantly furnished.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let us see if that is quite what the gentleman desires to say. I understand that Great Falls, developed to its highest point of efficiency, will produce 30,000 horsepower. The city of Washington can utilize all of that in its operations in connection with electric light plants and street railways.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary has not indicated in any way that they are to get their power from Great Falls. There is no indication that he expects to get it from Great Falls.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What would the gentleman do with this plant in case an invading fleet came along? We have had a little one touching us up a little recently. What would the gentleman do with such a plant? Would he pick it up and carry it back into the interior for safety? It seems strange to me that every time a proposition of this kind has been brought up in the last few years the decisive factor has been the military situation and the cost, and neither of them should enter into the question of the location of this plant.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know of the locating of some of these plants farther to the west? It seems to me that with the conditions of labor and all that goes with it, including transportation, some consideration ought to be given to the location of some of these plants that the Government is required to build farther in the West.

We know that in the East, along the Atlantic coast here, are located practically all the activities of the Government along this line. If you go 200 miles from here, the country west of that point is almost entirely barren of any of the manufacturing plants which are necessary for the Government activities during this war.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me, of course, the people in the administrative branches of the Government are not interested in the West, except to the extent of getting the men to supply the needs of the Army and the money to pay the bills. The West furnishes men to do the fighting, but all in the way of expenditure goes into the section of the country which does not furnish the most of the money.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that a great deal of labor could be secured in the West, for which they are now asking that the transportation be paid from the West to the East. Of course, we know that a good many of these plants could not be located in the West. As a matter of necessity they must be located over here on the coast; but it seems to me there are many of these plants that ought to be located farther west, and that they might be able to secure labor to better advantage, and carry on these activities better than they could by placing them all over here in the East.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I have some hesitancy in halting the House to ask a question or two, but I should like to be educated a little bit. In the first place, I should like to know when this plant will be finished?

Mr. PADGETT. They expect to be able to finish it within a few months. I do not remember the exact time, but in a short time.

Mr. CANNON. In a few months?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is an improvement over the Alabama plants in that respect. Somebody said they were hoping to finish those in five years.

Mr. PADGETT. We are figuring on providing the nitrate for our Navy powder only, and we hope to begin to supply it within eight months.

Mr. CANNON. The Government is to own it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The Government does not own the Alabama plant, as I understand.

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to give the details of it. The Government furnishes the money and is building it, and owns it, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated that under some contract it was to be operated during the war under the contract system. But the property will be the property of the Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield to me about five minutes, I think I can, perhaps, explain the situation.

Mr. CANNON. I should be very glad to have the instruction. Now, where are these Ohio plants to be constructed?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know the exact location—somewhere in Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY. At Toledo and Cincinnati.

Mr. PADGETT. But I understood from the gentleman from Ohio that they were operating under a very similar contract.

Mr. CANNON. When are they to be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. I have not kept up with the Army side of it.

Mr. CANNON. Does anybody know when they are to be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. The nitrate situation is a very serious one, and I was looking after this for the Navy, because they said that even when these plants were completed the Army could not furnish us any nitrates at all.

Mr. CANNON. We know that the Alabama project will not be completed for five years.

Mr. PADGETT. One of them will, and the other one will not. The smaller one, as it is called, will be completed in a short time. I saw in the paper the other day that they would be ready for work in a very short time. But the larger one, which depends upon the large dam that is to be put directly across the river, will not be ready for operation for several years, I presume.

Mr. CANNON. From what I have read it takes very little power to operate the plant provided for in this amendment. What was the necessity of waiting so long for the utilization of water power down in Alabama? The amount of power required is quite insignificant. It could be finished in a few months at Indianhead. Very little power will be required there. I do not understand why that is so, but the amount of power required is quite negligible.

Mr. PADGETT. The process adopted at Muscle Shoals requires an immense amount of horsepower and produces a large output. The construction of that plant is delayed by the construction of the dam across the river. That is the only explanation I can give.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, this does not require much power. Does the gentleman know how much power is required?

Mr. PADGETT. For this one?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. They said about one-twentieth of the power required for the synthetic process. I had the statement here just a minute ago.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is correct—one-twentieth.

Mr. CANNON. Does the synthetic process to be used at Muscle Shoals produce as good nitrate as the other process to be used at Indianhead? Are they both nitrates?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but different processes.

Mr. CANNON. A different process; but is the product nitrate in each case?

Mr. FOSTER. Nitrate in each case; yes. Admiral Earle states here that it takes very much less horsepower than the electrolytic process—one-twentieth for the cyanamid process and one-hundredth for the electrolytic process. There are several processes for making fixed nitrates from the air. The cyanamid process takes one-twentieth of the horsepower.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it might be well to concur in this amendment with an amendment repealing the legislation authorizing the Alabama project and repealing the legislation, if it is by legislation, authorizing the Cincinnati project—they are going to do it here at Indianhead with a great deal less horsepower.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will explain that.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to be educated and find out what the real facts are, and after the gentleman has made his explanation perhaps I will not have to ask any further questions. If I do, I will appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me a little more time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me five minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I heartily favor this amendment because it is based on the two principles which I think should guide us in the production of nitrates in this country during the war for use in ammunition. In the first place this plant, as the gentleman from Tennessee says, is to be owned and operated by the Government itself. In the second place, it uses the process which by common consent and by the opinion of all experts is known to be the best and least expensive process known to-day.

In regard to the plants so far undertaken the very large amount of money which has so far been appropriated, about ninety or one hundred million dollars, is being used in the building of three plants—one known as plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals, and the other two which are two units of the same size, the two together making the equivalent of the one at Muscle Shoals, which are to be located in Ohio.

I have not seen the contract under which these two Ohio plants are to be built and operated, but I understand that it is with the same individuals, and to all intents and purposes is the same contract as that applying to the plant at Muscle Shoals.

Now, the Muscle Shoals proposition, as I have repeatedly said, violates my idea of how a nitrate supply should be obtained.

In the first place, by being operated for their own profit by private individuals, and, in the second place, being based on a very much more expensive way of manufacturing nitrate. In brief, the contract is made between the United States Government and a corporation known as the American Air Nitrates Corporation. It is a subsidiary of the American Cyanamid Co., which owns to-day the cyanamid process, and was formed because the American Cyanamid Co. was unwilling to subject its property and assets to liability in the construction and operation of the plants. The American Cyanamid Co. takes no risk whatever. All the American Cyanamid Co. does is to furnish, when the plant is completed by the American Air Nitrates Co., some of the men, machinery, processes, and materials to be used for the operation of this plant when completed.

The American Air Nitrates Corporation, which is a corporation of only a thousand dollars capital, is to receive $1,000,000 in cash for supervising the erection of the plant.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the Alabama project?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes. I have not seen the contract with reference to the proposed Ohio plants, but I understand it is in effect the same. The American Air Nitrates Co. and the American Cyanamid Co. are to receive together in royalties on the production of the Muscle Shoals plant amounting in round numbers to more than one million and a quarter a year during the period of the war.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman restate what the million dollars is to be paid for?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is to be paid the American Nitrates Corporation, with a capital of $1,000, for their services in supervising the construction of the Government plant. They put no money themselves into it, but the Government furnishes all the money. It is a charge for supervision.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who are they?

Mr. LONGWORTH. They are a corporation composed entirely of officials of the American Cyanamid Co. The president of the corporation is Mr. Frank S. Washburn, who is also president of the American Cyanamid Co. Of the 10 shares of capital stock 5 are owned by the American Cyanamid Co. and the other 5 are held by the president, vice president, and secretary of the American Cyanamid Co., who are the officers and directors of the Air Nitrates Corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the capitalization of the American Cyanamid Co.?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I looked this up some months ago, and my impression is somewhere about $5,000,000, perhaps more. It is a large corporation, but the American Air Nitrates Corporation was formed for the purpose of seeing to it that the assets of the American Cyanamid Co. should not be risked in this venture.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When was it organized?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was organized, as I recall, last November, to take over the construction of this cyanamid plant.

Mr. MADDEN. Who owns the stock in the $1,000 corporation?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The American Cyanamid Co. owns a part and officials of that company own the rest.

Mr. MADDEN. How much money is the Government going to expend in the construction of this plant that this company is to supervise?

Mr. LONGWORTH. About $45,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And what number of men does this company furnish to the Government of the United States for supervisory work?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The number they deem requisite to complete the work. The contract provides that they shall receive 3½ per cent, as I remember, of the total cost of construction, but in any event not more than $1,000,000. Three and one-half per cent at $45,000,000 would be at least $1,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the Government furnishes $45,000,000 to erect a Government plant, and it employs this $1,000 corporation to furnish men to supervise its construction and pays those men $1,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Who made that contract on behalf of the Government?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It was made through what is known as the Nitrate Division of the War Department. It is a Government contract.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that the War Trade Board?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; it is a part of the War Department.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman believe that the Government has a man there superintending that work who is competent to do it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, absolutely. I have heard nothing but commendation of the ability of Col. Joyes, who is at the head of the Nitrate Division.

Mr. FOSTER. And we have a man in the chemical department also competent to take care of that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, unquestionably so.

Mr. FOSTER. But the Government is competent to do this work itself.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I think unquestionably the Government could have done it and ought to have done it under ordinary circumstances. It is possible that this is an exceptional case.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the Government technical men who are qualified to supervise the construction of this plant without employing this corporation to do it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not answer definitely. I understand this was the situation. Gentlemen will recall that not very long ago a committee of experts was appointed by the President to recommend the best methods of producing nitrogen in this country for war purposes. Some of them went abroad. They investigated the various systems there, and recommended as a final result of their investigations substantially the process that is to be used in this plant that we have now under consideration.

A great deal of reliance, however, was being placed upon the supply of nitrate coming in from Chile, and it was thought that we would have some time to develop these various processes, that there was no very great hurry. Suddenly, not many months ago, the Chilean nitrate supply fell off over 50 per cent. That was due partly, I think, to our failure in ships and partly to the fact that our allies were needing more and more Chile nitrate all of the time. Suddenly we were face to face with this emergency. The American Cyanamid Co. is a going concern; it is a very large concern, and while it is using what is known as the cyanamid process, which was not recommended as a modern means of producing nitrogen, nevertheless they have the plant and the equipment, and I presume that the Government found itself in such dire necessity for immediate supply of nitrate that it had to make the best contract it could.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Just let me finish this—the Government will own this plant when the war is over, but so far as the value of the plant of the Government is concerned, after the war is over it will be absolutely useless.

Mr. CANNON. Which plant?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The plant at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman from Ohio know that the fundamental basis upon which this plant was inaugurated a number of years ago was not essentially for the production of nitrate for war purposes but in the manufacture of cheap fertilizers?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know it was never thought of or contemplated until very recently. The gentleman gets his facts mixed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will tell the gentleman the exact situation. One requisite for the manufacture of nitrates by the cyanamid process is very great water power, or power of some sort that can be raised by steam or water power. They need hydroelectric energy. As the chairman of the committee says, twenty times the amount of power is required in the cyanamid process as in the process here proposed. Now, there is a prospectively large latent water-power development at Muscle Shoals; that is to say, by building a certain number of dams you could eventually generate it, but there is no water power there now. There will not be an ounce of water power there within four or five years. Therefore I criticized at the time the choice of Muscle Shoals as a site to put a plant which involves high power of any sort. Of course what they are doing now there and what they will do for the next four or five years is to generate their power partly by steam, and for which the Government will have to pay all the cost of the erection of the plant, and partly by hydroelectric power that is brought across country over 90 miles from a power plant on the Black Warrior River at a high cost to the Government. So the location of that plant at Muscle Shoals as a war measure can not be justified, in my opinion.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the time.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire more time?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would be glad to have five minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The question I have is a very simple one. I had heard that the cyanamid process had been successful, practically, in making ammonia, but practically it had not been successful in transforming the ammonia into nitrates. Am I misinformed?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not sure I can answer that question. It can be done, though, I understand.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I understand it was thought it could be done; but has it been done practically?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not answer, and probably will not be able to answer until this plant is completed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Why can not we try it at Niagara? They have a company there, have they not, for making cyanamid?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand so.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They are making ammonia?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They have tried also to make nitric acid out of ammonia, because I saw a prospectus. It was pretty vague, however.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to ask the gentleman if in the erection of the plant there at Muscle Shoals it was not done by subcontractors on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is exactly what I have been saying several times.

Mr. EDMONDS. No; the gentleman said the cyanamid company got 3½ per cent on the contract. Then they again sublet the contract on a cost-plus basis to subcontractors for the entire erection of the plant.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That I do not know. It may be so.

Mr. EDMONDS. I think the gentleman will find that so if he goes to investigate it.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. BLAND. Is it not also true that the two plants contemplated in Ohio and the two at Muscle Shoals and the plant at Indianhead, the five of them, will not make near enough nitrates to supply the demand in the United States?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think they will probably, when operating, make about enough, so far as our needs are now known.

Mr. PADGETT. It is said not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Possibly not. I am not criticizing the very large development of our supply of nitrate. We must have it, and we must get it in any way we can get it now. But I am criticizing in some cases the location of some of these plants. I do criticize the selection, as I have repeatedly, of Muscle Shoals as a spot in which to put a plant which needs a very large amount of power, where there is no developed power and can not be for five years to come. Now, that is the difference between that and the two Ohio plants. There is near both locations in Ohio a vast power already developed. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Would it not be good policy to place these plants where they could be operated by cheap water power?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Perhaps so, but it is now too late to change. Fortunately the plant we are now considering does not need a large cheap water power.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like a little time.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time would the gentleman from Illinois like?

Mr. CANNON. I would like about five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold for half a second while I make a unanimous-consent request, please?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Now, after all these explanations, as near as I can find out, it is $45,000,000 for the Alabama plant.

Mr. MADDEN. It is $45,000,000 for this Ohio plant.

Mr. CANNON. I did not so understand it. I understand it is $45,000,000 for the Alabama plant and as much more for the Ohio plant. Is that so?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how much is provided for the Ohio plant. That is in the Army and I have not kept up with it.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Then we have $90,000,000 for the Alabama and Ohio plants, and this plant at Indianhead is to cost $9,000,000. Now, how much of capacity is this plant going to have?

Mr. PADGETT. Sufficient for 100,000 pounds of powder a day.

Mr. CANNON. I can not tell from that the product we are to have in five years from the Alabama plant or the Ohio plant.

Mr. PADGETT. I can not give the gentleman the figures as to the other plant.

Mr. CANNON. But I do know this: If you could rely upon the statement that enough nitrate can be furnished to make 100,000 pounds of powder a day—can be furnished by the plant at Indianhead to be constructed by the Government in 90 days, while the Government plants, costing to construct $90,000,000, to be finished God only knows when—does not the gentleman think we had better cancel the Government contracts to construct the Alabama and Ohio plants?

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield? If this 100,000-pound powder plant blows up, as they are in the habit of doing, what will happen to the plant?

Mr. CANNON. This is to be separate from the powder plant, as I understand it, and in no way connected with it.

Mr. HELM. It is in the same place, down here at Indianhead.

Mr. CANNON. Indianhead means a pretty large scope of country. I take it for granted they would not build it up next to the powder house or where powder was stored or being made. Now, I think in the future, from the insufficient information I have about the construction of these nitrate plants under the stress of war, and the Alabama projects and, as I understand it, the Ohio project, if the war does not last longer than four or five years, they will not be needed for war purposes. I do not know; I think a good many of us will be out of Congress before that time comes; but I think I can play the rôle of a successful prophet when I say that the rocks and mountains will fall on somebody who, in the name of war and carrying on this war, are making these extraordinary expenditures, I fear, not to win the war but to deplete the Treasury.

Mr. PADGETT. We went into it very fully and carefully, and the amendment of the gentleman contemplating the repeal of existing law would not be in order, and I would not want to undertake it. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring in Senate amendment No. 75.

The Senate amendment No. 75 was concurred in.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate amendment No. 100 be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 100: Page 63 of the bill, after line 9, insert the following:

"For the building of or providing for the construction of a railroad to connect the naval proving ground and the naval smokeless powder factory at Indianhead, Md., with existing or contemplated railway lines, under terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy, authority being granted for the immediate condemnation of the necessary right of way, $550,000."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, let us have some explanation of that item.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement in regard to that. That is intimately connected with the nitrate plant and also with the manufacture of powder at the present time. For months the only transportation to Indianhead has been difficult. The transportation at all times is by water, carrying freight up the river by tugs. During the past winter there were a number of times when they were in desperate straits for getting their materials there and getting their products away. It is very essential to have railroad communication. This amendment proposes for the Government to build and own a road of 14 miles to connect with the Pennsylvania road. The Government will own the road.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does that contemplate the building of a road from Indianhead to Washington?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It is a different project. It is to run from Indianhead to a place called Pope's Creek Station, about 14 miles, to connect with the other road. It is absolutely essential that we should have it, but there should be some amendment to it, and I am going to move to still further insist; but at the same time I am stating that this is a matter that should be agreed to.

I want to ask unanimous consent of the House that the appropriation that the Senate put in of $550,000 may be reported by the conferees at $850,000, for the simple reason that this $550,000 was an estimate made after a hasty survey, and upon a more careful survey and more thorough investigation it is found that it will require $850,000 to do this work instead of $550,000; and to make an appropriation of $550,000 would simply necessitate bringing in a deficiency later on. I want to deal frankly with the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the same proposal that was embodied in a bill reported from the gentleman's committee some time ago?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not.

Mr. STAFFORD. A proposal providing for aid to a railroad that was projected to run from the District here down to some place on the river?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not. It is entirely different.

Mr. STAFFORD. What was that proposal?

Mr. PADGETT. The proposal there was that a private company would construct a road from a point on the Baltimore &

Ohio Railroad near the District line, 5 or 6 miles out of Washington, and run down the east bank of the Potomac to Indianhead and on through Indianhead to Newport News, Va.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was proposed to reach the same object that is designed by this provision?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but at that time the company that was making that proposal had not collapsed. It has collapsed financially since then, and they are not able to get the money to carry out their proposal.

This is for the Government itself to build its own road and own it and operate it from the powder factory and nitrate plant at Indianhead to the connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Mr. STAFFORD. What estimate or report has the gentleman as to the cost that this project of a Government-constructed line will ultimately cause the Government to bear?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated $850,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is that based upon?

Mr. PADGETT. It is based upon the estimates that were made as a result of the surveys down there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that include rolling stock and other equipment necessary for this 14-mile line of railroad?

Mr. PADGETT. They have the engines already down there.

Mr. BUTLER. It is just to build 14 miles.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they have the engines and the cars down there now that they have to use around the yard, and this would be used as a terminal or yard line going out of the Indianhead yard to connect with the main line of the railroad.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for just a minute, to make a statement to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I stood out for a long time against the construction of a railroad to Indianhead, but let me say to my friend that it is absolutely necessary. We can not reach Indianhead unless we build this railroad. We can build one that will cost perhaps $3,000,000 and require perhaps a year to complete, and the Secretary of the Navy earnestly urges us to assist him in getting to this great powder factory at Indianhead. Therefore, I will say further to my friend, I have followed the Secretary of the Navy, as I am doing in everything at this time. He is responsible, and I shall vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the report that the gentleman's committee submitted in connection with aid to be rendered to a private railroad to reach this same ground——

Mr. BUTLER. That blew up.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the report submitted in connection with that bill it was argued that the main reason why this aid should be given was the difficulty of access during the winter months, but that there were ample accommodations to reach that ground during the open season of navigation.

Mr. PADGETT. Leave out the word "ample."

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course a railroad would give facilities additional to the river accommodations.

Mr. PADGETT. The hearings show, and I have a letter received just a few days ago from Admiral Earle stating that they are continually in stress and on the very point of shutting down because of the lack of transportation, and he urges it upon me. We had a hearing before the committee in which it developed that it would require $850,000 instead of the $550,000 reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any positive assurance or any authoritative information that $850,000 will be all that will be needed for the building of this railroad?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Earle so stated, and the hearings show that there was a bid from a responsible concern for that amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was that merely for grading, or for the ties and rails?

Mr. PADGETT. It was for the road completed, ready to put the rolling stock onto it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a project that has not been considered by the Naval Affairs Committee. It is another instance of burdening down the naval appropriation bill with legislative propositions that the full committee has not passed upon, and forcing the Congress on the spur of the moment to consider it without that thorough consideration that many of these projects demand.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit, in the estimate submitted to the committee, amounting to something like $1,000,000, there was $5,000 a mile in the first estimate made for drawing blue prints, and overseeing, and so on. Now, they come back and say it can not be built for that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean the blue-print cost?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. It does not say blue print, but it says $7,500 for an architect——

Mr. STAFFORD. Per mile?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. No; $7,500 for architect, $35,000 for Newport News Railroad right of way, and the estimates they have made.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is speaking of the old project, he is not talking about the present one.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. The reason I am calling attention to this is to give the committee some idea of the accuracy of the estimates we got. May I ask the chairman of the committee what the entire length is to Indianhead?

Mr. PADGETT. To go around I think it is about 64½ miles.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. The chairman will remember that in the first estimate submitted to the committee one of the items they insisted on that was essential was that they could transport the laborers to and from Indianhead. Does the chairman believe that this will serve any purpose in that line?

Mr. PADGETT. It will include it, but not to the same extent that it would if it had built the road over the 28 miles. The other project was a project to construct the road 28 miles from Washington, and the Government was to agree to furnish so much freight for a period of six years. That whole thing has collapsed, but the pressing need is so great that the Government has proposed to build this road where they say they can build it within a few days.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. The testimony before the subcommittee was that they needed it whether the river was open or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been stated to me privately that $850,000 is the proposal by a private concern to build the road. Does that include the cost and the right of way?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the right of way been obtained?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know; it has been surveyed.

Mr. MUDD. They survey has all been made. It is in my district, and I think the right of way has been obtained.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether the right of way has been obtained or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been no appropriation made whereby it could be obtained.

Mr. PADGETT. It appears that it is in the estimates for $19,000 for right of way. We did not appropriate for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a single-track railroad?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard a moment on this.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time that this proposition has been before the House. Three times it has failed to pass. It first appeared on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Then it was a bill providing for the construction of a railroad from Indianhead into the city of Washington or the District of Columbia, the terminus to be anywhere that an unnamed railroad company might see fit to locate it. Of course this was to be with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy, but because of his great burden of duties, his action in this case would of necessity be perfunctory. As I said, that was a proposition to build a railroad from Indianhead to some unknown terminus anywhere in Washington or the District, the location to be left absolutely to the Secretary and this unnamed company. A few moments ago we learned that after the failure of that bill to pass this company collapsed.

This proposition came up again on the 20th of April as a paragraph in the naval bill, when that measure was before the House. During that debate I said that there was a provision in the bill which as presented ought to be defeated. Here is what I said. I now read from the RECORD:

> Look on page 48. It occupies the entire page. It is a proposition to give the Secretary of the Navy complete authority to permit an unnamed railroad company to build a road into the city and have its terminus at an unmentioned place anywhere in Washington or the District that he or the unnamed railroad company may decide to locate it.

A little later in the discussion, before we had reached page 48, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] rose and said:

> Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike from the bill without reading the provision on page 48.
>
> Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please state why he does that?
>
> Mr. PADGETT. I understand that other arrangements have been made to build the railroad. I understand the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. is going to build a road on its own account down there.
>
> Mr. BUTLER. That is, the railroad proposition.
>
> Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to strike from the bill, without reading it, all of page 48. Is there objection?
>
> There was no objection.

So it was stricken out. A very few minutes later I said—

> Does the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out include all of the paragraph on page 48?
> The CHAIRMAN. The entire page.
> Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the one to which I called attention.
> Mr. PADGETT. That is it.

It first came up on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and, on objection being made, was stricken out.

The second time it appeared it went out on the motion of the chairman of the Naval Committee himself, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], he saying that he understood that other arrangements had been made and that another company, the Pennsylvania, would build the road.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A few days later this proposition made its third appearance—that time again on the Unanimous Consent Calendar—although the chairman of the committee had on a previous occasion informed the House that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. would build the road and had himself caused the paragraph to be withdrawn. For the third time it was stricken out. But here, for the fourth time, it comes and in form not substantially changed. The House has had no opportunity to pass upon this—

For the building of or providing for the construction of a railroad to connect the naval proving grounds and the naval smokeless powder factory at Indianhead, Md., with existing or contemplated railway lines—

My friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS], at this point very properly asks, "Where?" Note this indefinite language—with existing or contemplated railway lines—

What lines and where are they and where is to be the terminus in this city?—

under terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy, authority being granted for the immediate condemnation of the necessary right of way, $550,000.

Although this says $550,000, we now are informed by the gentleman from Tennessee that the amount is to be $800,000. When four months ago it first came here the amount was between three and four hundred thousand dollars. And now, as before, the proposal is to have an unnamed corporation construct the road to an unnamed point in Washington.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, this would seem to be a war measure, and there ought to be a railroad down there to that proving ground, and in the interest of getting this amendment in proper shape so that gentlemen will not object to it when it comes in, I want to ask this question. The only point designated here in the point of origin, that is, the proving ground at Indianhead. Would it not be better to insist that the chairman bring this back and designate the other terminal, the point of destination?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I stated to the House at the beginning that in moving to still further insist upon our disagreement, it would require amendments. We did not have this in conference. It was one of the matters that was reserved, and it is expected to amend it so as to specify the point. But it is absolutely necessary as a war measure to have it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It was stated four months ago that it was a war measure.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, it was.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it was a war measure when the gentleman moved to strike it out because the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was going to construct it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and it is all very plain to a person who will deal with the situation. When I first brought it in here I brought it in on the recommendation that the company had represented that they were prepared to build this road and would build it, and the Government was only to agree to take so much freight—$60,000 worth of transportation a year—for six years and pay for it after the transportation was given. However, later it developed that the company had been disappointed in getting its money. Conditions are changing very rapidly.

The railroad situation was taken over by the Government and the trust company that they expected to furnish the money declined to do so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the railroads had been taken over before that time.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that, but things can change from day to day and week to week. Now, I had put the bill upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar. When it was called the first time, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] objected and it went off. He said to me I could put it back on and have some further explanation. I put it back on immediately and it was on there from that time, and when we reported the naval bill we incorporated the same provision in the bill because that was the only opening at the time, and when we read it I moved to strike it out without taking time to have it read, and I stated that I was informed that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was expecting to build this connecting line. When the railroad company made its proposition it insisted that the Government should furnish the money to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to build it and they declined to do that and submitted this proposition that the Government furnishes the money, build the road, and own it itself, and operate it as a Government road. Now, that is the whole situation. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on my motion to still further insist upon the disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to further insist on the House disagreement to Senate amendment No. 100.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees when appointed may have authority to increase this amount to $850,000 instead of this authorization, and report a deficiency later.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that when the conferees are appointed and meet they shall have the right to raise this amount to $850,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Did I understand the length of the road was expected to be about 14 miles?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is about $60,000 per mile, single-track road, and over a very level country.

Mr. PADGETT. With the cost of iron, rails, and so forth, that is the estimate that has been made for the completing of the road.

Mr. BUTLER. And bid submitted to the department?

Mr. RIORDAN. By Bryan & Co.

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague from New York knows the party.

Mr. CRAMTON. Has there been any opportunity for competitive bidding?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is simply a single-track road through a level country, with no rolling stock.

Mr. BUTLER. There is some cutting and filling.

Mr. CRAMTON. But it is not a mountainous country.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very high, but what are we to do?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the committee can not do anything I suppose I can not, but it seems to me to be an exorbitant figure.

Mr. BUTLER. We have tried hard to obtain a passageway to this point, and this seems to be the only avenue that offers, apparently.

Mr. ROBBINS. One moment; ought it not to be "not to exceed $850,000"?

Mr. PADGETT. We would report it not to exceed $850,000. There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, there is one we passed over, and that is amendment No. 93. That is for the purpose of developing a submarine base at Key West. I wanted to move that the House still further insist on its disagreement, but I want to make this statement: We had a hearing and it developed that it is very necessary to develop this base there, but instead of an appropriation of $2,525,000, $1,000,000 of appropriation is all that will be needed in this bill with an authorization for the other, but I can not well move to agree to this amendment because we do not need all of that, but we can come back with an amendment and save an appropriation of a million and a half dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask my chairman, does not the gentleman think we should quit to-night; we can not finish this.

Mr. PADGETT. There is only one more, and I think we can finish it in a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Why not make the motion to agree with an amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. We can report it back.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 93.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is an item of considerable moment, involving an appropriation as carried of $2,500,000, or which will ultimately involve that amount of expenditure. During the consideration of the river and harbor bill the energetic Representative from that district secured, in opposition to the chairman's position, an appropriation for dredging a channel as a new project. I wish the chairman would give some information as to the extent of the property that is sought to be purchased at this place.

Mr. PADGETT. On pages 737, 738, and 739 of the hearings, the Secretary goes into that very fully.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee, of which the gentleman is an honored member, has never considered this proposition. I think the House is entitled to some facts, even though the facts are stated in the supplementary hearings the subcommittee has had.

Mr. PADGETT. I am trying to state them and give the gentleman information. The Secretary states that he had a board and they recommended this one among a number of others. He says:

We have no base for submarines, you may say, south of Norfolk; we have nothing at all in the Caribbean and the Gulf. If we had submarine troubles in any of those waters, we have no base for our submarines, and no well-equipped place to repair them and keep them in shape. A submarine is like a baby; you have to sit up with it nights. Admiral Benson, after the question of defending our coast with submarines became more acute, urged that that be included.

And they go on at length with it, and he just simply amplifies——

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any of this appropriation to be used for dredging purposes, similar to the project at Charleston? Is this one of the shallow-water projects for the development of some interior land project down there?

Mr. PADGETT. No; this is not for dredging.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it something like that at Cape May, where the engineers report that they had great difficulty in keeping the channel open, but nevertheless the Navy Department selected that as a submarine base?

Mr. PADGETT. This was selected because they have nothing south of Norfolk.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am citing a parallel case, at Cape May, where the engineers show that the shoals arise there by reason of storms, and they have great difficulty because of them in maintaining an open channel, and yet the department selected that as a submarine base.

Mr. PADGETT. We will not have any such trouble with this.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have been at Key West, and my experience down there leaves me to think it is largely of coral formation.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no filling up.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is a sort of formation that it would be impossible to dredge with any degree of satisfaction. Does it not fill up again?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not silt at all. When they get the water there, it is permanent.

Mr. ROBBINS. The testimony on page 737 says:

At present only very inadequate facilities are available for the use of submarines based at Key West.

What do you mean to do in order to make adequate facilities?

Mr. PADGETT. We have got to have some repair shops and piers and docks for them to go alongside of, and basins.

Mr. ROBBINS. And he says:

Sea walls, breakwater, finger piers, officers' quarters, enlisted men's barracks, and the extension of a yard-service system to serve these structures.

Mr. PADGETT. All of those things are set out on page 738. You will see them there in full.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is not Key West a very exposed place? I found it windy and sandy and with waves dashing around it. I think it is a bad place for a submarine base.

Mr. PADGETT. It projects out to the farthest point we have on the south coast, several hundred miles farther out than any other point, and it guards that channel, of about 80 or 90 miles, that enters into the Gulf of Mexico. And also it is important for the transit of ships to the Panama Canal. It is the nearest point we can get for their defense and protection.

Mr. SEARS. Admiral Benson also said that a submarine base there would protect a radius of 1,000 miles.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. As far as the harbor filling in is concerned, the harbor there has not had any improvement on it since 1912, and still is not filled up. It does not fill up. That coral formation is solid.

Mr. ROBBINS. I know that; but the corals have not ceased to work.

Mr. SEARS. Evidently it does not fill rapidly because it is the depth now that it had in 1912. The appropriation I secured is only to widen the harbor and not to deepen it. It is the same depth of approximately 30 feet now that it had in 1912. No money for the purpose of maintenance has been spent on that harbor since that time, which is proof conclusive that it does not fill up, at least very rapidly.

Mr. ROBBINS. What amount did the gentleman get in the river and harbor bill this year to improve that harbor?

Mr. SEARS. Two hundred and thirty-two thousand dollars.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is that for dredging?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has been renominated and no doubt will be reelected.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am glad to hear of that, but I was directing my attention to this harbor.

Mr. SEARS. The purpose was to increase the width of the harbor from 400 to 800 feet.

Mr. ROBBINS. How deep is the water?

Mr. SEARS. Twenty-six feet in the 400 width, and this to widen it, to increase to a depth of 26 feet a channel 800 feet wide; but it was not for the improvement of the harbor as it now stands at all.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wanted to clear up those facts. I see the Secretary of the Navy, on page 738 of the hearings, in reply to a question of the chairman, is quoted in regard to that. I quote:

The CHAIRMAN. That place, then, is regarded by yourself, by the board, and by all the naval officers as a strategic and important point on the South Atlantic, the Gulf and Caribbean coasts?

Secretary DANIELS. Yes.

The Secretary replied to that, "Yes." So that the Secretary of the Navy seems to approve it and the committee seems to approve it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the Secretary approves of it strongly, and the board of naval officers, including Admiral Benson, approved it.

Mr. ROBBINS. It seems to me to be an exposed position for a submarine base, but I defer to the superior knowledge of the naval officials.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that we further insist on our disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on its disagreement. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is now half past 5, and I understand a number of Members want to go. I want to ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday tomorrow and that we may then take up this conference report and dispose of it.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman means to dispense with Calendar Wednesday until this is completed, not to dispense with it entirely?

Mr. PADGETT. I am perfectly willing to do that; but the chairman of the committee that has the call said he was willing to dispense with it for the whole day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the two bills that I expect to call up have a privileged status, and it is understood that I may call them up for consideration after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of. With that understanding I am willing that Calendar Wednesday shall be dispensed with to-morrow.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, there is on the calendar a bill providing for the taking of the fourteenth census, and under the Constitution it is a privileged bill. I have been very considerate and indulgent and have tried to be as good as I could with persons who had bills that were not privileged, and I do not want to interfere with the arrangements of anyone; but at the first opportunity I propose to insist upon the consideration of that bill. It has a privileged status, and it is a bill that has to be passed at this session of Congress. If it is not passed at this session it will be absolutely impossible to pass it at the short session of this Congress. The decennial period begins July 1, 1919. There is a recess just ahead of us, and if this bill is not passed before that recess, when we come back here to pass the revenue bill the membership will be wanting to get back into the campaign, and I am going to insist as vigorously as I can upon the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Now, does the gentleman know we are going to have a recess?

Mr. HELM. I think the cards are pretty well set that way, from what I can gather.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will permit, the majority leader [Mr. KITCHIN] was on the floor this morning and told me that he wanted me to call up the two bills to which I have referred, reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which have a privileged status, immediately following the naval appropriation bill, and he wanted the census bill to follow those two bills, and wanted all three bills to be passed this week.

Mr. HELM. As I understand, the gentleman from Missouri, whose two bills have a privileged status, can not interfere with committees that have a privileged bill. His bills can not interfere with a conference report and would not interfere with a bill that has a privileged status, as the census bill has, under the Constitution, which requires that the enumeration must be made every 10 years.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it can all be worked out. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew my request that Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that he change his request and ask that he be permitted to finish the consideration of his bill to-morrow, and then let whatever may be left of Calendar Wednesday come up in the regular order?

Mr. PADGETT. I am perfectly willing to do that, as far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that, notwithstanding Calendar Wednesday, this conference report shall be in order in the morning. Is there objection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not want to agree to that unless it is understood that if these two bills have not been disposed of to-morrow I may call them up on Thursday.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman already has that privileged status for his bills under unanimous consent, whether it is to-morrow or the next day or the next day. The only thing I am seeking by the suggestion is that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] may finish his bill to-morrow, and then under the rule for Calendar Wednesday the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] will be able to take up his two bills, with two hours' debate on each one of them, and pass them both to-morrow.

Mr. HELM. Has the gentleman from Texas decided that the bills of the gentleman from Missouri have precedence over a bill that is privileged under the Constitution?

Mr. GARNER. On Calendar Wednesday they have.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has the call to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of that portion of the rule relative to Calendar Wednesday which states that no bills which are privileged under the rules may be brought up?

The SPEAKER. Which bill is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am referring to the bills given a privileged status at the request of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. ALEXANDER. House bills 12099 and 12100. These bills have both been given a privileged status, just like appropriation bills. That is the reason I do not propose to object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to dispensing with it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday for to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. One moment. Has the gentleman's committee the call to-morrow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has the first call, but I understand that committee has no business to call up. Then the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will follow.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman proposes to call up these two bills?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; to call them up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has examined the rule since I have. Is it a fact that the two bills of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] having a privileged status cuts them out on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have some doubt whether the order giving them a privileged status, which is a rule of the House, would not, under that exception that bills which are privileged under the rules, prevent those bills being considered.

The SPEAKER. But these bills are not privileged under the rules.

Mr. GARNER. That is exactly it.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are privileged under a special rule that makes them privileged. The reason for that limitation in the rule as to Calendar Wednesday was to enable bills not privileged to be called up which otherwise could not be called up. And, carrying out the reason for the rule, the Speaker would have to hold that these bills would not be in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. I believe the gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to abolish Calendar Wednesday for to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. KEATING were given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 19, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in these perilous times we lift our hearts day by day to Thee. We have been called forth by the challenge of Thy word. We have brought our best and laid it upon the sacrificial altar of the world's freedom, and when we have done all we still look to Thee for guidance and blessing and victory. Do Thou, O God, be pleased to hasten the time for the final triumph of the right. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the last business transacted in the Senate last evening was placing before the Senate the bill (S. 130) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes. This the RECORD shows, but I notice that upon the calendar there is no reference to it as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the measure is now the unfinished business of the Senate, and it will be laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11185) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4127) to authorize the W. M. Ritter Lumber Co., a corporation, to construct bridges across the branches and tributaries of the Big Sandy River and their tributaries, in the counties of Buchanan and Dickenson, in the State of Virginia, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the executive board of the Dubuque County Equal Suffrage Association, of Iowa, in the nature of a protest against undue delay on the part of the Senate in considering and adopting the proposed amendment to the Constitution providing for equal suffrage. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I shall have to object to that request. A copy of the petition is probably on the desk of every Senator. If the Senator will look at the first page of the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, he will see how a brief statement is given of every petition and memorial without printing them in the RECORD in full.

Mr. CUMMINS. This particular resolution would not take more than three lines in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I object to its being printed. It is with great reluctance that I have to object to printing in the RECORD any more petitions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Nugent	Sutherland
Cummins	Kendrick	Overman	Tillman
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Fernald	King	Pittman	Trammell
Gallinger	Kirby	Poindexter	Underwood
Gronna	Knox	Pomerene	Vardaman
Hale	Lenroot	Robinson	Warren
Harding	Lewis	Saulsbury	Willey
Hardwick	Lodge	Shafroth
Henderson	McKellar	Sheppard
Hitchcock	McLean	Shields

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are detained in the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are detained on official business.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is detained by illness, and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained by illness in his family.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. Before the absence of a quorum was suggested the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] requested to have a certain petition printed in the RECORD. The Chair did not hear the colloquy which took place between the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Arizona. The Senator from Iowa being absent, the Chair will assume that no motion was made to print, and therefore there is no question to be submitted to the Senate, as the rule requires.

Mr. BORAH. I send a telegram to the desk which is in the form of a petition, and the petitioners request that it be read into the RECORD. So I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator from Arizona objects?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona objects.

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have the petition returned to me. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from a number of women——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to state what it is so as to have it referred. I thought I was following the rule which the Senator suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; you are not if you are going to read it.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to read it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BORAH. I am going to conform to the rule because I think it is a good rule. I simply state that I have a telegram in the form of a petition from a committee of women of Pocatello, Idaho, indorsing the national suffrage amendment and asking me to vote for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received and lie on the table.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have received a great number of petitions from the citizens of various cities and towns in Tennessee indorsing the Federal suffrage amendment to the Constitution, urging the Senators from that State to vote for the measure, and also protesting against further delay in the Senate in bringing up the measure for final disposition. Under the rule I will present to the Reporter a list of the petitioners and have the resolutions lie on the table, the joint resolution being before the Senate, as I understand from the Senator from Arizona that that is the proper course to pursue.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator is clearly within his rights. He has done what he ought to do in presenting the petitions, and inasmuch as he is making no effort to have the petitions printed in full, but will designate them as the rule requires, there can be no objection to it on the part of the Senate.

The petitions were ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolutions from the Episcopal Daughters of the King, State convention, protest; Tennessee Republican State Committee, indorsement and protest; Memphis Trade and Labor Council, indorsement and protest; Tennessee State Federation of Women's Clubs, indorsement and protest; Nashville Political Study Club, indorsement and protest; Nashville Woman's Suffrage Association, indorsement and protest; Nashville Twenty-second Ward Association, indorsement and protest; Nashville Public School Association, protest; Nashville Parents-Teachers Association, indorsement and protest; Nashville Friday Morning Literary Club, indorsement and protest; Nashville Belmont Literary Club, indorsement and protest; Ward Belmont College for Girls, faculty and teachers, indorsement and protest; Nashville mayor and city commissioners, indorsement and protest; Nashville Twentieth Ward Organization, indorsement and protest; Altrusea Club of Business Women, indorsement and protest; Nashville Twentieth Century Club, indorsement and protest; mass meeting, Jackson, Tenn., indorsement and protest; Clarksville women's mass meeting, indorsement and protest; Clarksville Music Club, indorsement and protest; Lebanon women's meeting, indorsement and protest; Nashville Committee Fatherless Children of France, protest; Ashland City, Cheatam County, resolution signed by prominent men, indorsement and protest; McKenzie, Carroll County, resolutions signed by prominent men, indorsement and protest; Red Cross chapter, Franklin, Williamson County, resolutions of, indorsement and protest; Columbia, Maury County, resolutions of, indorsement and protest; public meeting, Mount Pleasant, Maury County, indorsement and protest; Tullahoma, Coffee County, petition of, indorsement and protest; Gallatin, Sumner County, resolutions sent by citizens of, indorsement and protest; Springfield meeting, Robertson County, resolutions of, indorsement and protest; Manchester Citizen, petition, indorsement, and protest; Pulaski, Giles County, resolutions, indorsements, and protests from citizens; Nashville Housewives' League, resolutions, indorsements, and protests; Memphis, resolutions, petitions, and protests from citizens; favorable editorials in both Nashville daily papers; favorable editorials in Memphis daily paper; favorable editorials in Clarksville paper; favorable editorials in Pulaski paper; Nashville Trade and Labor Council, indorsement and protest.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by sundry citizens of the State of Wyoming favoring the enactment of further prohibition legislation as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LENROOT presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oneida County, Wis., praying for the automatic forfeiture of citizenship for all disloyal citizens and the strict enforcement of the alien enemy, espionage, and naturalization laws, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Berkshire County, of the Equal Suffrage League of North Adams, and of the Dennison Memorial Women's Union, of New Bedford, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Somerville, Mass., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Federation of Churches, praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Maine Medical Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide protection of the military and naval forces of the United States against venereal diseases, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Maine State Branch of the American Federation of Labor, of Lewiston, Me., praying for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. SAULSBURY) presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kent County, Del., praying for the immediate submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 4527) to authorize the payment of indemnities to the Government of Greece for injuries inflicted on its nationals during riots occurring in South Omaha, Nebr., February 21, 1909, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 515) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4687) to amend further an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 516) thereon.

HOMESTEADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Territories I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 8563) to amend the homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes; and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That every person who is qualified under existing laws to make homestead entry of the public lands of the United States who has settled upon or who shall hereafter settle upon any of the public lands of the United States situated in the District of Alaska, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved March 3, 1903, chapter 1002, United States Statutes at Large, page 1028, be entitled to enter 160 acres or a less quantity of unappropriated public land in said District of Alaska, and no more, and a former homestead entry in any other State or Territory shall not be a bar to a homestead entry in Alaska: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or curtail the area of any homestead claim heretofore lawfully initiated.

"SEC. 2. That if the system of public surveys has not been extended over the land included in a homestead entry, the entryman may, after due compliance with the terms of the homestead law in the matter of residence, cultivation, and improvement, submit to the register and receiver a showing as to such compliance, duly corroborated by two witnesses, and if such evidence satisfactorily shows that the homesteader is in a position to submit acceptable final proof the surveyor general of the Territory will be so advised and will, not later than the next succeeding surveying season, issue proper instructions for the survey of the land so entered, without expense to the entryman, who may thereafter submit final proof as in similar entries of surveyed lands. So far as practicable, such survey shall follow the general system of public-land surveys, and the entryman shall conform his boundaries thereto: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the homesteader from securing earlier action on his entry by a special survey at his own expense, if he so elects.

"SEC. 3. That there shall be excepted from homestead settlement and entry under this act the lands in Annette and Pribilof Islands, the islands leased or occupied for the propagation of foxes, and such other lands as have been, or may be, reserved or withdrawn from settlement or entry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that unanimous consent is asked, and that no motion is made to take up the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Unanimous consent is asked; that is all.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Nevada whether this is the House bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is the House bill reported without amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada to state in brief terms the general object and purpose of the bill. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are a number of little isolated tracts of land in Alaska along river bottoms and the bottoms of little creeks that have been settled on for homesteads. It is impossible to apply the general law of survey by townships and sections to that character of land. The bill is simply to enable special surveys to be made of those isolated tracts upon the payment by the applicant for the service. That is about all there is to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does it relate to homestead entries?

Mr. PITTMAN. To homestead entries.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to call attention to the conference report on the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended.

This is an amendment to our war-risk insurance legislation and the department is very anxious to have it completed at once. The Senate passed the bill and the House passed the bill with amendments. The conferees have agreed upon a conference report and the House has adopted the conference report. I am very anxious to have the conference report laid before the Senate this morning and to have the Senate adopt the report.

There are scarcely any changes in the conference report from the bill as it passed the Senate. Perhaps the most important one is to add "parents by adoption" to the list of those who are to have the benefit under the insurance and compensation provisions of the act. The Senate did not adopt that provision; the House did, and the Senate conferees yielded to the House and added "parents by adoption" to the parties.

There are one or two other things. We have had it printed in a way that we think Senators can understand it. [After a pause.] I understand there are a number of other routine matters that it is the desire to have disposed of during the morning hour. I will wait until a little later in the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator I do not think it will take long to adopt the conference report.

ABANDONED LIGHTHOUSE AND LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. MYERS. On the 7th of this month, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, I introduced a bill (S. 4679) to provide for the disposition of abandoned lighthouse and life-saving stations. The bill was prepared by the Interior Department, the object of which is a disposition under certain circumstances of the United States Government land once occupied by lighthouses and life-saving stations which have been abandoned. It does not relate in any way whatever to lighthouses and life-saving stations, but only relates to the land on which they once stood before they were abandoned. At the time of introducing it I asked that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, to which committee I think it belongs, but inadvertently I think it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I do not believe that it belongs to that committee, as it relates wholly to public lands. I move that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Montana to what the bill relates. I did not understand that.

Mr. MYERS. The bill relates to the disposition of United States lands which were once used by lighthouses and life-saving stations which have been since abandoned. I did not know that the bill had been referred to the Commerce Committee until a few days ago. I have been trying to see the chairman of that committee in reference to the matter; but he is sick, and I do not know when he will be here. The bill does not relate to matters within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce at all, and I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, instead of making a motion to that effect.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is granted. The Committee on Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

FILING APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By the Committee on Patents I am instructed to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3524) to amend the act entitled "An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens," approved August 17, 1916, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. Before the question is put, however, I should like to make a very brief statement.

It is a bill proposing to extend the time within which foreigners may file applications for patents during the war, and also to extend the time during which our citizens may file applications for patents in foreign countries; that is, for foreigners to give us reciprocal conditions. There was approved August 17, 1916, House bill 13982, which is the existing law. The Commissioner of Patents has written a letter, which is a part of the report of Mr. SMITH, of the Patents Committee of the House of Representatives, upon H. R. 8763, which is identical with the bill which the Senate Committee on Patents has just instructed me to report favorably. The House committee has unanimously reported favorably the identical bill which the Senate committee now directs me to report favorably. It has not yet, however, been acted upon by the other House. The Commissioner of Patents is extremely anxious to have early action upon the bill, and at his request the Senate committee has instructed the bill to be reported without amendment.

I ask that the report and the act of August 17, 1916, the existing law, be printed in the RECORD. I have included in parentheses in the act the words which have been dropped out of the law, which accomplish the desired change. The Commissioner of Patents states in his letter—which, of course, can be read if the Senate desires to hear it—that the act we passed, which is known as the trading-with-the-enemy act, would allow certain privileges to Germans and their allies as to filing their applications for patents and trade-marks in this country, but did not allow such privileges to our friends with whom we are in alliance. The object of this bill, by striking out the language which I have included in parentheses in the act of August 17, 1916, is to put our friends upon an equally advantageous basis with our enemies in the matter of extending the time within which they may apply for patents. Of course, the bill will be read, if considered, and if any Senator desires further information I shall be glad to give it. The report, however, contains the entire reasons for the legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the documents referred to by the Senator from Connecticut will be printed in the RECORD.

The documents are as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 616, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred H. R. 8763, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration and recommend that the bill do pass. The bill is as follows:

"A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens,' approved August 17, 1916.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled 'An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens,' approved August 17, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"'SECTION 1. That any applicant for letters patent or for the registration of any trade-mark, print, or label, being within the provisions of this act, if unable during war or within six months thereafter, on account of conditions arising out of war, to file any application or pay any official fee or take any required action within the period now limited by law, shall be granted an extension of nine months beyond the expiration of said period.

"'SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall be limited to citizens or subjects of countries which extend substantially similar privileges to the citizens of the United States.

"'SEC. 3. That this act shall be operative to relieve from default under existing law occurring since August 1, 1914, and all applications and letters patent and registrations in the filing or prosecution whereof default has occurred for which this act grants relief shall have the same force and effect as if said default had not occurred.'"

This bill was recommended by the Commissioner of Patents for reasons which he set forth in a statement to the Committee on Patents. Following is Commissioner Newton's statement:

"This is a bill to extend to the allies the privilege of filing applications for patents more than a year after they are filed in their own country when they have been prevented from filing during the year on account of the conditions of the war. It is rather an important bill, since we have about 100 applications waiting for its passage; in fact, it is the most important one to be considered.

"The trading-with-the-enemy act gave to the enemy the right to file applications in this country, and it also gave them the right to file them more than a year after they had filed in their native country. The present statute gives a foreigner, an Englishman, for instance, who files an application in his own country the privilege of filing in this country within a year from the time he files in his own country, or if he fails to file within the year, his patent is invalid when taken out in this country.

"We found that there were so many cases where they could not get their applications over here within a year that when the trading-with-the-enemy act was introduced there was a provision made in it that the Germans and their allies could file in this country more than a year after they filed in their own country. That privilege has never been extended to our allies at all.

"The trading-with-the-enemy act extends it to our enemies and does not extend it to our allies, so there can be no question, I think, but what we ought to pass that bill.

"That is the only question involved. I might add we do not grant any of those countries the privilege to file more than a year after the granting of patent in their own country unless those countries grant the same privileges to American citizens. That is a fundamental condition in all those bills."

The Committee on Patents voted unanimously to report the bill favorably and recommended its passage. It is especially desired that the measure pass at the present session of Congress, in view of the fact that more than a hundred applications are now pending in the Patent Office and can not be acted on in view of the inconsistency of the law as it now exists.

A letter from Acting Secretary of the Interior A. T. Vogelsang was submitted to the committee favoring the passage of the bill. This communication is as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, May 24, 1918.

"Hon. CHARLES B. SMITH,
"Chairman Committee on Patents,
"House of Representatives.

"MY DEAR MR. SMITH: The Commissioner of Patents informs me that on September 27, 1917, he submitted to you a copy of a proposed amendment to the act 'to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens,' approved August 17, 1916. Until this act is passed we will be in the position of extending privileges under the trading-with-the-enemy act to our enemies while denying the same privileges to our allies, which is, of course, regrettable.

"The commissioner states that this proposed bill was introduced in the Senate (S. 3524) and in the House (H. R. 8763), but no further action has been taken, and I write to request that since there can be no objection to this bill, and since there are numerous cases in the Patent Office that are awaiting action the bill be passed during the present session if possible.

"Very truly, yours, ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
"Acting Secretary."

The committee voted unanimously to report the bill, and no objection whatever was raised to it while under consideration by the committee.

[Public, No. 213—64th Cong. (H. R. 13982).]

An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens.

Be it enacted, etc., That any applicant for letters patent or for the registration of any trade-mark, print, or label, being within the provisions of this act, if unable on account of the existing and continuing state of war to file any application or pay any official fee or take any required action within the period now limited by law, shall be granted an extension of nine months beyond the expiration of said period.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall be limited to citizens or subjects of countries which extend substantially similar privileges to the citizens of the United States, and no extension shall be granted under this act to the citizens or subjects of any country while said country is at war with the United States.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be operative to relieve from default under existing law occurring since August 1, 1914, and before the 1st day of January, 1918, and all applications and letters patent and registrations in the filing or prosecution whereof default has occurred for which this act grants relief shall have the same force and effect as if said default had not occurred.

Approved, August 17, 1916.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens," approved August 17, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"That any applicant for letters patent or for the registration of any trade-mark, print, or label, being within the provisions of this act, if unable during war or within six months thereafter, on account of conditions arising out of war, to file any application or pay any official fee or take any required action within the period now limited by law, shall be granted an extension of nine months beyond the expiration of said period.

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall be limited to citizens or subjects of countries which extend substantially similar privileges to the citizens of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That this act shall be operative to relieve from default under existing law occurring since August 1, 1914, and all applications and letters patent and registrations in the filing or prosecution whereof default has occurred for which this act grants relief shall have the same force and effect as if said default had not occurred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMITTANCE OF CHARTREUSE.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) admitting into the United States 1,000 cases of chartreuse ordered by Batjer & Co., of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) admitting into the United States 1,000 cases of chartreuse ordered by Batjer & Co., of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect.

Whereas on July 31, 1917, Messrs. Batjer & Co., of New York, ordered from the Carthusian Monks in Tarragona, Spain, 1,000 cases of chartreuse, which was shipped August 9, 1917, but owing to delays caused by the state of war was not received at the New York customhouse until September 14, 1917; and

Whereas the admission of these 1,000 cases of chartreuse was refused by the collector of customs at the port of New York because they were received after the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, approved August 10, 1917, went into effect on September 9, 1917: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That in view of the good faith in which this importation was attempted and of the abnormal conditions which prevented its delivery, the collector of customs at the port of New York be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit the said 1,000 cases of chartreuse imported from the Carthusian Monks in Tarragona, Spain, and consigned to Messrs. Batjer & Co., of New York, importers, and to deliver the said consignment to Messrs Batjer & Co. upon the payment of the import duty and war-revenue tax due and any other charges accruing thereon.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the passage of the joint resolution, but it strikes me that it might be appropriate to refer it to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to see if it would be proper to incorporate it with other amendments of like character.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall ask that the letter from the Treasury Department be printed after the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection that will be done.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the preamble be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The preamble to the joint resolution has been adopted, and the Senator will have to move to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted if he desires to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; that can be done in the other House if it is desired. I ask that the letter to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
June 12, 1918.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The department is in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing a copy of Senate joint resolution 157 for the authorization of the admission into the United States of 1,000 cases of chartreuse ordered by Batjer & Co., of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which, it is stated, was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect. You request an opinion respecting the desirability of enacting the provisions of the resolution.

Section 15 of the act of August 10, 1917, prohibited the importation into the United States of any distilled spirits, the provision being effective with respect to shipments arriving after September 9, 1917.

From correspondence in the department's files it appears that the shipment in question, consisting of 1,000 cases of chartreuse was shipped from Tarragona, Spain, by bill of lading dated August 9, 1917, but did not arrive at the port of New York until September 14, 1917. It is assumed that the merchandise was shipped on August 9, 1917, the date of the bill of lading, and in the ordinary course of transportation should have reached New York a week or 10 days before September 9, the date when the provision in the law prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits became operative. In the opinion of the department the delay in the arrival of the merchandise was due to the unsettled conditions caused by the war, and it therefore interposes no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Respectfully,

L. S. ROWE,
Acting Secretary.

READMISSION OF CERTAIN ALIENS.

Mr. HARDWICK. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 255) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces, and I submit a report (No. 513) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether the joint resolution refers simply to those who have entered the Army of the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator—and I am glad to have the opportunity to explain it—that it refers also to certain aliens who have already been admitted here, but who have gone back to Europe to fight in the allied armies. The provision is simply that in the case of such aliens they shall be readmitted without reference to the rigors of the immigration act of February 5, 1917. If the Secretary will read the report of the committee, I think it states pretty compactly exactly what the object is. I will say further that the joint resolution has been unanimously reported by both the Senate and the House Committees on Immigration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report of the committee.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Immigration, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 255) authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted, or who have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States, or cobelligerent forces, reports the resolution to the Senate with the recommendation that the same be passed without amendment.

The resolution undertakes to correct a condition produced by the war and to relieve certain people who, by going into it on the side of the allied powers, broke with countries to which they owed a technical allegiance. When the war began there were many aliens residing in the United States many of whom were from Polish territory under the political domination of Germany, Austria, and Russia; many of these people had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. When war was declared in 1914 many of these aliens went to Europe and joined the forces of the allied powers in order to oppose the Governments that they regarded as oppressors of the people, thinking that they had an opportunity to correct an injustice done to Poland when her sovereignty was killed and her territory divided. For that act there was due them admiration and sympathy, for Americans have always sympathized with a struggling people who aspire to independence. These brave and patriotic people abandoned comfort and security in the United States and are important factors in the allied forces, having returned to Europe to lend their aid in the struggle against the common foe.

Among the people to be benefited by this resolution are some Jews, Armenians, and Syrians who were residing in the United States before April, 1917. This resolution provides that aliens who were here before we declared war on the central powers, and who have heretofore been conscripted for service with the Army of the United States, or who have volunteered, or who may hereafter go into it voluntarily or by draft, may be readmitted to the United States if they apply for readmission within one year after the close of the war. This class of aliens will be permitted to return, notwithstanding the fact that they have not declared their purpose to become citizens. This resolution also authorizes the return to the United States of aliens who were residing here prior to April 6, 1917, within one year after the proclamation of the war provided they had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and who have enlisted for military service with any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war or with Czecho-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces attached to the United States Army, or to that of any one of the cobelligerents of the United States, after being honorably discharged or furloughed abroad by the proper military authorities.

The Committee on Immigration was unanimous in its vote directing that this resolution be favorably reported, as it felt that its passage will do an act of justice to a people whose services are valuable, and who by connecting themselves with the allied powers or with us incur extreme peril.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as I gather the purport of this joint resolution from its reading, the committee only proposes to readmit to the United States those aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is where they have enlisted in the armies of other powers that are fighting Germany.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That would not cover the case of the thousands of Italians, who have answered the call of their country and gone back to Italy to serve in the Italian Army, unless they had in this country declared their intention to become American citizens.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is only a matter of time when Italy probably will ask the United States to permit the return of that class of aliens; and I wish to inquire of the Senator whether it would not therefore be wise and consistent with our support of the war to permit the return of all aliens who have enlisted under the flag of our cobelligerents or who have answered the call of their mother country?

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the Senator that neither the committee of the House of Representatives nor the Senate Committee on Immigration thought it best to go that far just at the present moment. What we have done and what the other House has done is this: We have declared that aliens who have heretofore or may hereafter enlist or be conscripted in the military service of the United States may be readmitted without regard to the rigors of the immigration act of February 5, 1917. As to aliens, however, who have joined the Czecho-Slovak forces or the armies of foreign powers, even if they are cobelligerents with us, we felt that they ought not to be relieved of all of the requirements of the law except in cases where they have declared their intention to become citizens. Of course, after the war is over, when we face this condition and come to it, our minds will be open on that question; but it seems to me when the Senator considers the tremendous immigration problem that we may be confronted with when this war is over, he will agree that we have gone as far as it is safe to go now. I am willing to let aliens who serve in our own armies come back without condition, qualification, or restriction, and without regard to any law; but where they have gone over to serve in other armies, even in the armies of cobelligerents, I doubt whether all the requirements of the law and all the safeguards of the law ought to be thrown aside, unless they had declared their intention to become American citizens before they left this country. That is the theory, at least, on which both the House and Senate committees have acted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My only purpose in raising this question at this time is to call attention to the fact that it has got to be met at some time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does not the Senator think it would be wiser, if he will let me ask him a question in turn, to cross that bridge when we come to it and see what the immigration conditions are when we do arrive at that period, as we must do——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. Because I think the Senator will agree with me that one of the troubles we have had in this country is a large mass of undigested and undigestible foreign immigration that we have not been able to assimilate into our body politic.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator misunderstands me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just let me finish my statement, if the Senator pleases. I do not think that in advance of the termination of the war we ought to dispose of that question, until we see exactly what conditions are going to confront us and do confront us when the war is over. I am sure the Senator from Nebraska will sympathize with that sentiment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator misunderstands me. I think we will have to reach that question very soon—I mean, before the war is over—because it will be raised by Italy. We desire to have a reciprocal treaty with Italy, for instance, under which we can compel Italians in this country to serve in our Army or to serve in the Italian Army. When that time comes it may be that we will be confronted by a request on the part of Italy that we permit those men, under those circumstances, to return to the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. If they serve in our Army?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Whether they serve in our Army, or whether they respond to our law and return to Italy to serve in the Italian Army. Now, if we must meet that question soon, the query I put to the Senator is, Why would it not be wise to meet it now?

Mr. HARDWICK. I suppose the State Department and the Department of Commerce, which have urged this joint resolution upon us, feel that it is not wise to meet that condition until we make some sort of treaty. I think we had better go this far now, anyhow, and then we can take up that question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to the joint resolution, but I wondered whether the Senator and the committee had considered that question.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; we have not considered that question, because we are not up to that point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think we ought to go that far.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I think we ought to go that far, and I think possibly that is far enough.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Georgia, who had been very energetic as the chairman of the committee in acting upon these questions, that I have a very large population of Czecho-Slovaks in my State, in the city of Chicago. They have been sending me much correspondence, fearful that they were to be denied the same privileges that are being granted others who are fighting in the allied armies. One of the fears they have expressed concerning this joint resolution is that there was some amendment tendered in the House which deprived them of the privileges of the joint resolution unless they had previously declared their citizenship legally before leaving this country, and that many of them who were about to declare their citizenship, but who went into the Army quickly, would be denied the right of coming back into this country. Is there any foundation for that fear?

Mr. HARDWICK. There is this foundation, and this alone: The Czecho-Slovaks are treated exactly like the subjects of Great Britain and Italy and every other power at war with Germany, but there is this difference, that they are named. Let me read the language of the joint resolution:

and who have enlisted for service with Czecho-Slovak, Polish, or other independent forces attached to the United States Army or to the army of any one of the cobelligerents of the United States in the present war, who may, within one year—

And so forth.

Mr. LEWIS. Their fear seems to be that those who have not declared their citizenship, but who would have done so, and were on the eve of doing so, being forced to go into the Army, are now prohibited from returning to this country at all because they had not previously declared their citizenship. Are they right in that fear?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the people in that category or that class would be subject to the provisions of the existing law as to admission.

Mr. LEWIS. There is nothing to prevent them from returning here, then?

Mr. HARDWICK. Nothing on earth.

Mr. LEWIS. So that that fear is without foundation?

Mr. HARDWICK. That fear is without foundation.

Mr. LEWIS. They are put in the same category with every one of the several people?

Mr. HARDWICK. With the aliens who serve in the British Army or with the French Army.

Mr. LEWIS. In the same category with the French and Italian and Polish people?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; we give them exactly the same status.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. For the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, Mr. WALSH, who is detained from the Senate by illness, I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 12000) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 514) thereon. It is known as the general pension appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am not objecting to ordinary morning business, but I do feel that I should bring before the Senate the conference report which I have here on the war-risk insurance bill. If there is to be no discussion of the pension bill, I shall not object. I do not suppose there will be any. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is the general pension appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 1, to strike out "$185,000,000" and insert "$220,000,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, namely:

Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $220,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1919, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word, so that the Senators may know that the amount asked for includes not only the regular appropriations and also the increase in pensions of the Civil War veterans, but it also includes a deficit from last year of $23,000,000. I wanted to make that statement, so that the Senators would know just what the pensions will cost for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator give me an exact statement of what our pension list will amount to for the coming year?

Mr. SMOOT. This year the pensions will amount to $197,000,000 under the laws passed up to date. Next year they will decrease at least 15 per cent, and perhaps 20 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. These will be the highest figures to which the pensions have ever gone?

Mr. SMOOT. This is $12,000,000 higher.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Twelve million dollars higher than it has ever been before?

Mr. SMOOT. Than it has ever been; but I will say to the Senator that, even with the $12,000,000 higher than the year 1912, this includes the $35,000,000 of the law of June 10, 1918; so the Senator can see that between the $12,000,000 and the $35,000,000 there has been a $23,000,000 decrease since that time in the pensions at that time appropriated for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then this pension law, even without the deficit, will be the highest in the history of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I doubt whether there will be another general pension bill for the Civil War veterans. I expressed myself that way before, and I believe it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether the appropriation carried in this bill includes Indian war pensions and Mexican War pensions?

Mr. SMOOT. It includes all pensions—Mexican War, Indian war, Civil War, and Spanish War, and every other pension that is provided for up to date.

Mr. KING. And does it include the amount carried in the pension bill passed a few days ago?

Mr. SMOOT. It includes that amount, and the amendment adding $35,000,000 to the House bill is to cover that amount.

Mr. KING. I do not quite share the optimism of my colleague that this will be the last general pension bill.

Mr. SMOOT. For Civil War veterans, I say.

Mr. KING. I do not think it will be the last general pension bill for the Civil War veterans. I remember, a number of years ago, reading the statement of President Garfield. He stated that when the pension roll reached the maximum of $27,000,000—the Senator from Ohio corrects me and says it was $35,000,000, but the statement which I saw attributed to him the sum $27,000,000—it would immediately recede, and that would be the highest crest of the wave. With a pension bill of $220,000,000, it merely illustrates what a poor prophet the great President Garfield was. It illustrates, furthermore, that the further we recede from the period of that great strife the larger the pensions and the heavier the drafts made upon the Treasury of the United States. It will probably leap up, when this war is over, to several billion dollars a year; and the taxpayers can look forward with great equanimity to the burdens which will be placed upon them and upon their children for many generations to come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask to call up the conference report on the river and harbor bill, H. R. 10069.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suggest that we continue the regular morning business. It will take only a few minutes, perhaps, to get these matters out of the way.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not want to interfere with the regular morning business. All I wanted to do was simply to move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference. It will take but a second.

I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments in disagreement, and ask for a further conference with the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, upon that motion I wish to say that one amendment of the Senate to this bill—No. 6, for which I see the conferees have agreed upon a substitute—relates to the pollution of streams by the discharge of waste into them from factories; and the amendment of the Senate authorizes the Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, to put a stop to this nuisance. The conferees have substituted for that a more or less specific provision giving particular methods and details and requiring the Secretary of War to make an investigation and further report on this subject. My purpose in calling attention to it at this time is to put into the RECORD in that connection a letter on the subject which I received this month, since the bill was here in the Senate, from the Chief of Engineers. As it is very brief, I will read it, and I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to it:

> 1. I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 24, 1918, inviting attention to the amendment to the river and harbor bill with reference to disposal of acid waste which was made in the Senate on your suggestion, and I wish to state that I am heartily in favor of any legislation that will improve the present conditions on streams that are seriously polluted by trade wastes.
> 2. The change from the phraseology as originally proposed, so as to limit the application to waters that are nontidal, is not deemed a step in the right direction, but as the difficulties experienced on this account up to the present time have been mainly in nontidal waters, the provision as amended would serve our most urgent needs. I shall be glad, therefore, to recommend favorable action on the amendment if I am consulted in the matter. At the same time, attention should be drawn to the importance of taking steps for the more general protection of all our streams, both tidal and nontidal, from use for disposal of trade wastes which are causing extensive injury to important public interests.

I shall not take the time of the Senator from Louisiana or of the Senate to discuss this question now or to point out what most of us are familiar with—the injury to the country in many ways through the pollution of navigable waters and of the tributaries of navigable waters. What I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana is that when the bill goes back for a further conference he will consider this letter from the Chief of Engineers, and I suggest to him that the conferees consult with the Chief of Engineers on this matter. The original amendment to the bill on this subject left a certain amount of discretion in the Secretary of War. I am perfectly cognizant of the difficulties attendant on the removal of this nuisance and the fact that there will be more or less expense attached to the changes which may be necessary in the factories which are now polluting the streams. Nevertheless, it is a thing which can be done, and I am sure that the Secretary of War will be guided by reasonable discretion in the enforcement of the provision as it was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I beg to assure the Senator that the conferees will be delighted to confer with the Chief of Engineers if this matter is referred back to them, and also with the Senator from Washington, if he desires to be heard about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that unanimous consent has been asked, but not yet obtained, for the consideration of this conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before that consent is obtained I want to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question.

Mr. RANSDELL. We are not considering the conference report. I have simply asked that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House. We are not considering the report now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report has been made to the Senate, and the Chair is informed by the Secretary that it has been before the Senate for some days. The first question would be on agreeing to the conference report as made, and insisting on the amendments still in disagreement. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH and Mr. KENYON addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the matter is to lead to debate, I think we ought to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the power of any Senator at this time to prevent its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will not object if it is not to lead to any debate.

Mr. BORAH. As I have not had time to give the conference report attention, I shall object until I have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. If there be no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:

A bill (S. 4727) to authorize the payment to the Government of France of $13,511.13 as an indemnity requested in behalf of Madame Crignier for losses sustained by her as the result of a search for the body of Admiral John Paul Jones; and

A bill (S. 4728) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the Government of Japan for the benefit of the family of Tatsuji Saito, a Japanese subject killed at Camp Geronimo, Mexico, May 25, 1916; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 4729) to exclude certain lands from the Pike National Forest Reservation; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 4730) granting a pension to Ulysses S. C. Canfield (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 4731) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Callahan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 4732) to deny the use of the mails to persons or concerns employing child labor.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I wish to say very frankly that it might be considered as a matter for the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, but I prefer to have it go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARDWICK. The bill belongs to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. KENYON. I frankly said so, but in looking over the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I would rather have it go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that a bill of this kind should be referred to a committee which has no jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. KENYON. I would rather not have it go to a committee which may be largely against the proposition, but I suppose I have no right to ask it, if the Senator from Georgia objects. I feel that it is going to its death.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4733) requiring the filing of copies of all contracts for services rendered or materials furnished to the United States or certain contractors and agencies of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 4734) granting a pension to Samuel J. Haslett; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHAFROTH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for the salary of statistician of Congress to serve under the direction of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate pro tempore, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHILD-LABOR DIVISION.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill and as it is a matter of considerable importance and is very short I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What was the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio requests that the amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill be printed in the RECORD and referred. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

That the appropriation item for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, which provides: "Child-Labor Division: To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the provisions of the act of September 1, 1916, entitled 'An act to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes,' in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, telegraph and telephone services, express and freight charges, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $125,000: Provided, That no salary shall be paid hereunder at a rate exceeding $3,000 per annum," is hereby made available to enable the Secretary of Labor to investigate and report upon the employment of children in mines, quarries, mills, canneries, workshops, factories, and manufacturing establishments situated in the United States.

COTTONSEED-MEAL CAKE.

Mr. FALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4597) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think our conference reports ought to be disposed of before we take up separate bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A conference report, of course, is privileged.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A conference report is always in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is merely a short bill and will take only a few moments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it leads to any discussion, I appeal to the Senator from West Virginia not to urge it now, so that we may give attention to conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from West Virginia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the word "time" and insert the word "times," and in line 7, after the word "Fairmont," to strike out "is" and insert "are," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved April 17, 1916, to be built across the Monongahela River at or near the city of Fairmont, W. Va., by the city of Fairmont, are hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from the 17th day of April, 1918.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the consideration by the Senate of the conference report upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 4482) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and I move its adoption. I think it has been laid before the Senate already.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves the consideration of the conference report indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not wish to intercept the conference report and disturb its final conclusion, but for some reason an amendment I have which extends this war-risk insurance seems to have been omitted from consideration. I wish now to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can an amendment be offered to the final conference report as a new subject matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not, the Chair rules.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like to have it understood that I want the soldiers' war-risk bill extended to all persons engaged in war work, all those who are engaged in work aiding munitions or shipbuilding, carrying the risk of life and health, and all other persons engaged in any other kind of work at this time that involves the risk of life and health. I only ask for information whether or not after the conference report has been adopted an amendment to the original bill can be offered. This is the bill brought in by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is.

Mr. LEWIS. Could an amendment to the original bill, which by accident and not by intention I realize, the committee in some way or other did not know existed, be tendered as being omitted by the committee and by accident not considered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be compelled to rule that such an amendment is not in order.

Mr. LEWIS. It would not take any precedence by virtue of being omitted through accident? I merely assert that the position I occupy on the question I have been unable to present at this particular time through accident, and I shall present it later as an independent matter.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois a question, with his permission, before he resumes his seat.

Mr. LEWIS. Surely.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that in the plenitude of his generosity we ought to extend a pension to farmers and to all the people of the United States, including Senators and Representatives in Congress, and everybody else, because practically all of the labor of the United States now is contributory, directly or indirectly, to the war? Let me say in passing that many of those persons engaged in arduous work, supplying the Government and our allies, do not receive the same compensation, perhaps less than one-half, that which is paid to those in munition plants and in some of the direct governmental activities. Let us pension farmers and pension everybody in the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I reply to the eminent Senator from Utah and say I view the subject more seriously than he does. I would, sir, amend this law so that the persons now engaged in war work which involves their life or their health be made the object of the care of this pension bill and of this bounty. I would add a provision authorizing the particular board or authority which passes upon the soldiers' pensions as to whether the soldier has a right to the pension to be the board of arbitration or judgment to decide what particular persons are entitled to the benefit of my suggested amendment as engaged in war work involving their life and health. If that comprehended farmers or comprehended any other persons mentioned by the Senator from Utah I certainly would include them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move to take up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. My motion is that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is then to agree to the conference report as made?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; and to ask for a further conference on the disagreement between the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that this is a motion to take up the report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first motion before the Senate is a motion to take up the conference report.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move an amendment to that motion that the conference report be recommitted to the conferees.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection to that amendment, I will say to the Senator. I have no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on taking up the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if he will not recommend to the Senate that the Senate disagree to the report and let it go back to conference, and then the whole subject matter——

Mr. RANSDELL. That is exactly what I am willing to have done. I understand that to be the effect of the motion of the Senator from Washington, and that is what we are entirely willing to have done.

Mr. KENYON. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no motion before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate disagree to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That places the question in the negative. The question must be placed in the affirmative. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds, in order that I may know something about how to vote, I wish to make an inquiry. The only way we can reach this matter, then, is to reject the entire report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, about a year ago I introduced a resolution in the Senate with reference to a free and independent Bohemian Slovak State. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] introduced a couple of weeks ago a resolution on the same subject, and a few days ago the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] introduced a resolution with reference to the recognition of the struggles of the Jugo-Slavs.

In the Washington Post of Monday there is an editorial on this subject. This editorial is, in part, as follows:

> If anybody doubts the deadly earnestness of the oppressed peoples of Austria-Hungary, let him study the actions of the Czecho-Slovak regiments and brigades in Russia, now controlling much of the Trans-Siberian Railroad and endeavoring to reach the French and Italian fronts to strike full in the face the barbarians who have despoiled them of their rights for centuries. Nothing in history is more dramatic than the daring and initiative of these Czecho-Slovak soldiers, making their way for thousands of miles as an organized force and skillfully maintaining their organization against a thousand obstacles. The ancient lands of Bohemia and Moravia are justly proud of these indomitable heroes, who are the advance guard of the armies that are rising in the very midst of the enemy to wrest liberty from the expiring grasp of the Hohenzollerns and Hapsburgs.
> It is a matter of little credit to the United States that while these Homeric struggles are going on the American Government appears to be indifferent to them and the American people as a mass are deaf to the cry that in ancient times electrified the sons of liberty.

I have felt, and so have other Senators, as evidenced by these resolutions, that the American Nation should send some word of encouragement to the Czecho-Slovaks in their struggle for independence. At this time, when the citizens of the United States of Bohemian lineage are welcoming Prof. T. G. Masaryk, the greatest living exponent of a free and independent Czecho-Slovak State, and as the Secretary of State a few days ago expressed the earnest sympathy of the United States toward the nationalistic aspirations of the Czecho-Slovaks and Jugo-Slavs, it is not inappropriate that the Congress of the United States should take some action with reference thereto, or, if not, at least express its earnest approval of the struggle for liberty and nationality of these people bowed under the Austrian yoke.

It is America's right, yes, its duty, to sympathize with every nation struggling for liberty. True, the words of Prof. Bliss Perry:

> The ideal passions of patriotism, of liberty, of loyalty to home and section, of humanitarian and missionary effort, have all burned with a clear flame in the United States.

The world is going to understand some day the part being played by the Czecho-Slovaks in this war. They have been silent and enduring sufferers. In the very heart of Austria-Hungary, believing in the righteous cause of the allies, they join with them in every way they can to stimulate their success. The papers of each day bring to us news of revolt and rebellion among the Czechs against Austrian rule. Last week at Prague they tore down the flag of Austria and raised in its place the flag of Bohemia. Compelled to fight against the cause in which they believe, whole Czech regiments refused to march to the Russian front and attacked the German officers commanding them. Dearly have they paid therefor. Czech regiments crossed to the Serbian side, contributing to the Austrian defeat in Serbia in 1914. It has been related that the One hundred and second Regiment crossed over in a body to the Serbians and entered Nish with its band playing the Serbian national hymn. Such instances were common on the Russian front. Whole regiments have been massacred by the Germans and Magyars. Those Czechs who surrendered to the Russians and Italians were soon at the front fighting against Austria. The world will not now nor until the war is ended know what tremendous service these people have rendered to the allies. The world does not know what they have suffered, the tortures that have been inflicted upon them; but some day, when the world is free from the curse of Prussian usurpation, they will know of these mighty people silently, quietly suffering and enduring. On this side of the water thousands of Czechs volunteered in the Canadian Army before we had become a part in the world struggle. They were in the armies of all the allies, but especially of the Italians.

John Huss is honored in Bohemia not so much as a religious reformer but as a champion of the Czech people against German kultur. When he was charged with instigating the Czechs to hatred against the Germans, he answered:

> I have affirmed and yet affirm that Bohemians should by right have the chief place in the offices of the Kingdom of Bohemia, even as they that are French born in the Kingdom of France and the Germans in their own countries, so that Bohemians should rule their people and Germans rule over Germans.

The demand now of the Czechs and Slovaks is for an independent Bohemian-Slovak State. That demand is expressed in the manifesto of the Bohemian foreign committee, issued in Paris on the 14th day of November, 1915, from which I quote:

> All Bohemian political parties have up to this time been fighting for a qualified independence within the limits of Austria-Hungary. But the events of this terrible war and the reckless violence of Vienna constrain us to claim independence without regard to Austria-Hungary. We ask for an independent Bohemian-Slovak State. The Bohemian people are now convinced that they must strike out for themselves. Austria was defeated not only by Russia but by the little, despised Serbia, and is now a dependency of Germany. To-day Berlin has galvanized this corpse, but it is the last effort. Austria-Hungary has abdicated. We have lost all confidence in its vitality; it has no longer any reason for existence. By its incapacity, by its voluntary subordination to Germany, it has convinced the whole world that the former belief in the mission of Austria is out of date, forever overthrown by the European war. Those who defended the usefulness, even the necessity, of Austria-Hungary—and at one time the great Bohemian historian and statesman, Palacky, was one of them—thought of Austria as a federal system of nations and lands with equal rights. But Austria-Hungary as a dualistic monster became the oppressor of all who were not Germans or Magyars. It is a standing threat to the peace of Europe, a mere tool of Germany seeking conquest in the east, a State having no destiny of its own, unable to construct an organic State composed of a number of equal, free, progressive races. The dynasty living in its traditions of absolutism manages to maintain the semblance of the former world power through the undemocratic cooperation of a sterile nobility, a bureaucracy that belong to no race, and a body of army officers that is against every race.

In the reply of the allies to President Wilson's note is found this language:

> The civilized world knows that they [the aims of the allies] include the liberation of Italians, Slavs, Roumanians, and Czecho-Slovaks from foreign domination.

Germany, Austria, and Hungary have well understood the position of the Czechs and Slovaks. They do not dare to permit the regiments of these nationalities to fight unless the Magyar and German troops comprise a large percentage thereof. Witness the language of one of the Austrian leaders in the Hungarian Parliament on August 28, 1916, when he said:

This is not a war secret, and the whole world sees it, how the service battalions are composed—that in every Czech service battalion at least 40 per cent of Magyar and German troops are included.

America should be enthused by their demand for liberty. America should stand firmly for it when peace terms come. Bismarck once proclaimed that the power ruling Bohemia ruled Europe. A permanent peace can never be established in Europe without an independent Bohemian-Slovak State. That question assumes tremendous international importance and it will grow with every hour.

As early as the seventh century there was trace of a Bohemian State, and during the fifteenth century the Czechs stood almost alone fighting for the freedom of conscience. The Hapsburgs called to the Bohemian throne by the choice of the people pledged themselves to maintain the autonomy of Bohemia. The pledges of the Hapsburgs evidently are no more to be kept than the pledges of the Hohenzollerns.

From the middle of the sixteenth century to the present time Bohemian history has been a struggle between the Hapsburgs, on the one hand, to Germanize the people of Bohemia, and on the other hand the people of Bohemia fighting for independence.

After the Battle of White Mountain the heads of the Bohemian rebellion were executed, property was confiscated, people were exiled, tortured, persecuted. For Bohemia it was a hard struggle after that toward the light, but the unconquerable spirit of the Czech race never dies. There was a revival of their language and their literature, and in 1848 a political renaissance. In the nineteenth century they produced great poets, musicians, literary writers, philosophers, and have gone forward with tremendous industrial activities.

The Slovaks have not made the progress of the Czechs. Cruel Magyars have governed them but to oppress. They have a far greater percentage of illiteracy than the Czechs, and yet they are of the same kind and will reach the same high ideals if permitted to come out of the bondage of the Magyars.

The independent Czecho-Slovak State would consist of Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia. It would have a population of over 12,000,000 people and territorial extent of 50,000 English square miles. It would be larger than Belgium and rank eighth among the 22 European States. It would be strong financially and not compelled to carry by disproportionate taxation the luxury and foolishness of the Vienna court. True, it would be a little nation, as we speak of such nations, but little nations have their place. Little nations are to be permitted to exist when this war is over. There is a mighty international importance to them. As Lloyd-George, in a recent speech, declared:

The little nations, with their own languages, their own literatures, their glory in their own history, were never more alive, never more important than they are to-day in this conflict of gigantic empires.

In wealth, in ability to produce, in industrial life the new nation would take its place among the strong nations of Europe. A few facts are interesting as to Bohemia, even under the oppression of Austria. In cattle raising and farm products Bohemia takes first place among the Provinces of Austria. Without Bohemia, Austria could not exist. Without the agricultural riches of Bohemia, Germany could not have existed this long in the war.

In 1914 the United States Immigration Service found the percentage of illiteracy among immigrants of the Magyar race was 10.2, among Germans 5.5, and among Bohemians 1.3. Bohemia is rich in mineral resources. A third of all the iron produced in Austria comes from Bohemia's lands. Silver and gold are mined in large quantities; likewise tin. Eighty per cent of the brown coal of Austria comes from Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia; and of the hard coal 88 per cent comes from these three Bohemian lands. Textile and other industries flourish in Bohemia. More steel is produced than in all the other Hapsburg possessions. Bohemian glass, of course, has been famous for centuries. Shoe factories, shops for musical instruments, pottery works abound. The capital of Bohemia's banks in 1910 amounted to 180,000,000 crowns. Of 669 savings banks of Austria, 356 were located in the Bohemian lands. Bohemia pays more than its share of Austrian taxes. Bohemia pays 4.34 crowns per head in direct taxes, while the rest of Austria pays 1.75. Taxation is not equitable. The Bohemians suffer from that.

I have shown, in a way, what Bohemia is politically and industrially. Let me inquire, What is Austria? What reason is there for Austria to exist? It is true the Hapsburg empire is second in area and third in population among the States of Europe. It consists, however, of various races gathered together, each one insisting on its own nationality, fighting against any attempt to assimilate with other races. There can be no nationality in such an empire.

The population of Austria and Hungary and the various races composing the dual kingdom is as follows:

AUSTRIA.
Germans	9,950,266
Bohemians	6,435,983
Poles	4,967,984
Little Russians	3,608,844
Slovenians	1,252,940
Serbo-Croatians	783,334
Italians	768,422
Roumanians	275,115
HUNGARY.
Magyars	10,050,575
Roumanians	2,949,027
Germans	2,037,435
Slovaks	1,967,970
Croatians	1,833,167
Serbians	1,106,471
Little Russians	472,587

Austria is the greatest failure of all the world governments. It is as much a festering sore in Europe as Turkey. Dominated by the Germans, Austria is a mere lickspittle in Germany's plan of world domination. It should be dismembered. Nationalities with their own ideals should be permitted to dissever themselves from Austria and form their own governments. Those parts of Austria inhabited by Italians should be joined to Italy; those inhabited by Roumanians to Roumania; Serbians to the new Serbia; Galicia made a part of the future Poland. Then, with a Bohemian-Slovak independent State, all that is left of Austria will be the Germans and the cruel Magyars. The best solution of the Austrian problem is to get rid of the Austrian Empire. Austria in fighting the Slavs is fighting herself. There can be no federalization or nationalization of Austria. The nation is dead and never can be revived. It should not be. Its mission is merely a cringing vassal of Germany, pouring out incense to the brutal champions of lust and greed. Its burial will produce no sorrow in a liberty-loving world. Its existence has been a farce and a lie. Living only by force, let it be exterminated by force. Let its cringing, cowardly imbecile rulers take the only place that will be left for such rulers after the war—a part of the dust of the earth. No nation has been so contemptible in this war as the Austrian. Austria has no ideals, no literature, scarcely any language. It is a festering cancer, eating to the very heart of civilization. The sooner it is ended and forgotten the better for the world.

The nineteenth section of its constitution provides:

All races of the State enjoy equal rights, and every race has an inviolable right to assert its nationality and to cultivate its language; the equal rights of all languages in the country, in schools and public life, are recognized by the State.

What a farce and a lie, as evidenced by its treatment of Bohemia. The forces of Austria feed upon the Czech countries as parasites. It has attempted to destroy the language of Bohemia; destroy its literature; taken away the schools. Eleven million Germans in Austria have five universities. Ten million Czechs and Slovaks have but one. The Bohemians are not permitted to converse in their native tongue. The Hungarian part of Austria is even worse. One of the leading Bohemian authorities of the country, Mr. Pergler, in an article in The Yale Review some time ago, set forth the situation that for 3,000,000 Slovaks there is not in Hungary a single adequate Slovak school conducted in the Slovak language. The only purpose of Austria is to oppress her subjects, if they are not Germans or Magyars. But Austria's day of reckoning is near at hand. In 1914 for every $6 of national wealth there was $1 of national debt. At that time Austria-Hungary was in the worst financial condition of any of the six leading nations of the world. Economists asserted that a national debt of six billion would be all Austria-Hungary could bear. In 1914 her debt was practically four billion. Her national debt now must be close to her national wealth. She is tottering on the abyss of financial ruin and is practically now in the hands of a receiver, and that receiver is Germany.

At the feet of the German war lords the house of Hapsburg is still accorded the privilege of sitting, and in fear and trembling pour out incense to the Hohenzollerns. What a miserable, contemptible existence for a nation.

There is a call to our country in this situation; a call to strike in the east and the south of Europe through armies and through diplomacy. Germany destroyed the Russians through diplomacy. Are we to permit them to Germanize Bohemia and Slovakia while the instrumentalities are ready there for revolution? Let us assist in the revolution through diplomacy and by money if necessary. Let us also strike by arms from Italy when the present drive is over. It has been said in the papers that Gen. Leonard Wood is to command American troops in Italy. I hope it may be true. Napoleon struck at Austria through Italy. We can do the same. I do not pose as a military expert or propose to offer any plans along military lines, or utter one word of criticism against the management of affairs, but I am trusting and hoping that our military powers may figure out a way to strike from Italy north into Austria. The newspapers of late are discussing that plan. In the last few days they have advised us that we are to have an army in Austria. The plan is being discussed and advocated of having a Slav army from America. The matter, I think, is before the Foreign Relations Committee in some form. There are 6,000,000 Slavs in the United States. A strong army could be formed from them. They are anxious to fight Austria. They would constitute a mighty force to stand side by side with their brethren already fighting in the Italian Army.

The present drive of Austria into Italy will amount to nothing. It is the last yelp of the dying beast, for the armies of Austria are filled with many thousands of men who despise Austria and all that it stands for; and are only waiting, as the soldiers did in the Russian campaign and in the former Italian campaign, where whole regiments of Czechs went over, to do likewise. We need have no fear of the drive on the Italian front.

We are not pessimistic as to the western front. The British and French and Americans will hold them until the death. Even if Paris falls there will be no lack of grim determination on the part of this Nation, Great Britain, and France to go through to a finish, knowing that some day the allies must triumph. At attack from Italy into Austria may later, however, relieve the pressure on the western front. Further than that, it would arouse the Czechs and Slovaks to a revolution that would send Austria to its doom. "On to Vienna" will become the slogan as powerful with the Italians as "On to Paris" is with the Germans.

We will reach Berlin from the western front. It will take time. There is another route to Berlin, that from Italy via Vienna, and that possibly may be the shortest route to Berlin.

The people of Austria, outside of the Magyars and Germans, sick of war, starving in body, are ready to rise and welcome troops and assist in the overthrow of the Hapsburgs. What a stimulus to the moral forces of the world would be the dismemberment of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

It is well that the Secretary of State has expressed the earnest sympathy of this Government for the cause of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs; and we should pass some one of the various resolutions which have been introduced and are pending here conveying a message of cheer to those people. Hard, indeed, is it for us to realize the condition of people fighting as they are doing in the very heart of the enemy. The voice of America must be an inspiration to them. Peace terms must include provision for a free and independent Czecho-Slovak State, and we should send that message to these liberty loyalists. Let Germany understand this. Let Austria-Hungary understand it. Let them know that America is to stand for a free Bohemia; a Bohemia no longer fed on the husks of Austrian despotism, but a Bohemia working out its own ideals and its own salvation. A nation warring upon its people as Austria-Hungary is doing can not last. Why should it last? What excuse is there for its existence? Simply to keep on the throne a ruling family that has no regard at all for the citizenship of the land.

Robert Ingersoll once wrote upon "The Doom of Empires":

> The traveler standing amid the ruins of ancient cities and empires, seeing on every side the fallen pillar and the prostrate wall, asks why did these cities fall; why did these empires crumble? And the Ghost of the Past, the wisdom of ages, answers: These temples, these palaces these cities, the ruins of which you stand upon, were built by tyranny and injustice. The hands that built them were unpaid. The backs that bore the burdens also bore the marks of the lash. They were built by slaves to satisfy the vanity and ambition of thieves and robbers. For these reasons they are dust.
> Their civilization was a lie. Their laws merely regulated robbery and established theft. They bought and sold the bodies and souls of men, and the mournful wind of desolation, sighing amid their crumbling ruins, is a voice of prophetic warning to those who would repeat the infamous experiment, uttering the great truth, that no nation founded upon slavery, either of body or mind, can stand.

The recent Bohemian declaration of independence declares: "We take the side of the fighting Slav nations and their allies without regard to victory or defeat because right is on their side. The problem which side is right in this fatal war is a question of principle and of political morals, a question which at present no honest and sincere statesman, no conscientious and thinking nation can evade." Surely people with such ideals and courage are worthy the help of the great American Republic. We could extend help and cheer by passing some one of the three resolutions which have been introduced, and I earnestly hope the Committee on Foreign Relations may give consideration thereto.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not have suggested any views upon these resolutions and should not do so now but for the fact that the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has contributed an historic discussion in their behalf that now calls for indorsement. I represent, in common with my eminent colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], a population of the nationalities referred to by the Senator from Iowa, larger than is represented by any other Senator occupying a seat in this body—not more important, of course, nor more entitled to consideration, but because of their very large numbers they have a right to bring to my attention from time to time their interests and ask of me consideration for them. I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a moment or two while I add rather boldly a thought to the speech which has been made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, 340,000 of the population referred to by the Senator from Iowa live in my city of Chicago; 1,250,000 represent the best of citizenship in the State of Illinois. Coupled with their intermarriage, they are representative of all of the nationalities referred to by the Senator and expressed in these resolutions. It may interest you to note, sir, that there are nearly 2,000,000 people in the jurisdiction of Illinois belonging to these races, including the Jugo-Slavs. From them, and in different ways, I have obtained expression of their desires and their wishes, and, while I am not able to pass judgment as to what would be the best measure of local self-government, I took it upon myself once to travel through much of their lands. I wrote some articles upon what I felt was the historical situation of those countries. I contributed those articles to magazines of London and of the United States. Subsequently, sir, I had occasion to vindicate my own view, or to attempt to do so, by further investigation when twice in Russia and once through Siberia.

Mr. President, I should like at this time to make a suggestion of where I feel these men of the nations referred to could be of much service and their people be of much value to our Government. If I may be permitted to make an addendum to the eminent Senator's complete address, I would say that on the western front of the European war at this particular time, Mr. President, the forces of the allies are engaged in a terrific struggle and in a very severe encounter. Russia has been overcome by the central powers under the guidance of Prussia. If the nationalities of the Slavs, the Slovaks, and the Czechs and Jugo-Slavs living in the Russian domain shall be wholly overcome by Prussia they will be put into an army and forced to fight not only against Russia but against their own brethren who have come up from the Hungarian countries and the Bohemian land or any of the Slav countries. One of the things the United States could do, as I see it, most profitably would be to stimulate an army of these people who are in Russia into some force as a central army in Russia that they may be an army supplied with arms, munitions, and such other things as are necessary to enable them to contribute to this conflict as combatants in Russia against German military advance.

Guided, sir, by their spirit of liberty, these races would make a conflict against Germany within Russia. They could then rise and fight for the liberty of their land, because they would be supplied with instrumentalities to do so. They would occupy Germany internally, while she is occupied also by the allies without. We would divert from the western line a large number, thousands and thousands, I may add millions, of the support which Germany now has. These being diverted, sir, would weaken the western line and strengthen our possibilities at once against her. It would protect the United States, which in my mind is, of course, a prime consideration.

It may interest Senators who do me the kindness to hear these observations of mine to say that one of the fears I have entertained, and deeply entertain now, is this—that if Germany shall overcome Russia, and so amass her people into an army, Germany will march the Russian German Army through Russia from the north toward Alaska, toward the Bering Straits, and by the way of the Aleutian Islands, seizing Alaska, and proceeding against the United States from the northwest. This to divide us, of course, in our defenses, and force us to send our troops against her to the far Northwest. Then, sir, if she should succeed in getting into the Persian Gulf, from Hamburg, she will come out through Asia Minor into the open seas and down around the Pacific. Then we will have Germany at our shores at the northwest on the Pacific, as well, sir, as at present engaged against us in Europe.

That would mean, sir, a very serious situation for the United States, and one that her people could well at this time dwell upon. If we could take the forces referred to by me in support of this resolution, inspired by liberty as they are, and animated by their spirit of freedom and placing support of military nature within this body, they could build an army, aided by the Slavs of Russia, who likewise want freedom, and all turning upon the invader, Germany, will drive her out of the dominions of Russia.

Thus by this we would defend ourselves, we would protect ourselves against what I fear to be an ultimate invasion from the northwest upon us and from the Pacific, if Germany shall overcome Russia. Now, to say nothing of using these Russian forces as supplementary on the western front, for uses and benefits there from millions and millions of soldiers, it will be clearly seen, sir, that any move of ours to give this aid and support to these people in Russia in building them up as an army would come to be our own immediate rescue.

Now, sir, one of the methods which they would contribute, which to my mind is very practicable, is this; and I offer it in no wise as supplanting the military leaders or suggesting such a thought. I know there is a place for all things and that those who are authorized are those who should be permitted to control, without being embarrassed by any attempt to direct them from the outside——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; in a minute. Let me finish the sentence. The thought in my mind is that if we can succeed by the suggestion I made, then, sir, Russia herself making the request upon the allies to take action in Russia or in Siberia, we will be able, sir, to avail ourselves of a force not referred to heretofore. I mean China. China is a Republic. She struggles for freedom. She can be overrun by Germany if Germany can overcome Russia and Siberia. With cooperation from Japan in its military institutions with China, supported with the spirit of America and inspired by the desires of the Russians, we could, through China and Japan and the force of these Slavs and the races referred to by the Senator from Iowa and described by me, put such an army from Russia to Siberia as not only to protect that country from the invasion of the Germans, but to turn them, sir, against the Germans within that central territory, driving them from Russia completely and overcoming them, and thus giving to the United States the opportunity to continue her forces upon the western front in solid array as aid of the allies to complete victory in Europe against the central powers.

I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Both the distinguished Senator from Illinois and also the Senator from Iowa, with both of whom I agree in these matters that they have been discussing with so much information and interest, with characteristic modesty disclaim any desire in discussing these problems to interfere with the views of military men. The thought has occurred to me—and I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him—that, it seems to me, military men would be about the last recourse of the State to decide questions of this kind. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that he himself and the Senator from Iowa, as Members of the United States Senate, and the civil authorities of the executive branch of the Government, by their experience in the conduct of government and the scope of view which they have of civil as well as military affairs, are the proper men to decide these questions, and not a general. It is a question of statesmanship; it is a question of world policy; and the experience of history generally teaches us that those who have the narrowest views of things of that kind are military men, who are absorbed upon tactics and strategy and military movements. It seems to me that this is somewhat a different question.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is much to be said in support of the view of the Senator from Washington. When I used the word "military" heads I had specific reference to the Commander in Chief and his aides, and to the fact that it was not my intention to suggest any course contrary to that which they had reflected upon and regarded wisest. The Commander in Chief—the President—and his aids, I admit, must be at this time best informed as to the necessary military moves. I beg the Senate to understand, lest I did not make myself clear, that I meant to supplement the able statement made by the able Senator from Iowa of this theory: That not only are we interested from the standpoint of humanity in behalf of these peoples who live abroad in aiding them to achieve the liberty which the Senator from Iowa pointed out in detail and which I support in my argument, but I dared supplement that with the suggestion of a justification to the United States itself as would be of great benefit to our Republic, and that at this particular time, sir, would greatly serve as a vindication, so far as I am concerned, for our immediate action. Sir, I offer these views to deny from any source, should the charge be made, that we were seeking to interfere wholly in the affairs of other countries without a proper interest in our own behalf.

I was seeking to demonstrate where our interests really lay, in addition to the interests of these people, and, sir, to point out some of the respects in which, to my mind, we would not only benefit, but from which the necessity of the situation calls for action in form on the part of this, my country.

I have expressed these views as they are in my mind. I do not wish to occupy this debate, sir, to a greater degree than necessary to the resolution. At a later time I shall resume this subject and carry it to the extent in detail and conclusion that which I feel I am justified in doing by virtue of my position in this body and the convictions that I entertain. At present my views were to support the resolution because of the request of those who come from my city and my State, because of my natural sympathy in their struggle for freedom, but also, sir, for the other reason that the interests of this country just now justify me in suggesting the use of these people in a manner military and defensive to the salvation of the Republic of the United States as well as their own hopes and aspirations.

That was my purpose, sir. That, I fancy I have expressed, I flatter myself sufficiently for this occasion, at least.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the observations of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Illinois have offered an opportunity, such as has been referred to by the Senator from Washington, for the exposition of real statesmanship or for some statesmanlike suggestions. We already have illustrations of little statesmanship every day. I make that remark in anwer to a side suggestion from the Senator from Iowa. But, Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois has said that he would not even attempt to make any suggestions to the military leaders. The business which is detaining the Senate now very largely, and is occupying the attention of one of its most important committees, the result of which action we are awaiting here in the Senate, is the formation of a military measure—the military appropriation bill—for the consideration of this Congress. We have understood that the Army of the United States was by one means or another to be very greatly increased, and still we are informed that we have 2,000,000 men.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask, so that it may be answered at some time, what we propose to do with the 2,000,000 men we have? I speak, of course, merely as a layman, neither as a statesman nor as a military man, but merely as a Senator seeking a little common-sense information. What do we propose to do with the increased forces which we are proposing to raise, as we understand? Where are we going to use them?

The Senate of the United States, having something to do with foreign relations, to that extent at least takes part in the executive consideration of such relations. The Congress of the United States, in raising armies, raises them under the Constitution for certain purposes. To my mind it is perfectly proper for the United States Senate and Congress, in increasing the Military Establishment of the United States, to state directly what the purpose of such increase is, and for that reason I am suggesting certain interrogatories for my information in dealing with this subject when it comes before the Senate. I should like to know from some military man, whether the Commander in Chief or some of his subordinates, what he proposes to do with the increased forces which he is asking that we allow him to raise.

Of course, we may take 5,000,000 men and put them upon the western front, and, with the loss of two or three million of those men in the slaughterhouse, we may break the German lines and force them out of France and Belgium. Now, to an ordinary citizen, a layman, not a military expert, and not speaking, as I say, as a statesman, these thoughts will suggest themselves. We know what we have been contending with for four years on the western front. We see what the situation is now. Where and how are we going to relieve it? To my mind, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to consider this matter in providing additional troops.

Now, sir, with reference to the very matter under discussion, a short time since the President of the United States stated to the people of Greece that the United States intended to see that justice was done to Greece and the Grecians; that her rights should be absolutely protected in whatever peace was made; and yet those who are threatening Greece are the Bulgarians, and we are at peace with Bulgaria. Those who have overrun Serbia are the Bulgarians, and we are proposing to protect, aid, or assist the Serbians; and now, under this resolution, we are seeking to get the Serbians, with the other nationalities, to assist the United States in this war. We are letting the Serbians go along; they are not even our allies as against Bulgaria, and still Bulgaria is the country which has overrun—with German assistance, it is true—Serbia, and has been continuously threatening Greece. The President, as I said, has solemnly pledged himself, as the Executive, to Greece, and yet the Congress of the United States has so far failed and refused to declare war on the enemy of Serbia and the enemy of Greece.

Now, sir, this is interesting to me, because, as I have said, viewing the military situation simply from the standpoint of a layman and not a military leader nor an expert, it would strike me that the weak point along the western front is the western front in Italy, or the western front at Saloniki. If we are going to raise 5,000,000 men or more—and I certainly shall favor a proposition of that character—if we propose to raise any such force of men in addition to those whom we can readily use on the western front and advantageously use without sending them into a slaughterhouse, where shall we use them? I think Congress has a right and a constitutional duty to perform in providing how they shall be used, or in directing that this Army which they provide to be raised shall be used in a certain way, and in a certain manner or in a certain place, if they so desire. That far, in my judgment, the Congress can interfere with the plans of the Commander in Chief. If the Commander in Chief does not choose to carry out the directions of Congress, he can retain the armies, I presume, and need not use them at all.

The Senator has spoken of Siberia. Mr. President, in my judgment, there is a graver proposition behind the Siberian question now than is generally discussed. There is no use in attempting to disguise from ourselves the fact that for years there has been in the minds of some people some reason for some antagonism between Japan and the United States. I am not one of those who have ever entertained any such idea. I do not believe that there is any necessity whatsoever for any conflict of any kind or character, now or in the future, between Japan and the United States. I am frank to say, sir, that I would vote to-day for any measure which would recognize the preponderating political interest of Japan in Asia, as against the purely political interest of the United States in Asia; and with such a policy adopted on the part of this Government, the Japanese question, in so far as the United States is concerned, will never raise its head. That is all that Japan demanded of Russia; that within certain districts of Asia Russia should recognize the preponderating political interest of Japan—not the closed door, not the preponderating commercial interest, but simply that she had greater political interests in Asia than had Russia; and as a matter of history I suggest that possibly some of us would do well to read the Japanese green book with reference to the Russian difficulty. You will there find that not one word was said indicating any contingency that might lead to the use of arms; not one word was said by Japan prior to the sinking of the Russian vessels and the attack upon the Russian fortified posts. A simple notice was given to her ambassador that it was apparent to Japan that the then conference touching the relative importance of the political interests of the two countries in certain spheres in Asia could not result in any definite decision. That was the only ultimatum issued, and notice was given to the Japanese ambassador to come home, as it was evident that nothing could result from the then conference. The next word which we heard was that the Russian ships had been sunk by Japan.

Japan is a great self-respecting, proud nation, and Japan has her political predominating interests in Asia. Japan will protect those interests in Siberia and in Manchuria, whether the United States agrees with her upon the methods to be used or not. We have it in our power now to agree with Japan and to avoid any future difficulty with Japan. We have it in our power through an agreement with Japan to protect the United States against the very threat which the Senator has referred to of German domination in Siberia and in eastern Russia. Why, then——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 130) to create in the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as the "Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, why should the Congress of the United States not say directly that in providing for the huge increase in the military forces of this country a portion at least of such forces shall be used in Siberia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FALL. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not given that matter the consideration the Senator has, but I wanted to ask him if it does not seem to him that such a provision would conflict with the President's authority as Commander in Chief of the Army?

Mr. FALL. I have just referred to that proposition; I do not know whether the Senator heard me or not. I said that under the Constitution of the United States the Congress of the United States must raise armies. The Senator of course understands that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. My proposition is that the Congress of the United States has the power and the authority to direct the raising of the armies, and not simply to allow, first, an unlimited number of men to be raised by the Commander in Chief; that that is delegating a power and, as I believe the Senator, or one of the Senators, said the other day, is "passing the buck." That is the first proposition. In the second place, I hold that in raising the Army the Congress of the United States can say not how it shall be used, but where it shall be used for the purpose of prosecuting the war against Germany in Siberia; that so many men shall be raised. Then, as to how best to handle those men for prosecuting the war against Germany in Siberia, that may rest entirely within the discretion of the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator holds exactly what I thought he held; but still the question recurs to my mind whether as a corollary of the constitutional power of Congress to raise and maintain an army we can attach conditions as to where it shall operate, which seems to me to be an invasion of the function of the Commander in Chief.

Mr. FALL. I know the Senator and myself have held different views upon this proposition from the very beginning, and I am aware of the fact that I am in the minority in holding that, in my judgment. I am one of those who does not hold to the theory announced in the Senate that the Commander in Chief of the United States in time of war is a dictator. While I do not agree that the Congress of the United States is able to map out a military plan and to direct an officer as to where he should use a certain number of brigades or corps or a certain army in carrying on a war after a declaration of war, which the Congress itself must make and not the President, the Congress of the United States in providing armies for carrying on that war can say that it is for carrying on war against Germany within Siberia.

I will say now frankly to the Senator that in my judgment the Congress of the United States should have said before a single soldier was sent across the water that the President had authority to send these troops out of the boundaries of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the power of the President to order troops out of the country has been at times questioned heretofore.

Mr. FALL. I am not questioning that now, the Senator will understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand. What seems to me to be doubtful, to put it mildly, is this: I do not see because Congress has power to raise and maintain an army, of which the President is Commander in Chief under the Constitution, that therefore we can say that the army so raised shall not be operated in any place except Siberia.

Mr. FALL. I did not undertake to advance that theory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the Senator advanced the same opinion in a different form of words when he said it should operate in Siberia.

Mr. FALL. I think to raise an army to be used in Siberia is a perfectly proper, constitutional, and legal exercise of the power of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator does, but it seems to me to say that it is to operate in Siberia is equivalent to saying that it can not operate anywhere else.

Mr. FALL. Then under the theory of the Senator and others, if the Congress of the United States adopted the resolution suggested and advanced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and then declared war against Bulgaria to-day, the President of the United States would have the absolute authority to retain all the troops within the confines of the United States if, in his judgment, as a military man and Commander in Chief, that was the best method to prosecute the war against Bulgaria, and we need not prosecute the war at all except on our own soil.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think myself that the way the war is prosecuted, so far as ordering the movements of troops and naval vessels is concerned, is entirely within the jurisdiction of the President.

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If we should declare war against Bulgaria and the President sent our Army and Navy to Patagonia and adopted a method which is ridiculously improper to carry out the declaration of war he is subject to impeachment, or to whatever remedy——
